PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 76th CONGRESS, THIRD SESSION

SENATE

TUESDAY, MARCH 5, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, who art the Lord and Father of us all, in whom we live and abide, of whose perfect and unchangeable will our imperfect, changeable souls are but as a far-off shadow: We acknowledge Thy purpose and discipline in all our life, with its mingled pain and joy, its severity and blessing; may we be weaned thereby from the ways of folly and sin and instructed in the ways of wisdom and goodness.

Help us this day to consider one another with the sympathy and understanding of those who dwell together under a divine fatherhood and are animated by a common purpose, always cherishing in our heart the answering filial temper and trust, hoping all things, believing all things, enduring all things, because we are children in our Father's house. We pray not only for ourselves but for every child of man who, in searching for the light of life, finds it in the heart of Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the world. Amen.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the first committee amendment. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, at this time, without attempting to discuss the merits of the legislation now pending before the Senate, I desire to take a few minutes to explain the bill, its purposes, and the means adopted to achieve its objectives.

Senators will recall that at the last session Congress passed a law which, among other things, prohibited political activity on the part of employees of the Federal Government, with certain exceptions. The purpose of the pending measure is to extend exactly the same provision to employees in the States whose employment is made possible by the use of Federal funds or appropriations from the Federal Treasury.

We have tried to approach the task mindful of the difference between the Federal Government and the several States, and mindful of our obligation to protect the funds which the Government itself appropriates, as well as the rights of the States and of the employees who are technically State employees from a legalistic standpoint but nevertheless are perhaps in a greater sense Federal employees, for their employment could not be were it not for the aid given from the Federal Treasury.

In approaching that task we have tried to follow as nearly as possible the exact language of the act we passed last year, which, in turn, was the exact language of the rule of the Civil Service Commission which has been in effect more than 50 years; and that language was originally chosen because it had been in effect in this country so long and was so thoroughly understood.

Obviously, a great many difficulties were presented by attempting to draft legislation affecting what we call State employees. The original bill, which was prepared by others—in the Department of Justice, in fact—did not altogether suit me because it did not take into consideration some of the differences which exist. Early—in fact, at the first meeting of the Committee on Privileges and Elections—we discussed some of those obstacles and some of the things which gave rise to a rather complicated situation. A subcommittee was appointed, composed of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], and myself. We worked on this bill, not once but more than once. I should say that the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Vermont were not able to attend our subcommittee meetings, but the others of us not only consulted among ourselves and worked in an effort to surmount some of the difficulties but we also called in for advice and counsel lawyers and the Legislative Drafting Service, and tried to work out a reasonable and a practical measure. We could have drafted a much more drastic bill than we have done and still, in my opinion, have been within constitutional limitations.

I may say to Senators that a study of the constitutional powers of the Congress of the United States over elections has convinced me that we have vastly more power than we have ever sought to exercise. In that connection I may say now that this bill and the bill enacted at the last session do not at all meet my ideas of what the Congress eventually should do, and some day must do. I want to see far more stringent and far more far-reaching legislation than is contained in these rather simple measures—the one we have before us today and the bill enacted last year—and some day some Congress is going to exercise the full authority conferred on the Congress by the Constitution of the United States. But, as I said in the beginning, I merely desire at this time to explain what the bill proposes to do.

The first section of the measure is a redraft——

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he enters upon a discussion of that part of the measure?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HATCH. I do.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator care to discuss at this time how far he thinks the power of the Federal Government goes to control State elections when no Federal officer is being elected?

Mr. HATCH. I really do not care to discuss that question at this time. I can answer the Senator's question very quickly in the way he has presented it. That is, when no Federal official is to be elected I think our powers are nil; that we have not any. My constitutional reference was to elections at which Federal officials are to be elected.

Mr. MINTON and Mr. DANAHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HATCH. I yield first to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, does not the measure which the Senator is now proposing, in section 12, extend to any election that may be held?

Mr. HATCH. Not under the constitutional grant of power to which I have referred. It approaches the matter from another angle only, namely, the control of employees who I say are essentially Federal employees.

Mr. MINTON. Then, if I correctly understand the Senator's position, it is that the Federal Government has not any power to control a wholly State election, but it may exercise the power to grant or withhold funds so as to try to control such an election. Is that the Senator's position?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is altogether misstating my position. There are several grounds upon which we may enact this type of legislation. The Senator asked me the specific question what power the Federal Government had to control directly State elections when no Federal officer was involved. I answered that question, "None"; but we do have control over the funds we appropriate from the Treasury; we do have control over our own employees; and I also think we have control over other employees whose employment we make possible by appropriations from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator has admitted that we have no control over the conduct of a State election. Does the Senator contend that the Federal Government may use some power that it does have in order to coerce a State and State employees and State electors in a field in which the Federal Government has no power at all to act?

Mr. HATCH. At this time I am not going to be diverted by the questions the Senator from Indiana is propounding. I understand his view of the word "coerce" as meaning to intimidate. He probably expects to argue eloquently that this bill is a coercion of the States. That is not my position.

Mr. MINTON. I have not gotten to that position. I should not expect the Senator to admit that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will Senators please speak so that they may be heard by other Senators in the Chamber?

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico further yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that when I have concluded explaining the bill I will be glad to answer any question asked.

Mr. McNARY. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator should address the Senate, and speak loudly enough so that we can hear. This is a most interesting colloquy, I am sure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has just admonished the Senator to that effect. The Chair thanks the Senator from Oregon for reinforcing his suggestion.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator from Oregon, and I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will take note that this is a session of the Senate, and private colloquies should be carried on in the cloakroom.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico appreciates the rulings of the Chair and the assistance of the Senator from Oregon. In the colloquy which was taking place between the Senator from Indiana and myself I had just told the Senator from Indiana that I preferred to proceed with the explanation of the bill. After I have finished doing that, if he or any other Senator desires to ask any questions, I will endeavor to answer the questions they may ask to the best of my ability, but for the present I prefer to tell what the bill provides.

The first section of the bill copies section 2 of the original act, which forbids the use of official authority to interfere with or control an election, and that language came from the civil-service rules.

The language, "use his official authority," has been criticized as being indefinite and vague, and on the ground that it is hard to determine where official authority ends and private action begins. I do not think that is so difficult of determination. The words are not new; they have been used not only in rules, but in law, many times. That particular language will give no trouble whatsoever to anyone who seeks honestly to abide by the law.

Mr. President, the use of official authority is made an offense punishable by fine and imprisonment, or both. I think it should be made an offense. I think that any official who uses the powers of office entrusted to him to control or dominate elections should be punished.

The second section of the bill is unimportant. It merely relates to a clerical error in the original act.

The third section is the section which brings forth the discussion, and to which objection is raised.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Before the Senator leaves the other sections I should like to ask for a further definition of the persons affected, and perhaps I might personify my inquiry by making it specific. Would the pending bill prevent the State highway commissioner of a State from running for Governor of his State while he was State highway commissioner?

Mr. HATCH. In my State it would, because highway commissioners in New Mexico are appointive officers and exercise no policy-making function. The answer to the Senator's question would depend upon the character of the duties of the official he mentions under the law of his own State.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In Michigan the commissioner is an elective official. Therefore, what would the Senator's answer be?

Mr. HATCH. I would say that an elective official, probably being charged also with policy-making functions in his department, would not be included in the bill and would be permitted to run for any office he might see fit to seek.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But would the proposed act circumscribe him with respect to the use of any official authority?

Mr. HATCH. It would. He could not use his official authority. He could not say to the employees in his department, "Go out and work for me. I am a candidate for Governor." That would be prohibited.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And all his subordinate staff would be completely prohibited from participating in his campaign?

Mr. HATCH. They would be.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Taking the example cited by the distinguished Senator from Michigan, how can the highway commissioner, when he becomes a candidate for some public office, dissociate himself of the official authority which he has as the result of his election? Is it not true that the fact that he holds that position and exercises a dual capacity automatically brings him under the term "official authority," as used in section 3?

Mr. HATCH. I do not think so.

Mr. LUCAS. How could he dissociate himself from using that official authority as long as he was an elected official?

Mr. HATCH. By not using his official authority, that is all.

Mr. LUCAS. If he is the duly elected highway official of the State, and is going to continue to exercise the duties of his office, and at the same time become a candidate for public office, in my humble opinion he cannot dissociate the two, and the mere fact that he becomes a candidate for public office under such circumstances will automatically compel him to use his official authority. He cannot get away from it.

Mr. HATCH. Frankly, if there was any doubt in his mind about it, and he wanted to run for Governor, he could very easily resign as highway commissioner, or whatever position be held. I think it would be a very laudable thing for him to do.

Mr. LUCAS. Is not that exactly what he would have to do if he wanted to remove himself from the ban of section 3, under a strict construction of what "official authority" is?

Mr. HATCH. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The construction which the Senator puts upon the bill in answer to the question of the Senator from Michigan is to the effect that the office indicated would be an administrative office in the opinion of the Senator from New Mexico. Is that correct? The Senator from New Mexico would construe the Commissioner of Highways of Michigan to be in the administrative department of that State, and therefore that he would be within the purview of the bill?

Mr. HATCH. It is very difficult to construe or apply a provision to any specific case when we do not know the duties or the functions of the office, or what is involved. It is largely guesswork.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me ask him a further question. Certainly under section 1 of the bill now before the Senate one who is not in an administrative branch of the Government may use his influence to affect an election. Is not that correct?

Mr. HATCH. No.

Mr. MINTON. Is it not possible for the Governor of a State, or the President of the United States, or Members of his Cabinet, or Members of Congress, either the Senate or the House, to use their official authority to influence or interfere with or affect an election?

Mr. HATCH. Possibly a Member of the House, if one could conceive of that, but no other of the officials named.

Mr. MINTON. Is not section 1 of the bill now before us limited to those in the administrative department?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. MINTON. Then, if it is limited to those in the administrative department, it does not affect those in the executive and the legislative.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is combining several questions in one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senators to the former suggestion of the Chair.

Mr. HATCH. I beg the pardon of the Chair. It is almost impossible to get away from holding a private colloquy, Senators are so close together. I was about to remark that in his question the Senator from Indiana has combined several things not included in the section, referring to the President of the United States and Senators to whom the section does not refer at all.

I think that in the interest of orderly procedure, if I may, I shall not yield further now, but continue the explanation of the bill, and get that out of the way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico refuses to yield further, and other Senators will respect his request.

Mr. HATCH. Section 3 of the bill, which I had started to discuss, is the one which affects directly the employees of the States in vast numbers, and provides, in substance, that they shall not engage in political activities. That provision, Mr. President, was the one which gave us difficulty in drafting. The provision we are now discussing is an amendment which was worked out by the subcommittee, with the aid of others. It was easy enough to write a provision against political activity. All we had to do, of course, was to copy the language of the existing law, the civil-service rule, or adopt new language making such prohibition. But the difficulty arose in trying to work out some method of enforcement. We could say to our own employees, as we did say to those over whom we exercise complete control, "If you violate this law you shall lose or forfeit your position," and we had the means of enforcing that in all the departments under the Federal Government. We do not have such means with reference to the States. The Congress of the United States could not say that if a particular man did the prohibited act he must be discharged, and then proceed to discharge him or have him discharged. There is no such power as that. There was the question of how far the Congress should go with such legislation.

Finally—and Senators may be surprised at this statement—we decided on the theory which is already embodied in existing law, which the Congress has already used, and which is being used today in different agencies, and with funds which the Congress appropriates; we adopted the theory of first forbidding political activities of State employees as we have forbidden them on the part of our own employees, and then we provided that if that provision should be violated we would withhold from the particular State whatever part of the funds being granted or loaned to the State in the particular activity as may be necessary, not to punish the State but to procure compliance with the nonpolitical provision of the law which, I take it, the Senator from Indiana is going to say is a method and means of coercing the States and forcing them to comply with standards which we set up. It needs no justification at all; it is a method which has already been adopted by the Congress, and I have heard no word from any of the distinguished and honorable gentlemen who so vigorously oppose this measure in opposition to those in other cases. It is a practice which has been invoked by departments to some extent without any congressional authority.

Last session we wrote into the Social Security Act an amendment, of which I approved heartily, which I favored, and which is now the law. But in that provision did we prohibit only the political activities of employees who are paid in part by Federal funds? No. We required the States to set up a merit system, and they have done it. Practically every State in the Union has already done it for those employees, State employees, if you please, who are so jealously safeguarded and protected today, and the States are required to comply with the standards set up here in Washington by the Social Security Board.

I wish to say that it was a fine piece of legislation; it was a splendid thing we did. And the regulations set up by the Board, and with which the States are complying are admirable. The Board has not gone to any extremes whatever. With respect to political activity, for instance, it adopted practically the same rule we adopted in the law—the rule which has governed the Civil Service Commission for all these years. And it is working very satisfactorily. I hear no great complaint about it.

In my own State the national committee woman for a long time, my personal friend of many years, one of the leaders in the Democratic Party, with whom I have been associated in many campaigns, was the head of the State social-security board. Did she hesitate? Not at all. She resigned her party office, and is performing her duties efficiently and well, and the law in question is working no hardship and no injustice on anyone.

I wish to make clear the point about the Social Security Board, because I myself have said that I want to bring social-security employees under the terms of this measure. I want to write specifically into the law what the Board have already done by the merit system, which they have been required to set up; but I also want to make it clear that those in the Social Security Administration are already under this provision, some 60,000 or 80,000 employees in the States are already complying with it.

So far as the Agricultural Department is concerned, I was told last Sunday that the county committeemen were under the ban of the act we passed last year, and that the Solicitor had so ruled. I wondered about that, because those committeemen are really employees of the farmers. They are paid out of the farmers' funds and are not paid by the Federal Government. I made a little investigation and was told that the newspaper which originally made the statement was incorrect. The Department of Agriculture has established its own regulations prohibiting the officials referred to from participating in political activities.

I mention these things, Senators, to show that I believe some persons are unduly alarmed by this bill; that the precedents already have been established and that the practice is growing. There is no use denying the fact that removing employees and officials from political activity is a growing practice which some day will have universal application. The question is, Shall we do it now or some other time?

In connection with this measure I have said that control is exercised by withholding funds. In that way we are merely exercising control over Federal funds. We are merely saying that Government funds shall not be used for this purpose. A State can permit its employees to engage in politics and to be as active as they please, but Federal funds from the Federal Treasury will not be used for this purpose. They will be withheld if those who receive them engage in political activity.

Is that coercion or intimidation? I do not think so. I think it is reasonable and just legislation.

After having decided upon that method of enforcement, there was still another problem before us, a problem which had developed under the last law on this subject. Under that law each department, except as to the criminal provisions, enforces the regulations. We are now dealing with a matter which might embrace many different departments. Each department would be charged with enforcing the provisions. It would also be charged with adopting its own regulations. We see a great chance there for confusion and disorder. One department might say one thing, another department something else. Employees in one department might commit acts for which employees in another department would either be discharged, or by reason of which the State would lose funds. That did not sound well to us. So finally we hit upon the plan of placing the enforcement of this measure under the United States Civil Service Commission. This measure and the act we passed at the last session consolidate the duty and the responsibility of enforcement in the one department of the Government which has been dealing with this subject for many years.

I am particularly pleased with that provision. One of the objections I had to the original act was that there was no place to go to make complaints, there was no one to enforce the regulations, no one legally to promulgate or define regulations. It seemed to me necessary, especially in view of the proposed extension of the legislation to apply to employees of the States, that there be some particular head charged with full duty and responsibility for its enforcement.

The Civil Service Commission has been enforcing similar provisions through for years and knows the meaning of the language and how the law should be enforced. I do not think anyone can say that the Civil Service Commission has gone very far afield in its enforcement of the act. If it has erred, probably it has been on the side of leniency so far as my knowledge is concerned. With that agency in charge there will be a reasonable, fair, and, I am sure, a just enforcement of the measure. That is all any of us should ask or require.

Of course, I have not carefully explained all the details as to how the Commission is to enforce the act. I am merely trying to give the high lights of what the bill provides. The bill specifically says that no funds shall be withheld from a State, for instance, without notice and opportunity for hearing being given to that State—something which is not provided for in some of the other resolutions and laws I have mentioned. I think that is a very valuable addition to the bill. It was made upon the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and I was very glad to accept it. I think its inclusion has improved the bill immensely.

The next section of the bill relates only to the District of Columbia. It corrects an omission in the original act. The District of Columbia was not named in it. It applied only to employees of the Federal Government. There is quite a difference of opinion about the employees in the District. Some contend that they are employees of the Federal Government and as such are covered by the act we passed last year. Others say they are not employees of the Federal Government, but are employees of the District of Columbia and do not come under that act. To make the matter clear we added a section bringing them within the terms of the act which was passed last year. They are our own employees, and there is no question about our right to legislate as to them.

Section 15, the last section of the bill, gives to the Civil Service Commission the power I have heretofore mentioned to define the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns" used in the bill. It also gives the power to issue rules and regulations for the enforcement of the act and to amend them from time to time as may be necessary. I know there is criticism of that provision. I know that my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] thinks the bill ought to define the term "political activity." I am not anticipating the Senator's argument, but I do wish to mention that question.

I do not think the bill ought to define the term "political activity." If anyone has ever attempted to sit down and write a definition of that term, he will readily see the difficulties which would be encountered. In the first place, such a provision would make a hard and fast definition which could not be altered or changed except by congressional enactment. These terms have been in the civil-service law for years. So far as I know, the Civil Service Commission itself has never written out any hard and fast definition, largely on account of the thing I have mentioned. However, by opinions and decisions in specific cases, from time to time it has built up practically a body of common law for the civil service, to which reference is made in construing the term "political activity."

With that experience, and with the power in the Commission to amend as experience grows and time passes, the Commission will be enabled to write a very fair definition of this term. I think one should be written, not only for the States but also in connection with the enforcement of the law of last year, so that all employees—Federal, State, and District of Columbia—will have an exact definition and have the knowledge and information before them. I think such a definition can be written without much trouble.

Already more than half a million Federal employees are under the prohibitions of the law passed last year. A great many more were already under such prohibitions than were brought under them. Such prohibitions already existed in many of the States. By virtue of the law passed last year, and under departmental regulations, a great many so-called State employees are under the same prohibitions.

Mr. President, I think the law should be extended to every employee whose employment is made possible by appropriations from the Federal Treasury. It should be extended not only to the States but also—as the bill provides—to every employee in every agency of the State government, which would include municipalities and cities. Every such employee, with the exception of certain heads of departments, should be brought under the provisions of the act. We have attempted to grant exemptions to policy-making officials, in accordance with the provisions of the original act.

Mr. President, I have now finished my explanation of the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the last section of the pending measure contemplate the application of Federal civil-service control to the departments of each sovereign State?

Mr. HATCH. Not at all. It relates only to political activity. That is the difference between the bill and the law passed last year, under which the Social Security Board reaches down into the various State departments with a complete merit system.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is seated in front of me, doing me the honor of listening to me. I understand that the bill which he proposes to offer as a substitute for the pending bill reaches down into the States to a greater degree than the pending measure. That is the reason why I prefer the bill we have worked out to his bill. His bill goes so far that I doubt the practicability of it, and I doubt whether the Congress should undertake such legislation at this time.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me say to the Senator from New Mexico that my understanding of the bill now pending is that it does not give the Federal Civil Service Commission authority over State employees, even though the State employees may be paid in part from funds of the Federal Government.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is the Senator quite content, and is he assured that the power and authority of the Federal Civil Service Commission cannot, through the avenue he has laid open, completely enter into control of State activities? If I correctly understand, the Senator has laid open an avenue by which the Federal Civil Service Commission partially enters into the States, by means of a definition of the term "political activity." Is that the limitation of the authority granted to the Federal Civil Service Commission?

Mr. HATCH. No; it is not. It not only defines "political activity," but it is the enforcing agency. For example, the Bureau of Public Roads might determine that the highway department in a certain State is being politically active, contrary to the law. It would make a complaint to the Civil Service Commission that such political activity was going on. Then the Civil Service Commission would have to notify the State and let the State be heard on the question before any funds could be withheld. Then if the Civil Service Commission found the facts to be as alleged, and that the law was being violated, it would certify to the appropriate agency the amount of funds to be withheld, either permanently or conditionally.

Mr. McCARRAN. The highway commission in my own State consists of elective officers. The Governor, the comptroller, and the secretary of State constitute the highway commission. I take it the Senator's understanding of his own bill is that it would not give to the civil-service authority of the Federal Government any control over the State highway commission.

Mr. HATCH. It would not.

Mr. McCARRAN. Highway engineers are appointed by the State highway commission. Is there anything in the Senator's bill which would be susceptible of being construed to prevent the highway commission, consisting of the Governor, the comptroller, and the secretary of state, from dismissing at will a highway engineer, or any other employee of the highway department?

Mr. HATCH. Not a thing. Those are the facts which caused me to say that when we approached the subject there were many such complications, and we tried to avoid extremes and to work out just as reasonable and practicable a measure as we could, considering the vast number of complicated questions which may arise. We have avoided the thing which the Senator mentions.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am supporting the Senator's bill because I think I know what the Senator's bill means. If I thought for a moment that the bill, or any part of it, could be so construed as to take out of the hands of the duly elected State authorities the power to regulate and control to the last degree all activities of State employees, then I could not in conscience support the bill.

Mr. NEELY. It takes out of the hands of State officials control over political activity.

Mr. HATCH. The present law prohibits political activity. I will say to the Senator from Nevada that the bill does not do what he mentions.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The suggestion made by the Senator from Nevada with respect to the highway commission composed of public officials duly elected for 4 years brings to my mind this question: As I understand, the bill as now written provides a penalty if a State highway commissioner is found guilty of violating the law. He is an elected official. As I understand, the Civil Service Commission is to have the power, and the sole power, to say to the Governor, or to some one in the State, that an individual who violates the law must be removed from public office; and if he is not removed from public office for violation of the law, then it is the duty of the Bureau of Public Roads, on certification from the Civil Service Commission, to withhold the funds.

I am wondering how the bill would meet the situation if an elected official, or an official who is confirmed by the senate of the State, is charged with a violation of the law. As I understand, he may be discharged only for malfeasance in office.

Mr. HATCH. Of course the Senator's question is answered by the bill itself.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Would the Civil Service Commission have power to withhold the funds regardless of the provision which says that the guilty person must be discharged from employment?

Mr. HATCH. Elective offices are expressly exempted.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I wish to ask a question as to subsection (b), on page 6 of the bill, which reads in part as follows:

If in any case the Commission finds that such officer or employee has not been removed from his office or employment within a reasonable time after such notification, or that he has been so removed and has subsequently (within a period of 18 months) been appointed to any office or employment in any State or local agency in such State, the Commission shall determine and certify to the appropriate Federal agency an additional amount to be similarly withheld from a loan or grant to a State or local agency within such State.

Assuming that an employee of a vocational education organization to which a grant is made who comes within the provisions of the bill should be reported, and should be determined by the Commission to have violated the provisions of the proposed statute as to participation in a political campaign, and upon the notification by the Commission to the State organization that man must be dismissed, but within a period of 18 months the city of Baltimore, say, in the State of Maryland, should employ that man upon the streets by the action of a local agency, and the Commission should certify to the vocational education agency an amount to be withheld from a loan or grant, the question that occurs to me is that the determination as to the employment of an individual by a municipality would be beyond the power of the State organization. It could not affect it; it would be in no way responsible for the employment of a man, but, because a county organization or a city organization did employ him, am I correct in believing that the Civil Service Commission would then take funds from the vocational education agency?

Mr. HATCH. It could do it. May I explain that to the Senator?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; that is what I desire.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has put his finger on another one of those places which gave us a great deal of difficulty in the committee. Practically this is what we were striking at in connection with withholding funds: I will not call any State to mind; we all are more or less familiar with conditions which have happened in all our States at some time or other; but, for instance, there is a political campaign going on and the Governor, we will say, is running for reelection. He has charge of the highway department, and he puts on 500 employees 30 days before the election.

Recently, in the case of a congressional election there was a report of something like that going on in the past 10 days, and one of the local papers carried a story about it. Those 500 employees are not put on to do highway work; they are put on for political purposes. They draw their pay; they know what it is for, and they render the service for which they are employed. There were not that many involved, because we do not have much money, but such a thing happened in my State. So I am not saying anything about any other State that I do not say about my own.

In such a case there is a misuse of Federal funds and a violation of the law. Very well. The Bureau of Public Roads learns about it, and probably the election is over before they ever learn about it; but, if it is not, they file a complaint with the Civil Service Commission and the Civil Service Commission gives notice. The election being over before any hearing is held, the Governor comes right in and says, "Yes, sir, you are exactly right; those men were engaged in political activity, and I will discharge every last one of them." He never intended to keep them, anyway, after the election. That is not an extreme case; it has happened many times in this country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am interested in the Senator's answer to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HATCH. I will pursue the matter a little further. There may be some men in the crowd who are dismissed from a particular job; but they are shifted over into some other department and thus the law is absolutely evaded. I am not sure that the interpretation is correct, but it would be very easy for the Governor to call up the mayor of some city, and say, "I cannot hire this man; but you put him to work for me." The mayor says, "All right; I have no place for him but I will take John Jones from your employees and put him to work and let you have Bill Smith and you can put him to work." That may sound fantastic and unreasonable, but things like that do happen. Whether we have met such situations wisely or in the best way possible, I do not know.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator does not say, on the other hand, that an official of the city of Baltimore who was opposed to a particular Federal agency could give employment to the discharged employee, and when he gave employment to him he would force the Civil Service Commission to take funds from that agency. If that is true, while it is a fantastic suggestion, at least it should be covered.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, an impartial board will administer the law. We had drawn originally an arbitrary rule under which funds had to be withheld, but we thought about the things the Senator has mentioned——

Mr. BYRNES. The committee did not think of limiting it so as to affect the case of some other organization reemploying the offending employee?

Mr. HATCH. We discussed that, yes; and we discussed it thinking of other exchanges which could be made.

The evil I have portrayed is not far-fetched. If the Senator has a better way of getting at it, I will be very glad to know of it, and I say that about the whole bill. There is no pride of authorship in this matter. The committee took suggestions——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HATCH. I will yield in a moment.

The subcommittee considered all suggestions which were offered, as did the full committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from New Mexico announced—and he is sorry the Chair did not hear him—that he would yield in a moment. I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Pursuing a little further the inquiry of the Senator from South Carolina, it is, of course, possible to understand that a Governor and a mayor might enter into collusion to bring about the reemployment of somebody in the city of Baltimore or any other city.

Mr. HATCH. I would not term it "collusion." It has been done. In fact, it is a rather common practice for officials to change back and forth; that has been done.

Mr. BARKLEY. It might be possible for a Governor and a mayor to enter into an agreement by which the mayor would reemploy somebody whom the Governor could not reemploy, but if the mayor desired to employ a man and the Governor did not want him reemployed because it might result in the loss of funds to the State, the Governor could not prevent that. For instance, if some employee, no matter how far down the line, has been found guilty of violating this law, it is provided that even before he is discharged the State shall have funds withheld from it. Then, if he is not discharged, more funds are withheld. I am wondering whether it would not be better to have the Civil Service Commission, when a violation is discovered and established, say to the authority of the State, "Unless you discharge the offending employee we will withhold funds," instead of saying, "We will withhold them anyway, whether you discharge him or not, and then later when you are required to discharge him if you do not do so we will hold back some more." Has the Senator gone into that feature?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; that is the reason I suggested in my answer to the Senator from South Carolina that if 500 men are employed on highways within 30 days of the election, and after the election is over the Commission may say, "If you do not discharge them we are going to take money from you," the Governor may have discharged them already, for he only employed them for a 30-day period.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, in a case like that it would probably take the Civil Service Commission 30 days to find out whether there had been a violation, and the employees would be off the pay roll before any finding could be made, but the point I am making, and that is the matter which troubles me——

Mr. HATCH. It troubled us even more.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with the question raised by the Senator from South Carolina is that if a mayor and Governor were not in agreement and the mayor desired to reappoint somebody in the city, the result of which would be to withhold funds from the State, the Governor could not prevent that, and no other State officer could prevent it. While they might agree on the appointment in certain cases, if they were not in agreement the Governor could not prevent the mayor from appointing anybody whose appointment would result in the withdrawal of funds from the State, and the State could not help itself.

Another point raised is whether, in advance of any effort to correct the situation which results in the withholding of funds, the funds are to be withheld as a penalty for the original violation instead of discharging a guilty employee as a penalty to him. It may be that many times employees down the line would be guilty of political activity without their supporters knowing anything about it, without the Governor knowing anything about it, without the secretary of state or the highway commissioner knowing anything about it. The question is whether, when political activities have been discovered on the part of some little fellow down the line who is politically appointed, the whole State should be required to suffer by the withholding of funds in advance of any penalty assessed against the guilty employee. It seems to me that is a matter worthy of very serious consideration.

Mr. HATCH. There is no question about that, and we discussed that fully in the committee.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like, with the Senator's forbearance, to ask a few questions, if I may. Inviting the Senator's attention to page 4, line 16, we find this expression:

> No officer or employee of any State or local agency who exercises any function in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States—

And in inviting the Senator's attention further to the particular language, "who exercises any function," would the Senator say that that would include an attorney who looks up titles for a highway commissioner in a land-condemnation case?

Mr. HATCH. I would not say so at all. Such a one would not be an "officer or employee."

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator would not consider that to be such a degree of employment as would bring such a person within that language?

Mr. HATCH. No.

Mr. DANAHER. Would the Senator state for the RECORD the type of employee or officer to whom he does allude as a matter of intention?

Mr. HATCH. The regular employees performing the usual customary duties of the particular office or employment.

Mr. DANAHER. Would a professor in a land-grant university or college, for instance, be included?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; he would be; and I think he should be. Most of the land-grant colleges have their own rules which prevent their professors from engaging in political activities.

Mr. DANAHER. And, of course, it would include the unemployment-compensation employees of a State.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. More than anybody else, it ought to.

Mr. HATCH. It should apply to them.

Mr. DANAHER. And it would include, therefore, all the classes of officers who hitherto, by this very Congress, have been included within the income-tax legislation. As the Senator will remember, we have created specific exemptions of a class of employees who receive their pay in whole or in part from Federal funds, and I assume that the legal definition of our own exception would apply to all within that class and make this language thus applicable to that class.

Mr. HATCH. I think so, although, frankly, I am not quite clear in my mind what employees the Senator refers to.

Mr. DANAHER. It is a matter of record, and we can easily bring them in. Will the Senator further yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico further yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Directing the Senator's attention to lines 21 and 22 on page 4, the bill says:

> No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

On page 5, in subsection (b), we find that the Civil Service Commission—> shall determine whether any violation of such subsection has occurred.

Does the violation referred to in subsection (b) on page 5 include lines 21 and 22 on page 4?

Mr. HATCH. They are the ones that it is intended to include above everything else. If they are not included, they certainly ought to be included. I think they are.

Mr. DANAHER. Then, Mr. President, I ask the Senator if it is not true that there is no provision in subsection (b) for a hearing to be accorded to an individual accused of such violation?

Mr. HATCH. No authority is exercised over the individual. The State is given a hearing. It may make a defense of the agencies of the State.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator show where in subsection (b) it is provided that a State may be given a hearing as to any charge of political participation by one of its officers?

Mr. HATCH. It provides that before any funds shall be withheld there shall be notice of opportunity to be heard.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, let me call to the Senator's attention the fact that by his own very language, in lines 19 and 20, page 5, the bill says:

> If the Commission determines that any such violation has occurred—

Then there is a hearing as to how much the penalty shall be; but there is not any hearing first as to whether or not a violation has occurred.

Mr. HATCH. Let me explain that. I see the point the Senator makes. I will say to him that that is just a safeguard clause. Of course, under this bill, anyone may make a complaint to the United States Civil Service Commission. The complaints may come from any source in the world. As the original bill was drawn, the Commission might have been justified in withholding funds right there, upon that complaint. We said, "No; the first thing the Commission must do is to investigate and see whether or not there has been any violation of the law."

The Senator was formerly a prosecuting attorney. He always conducted investigations before he filed a complaint. He determined that the law had been violated before any hearing, even a preliminary hearing, was held. So the Commission must investigate, and must determine that there has been a violation of law. Having determined that fact, then notice and hearing are given.

We are just trying to take most orderly, commonplace steps. There is no intention on the part of the committee to shut out anybody. It was our desire to give everybody a full opportunity to be heard. We want to be just as fair and reasonable with this measure as we can.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico further yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me first call to the Senator's attention the fact that the inquiry of a prosecutor is to determine whether or not there is reasonable cause to believe that some statute or some law has been violated. If he so determines, and lodges his information, then a court determines whether or not in fact there has been a violation; but the individual who is charged has an opportunity to be heard.

Under the Senator's statute—if it should become such—one accused of political participation, upon the determination of a Civil Service Commission, without any provision whatever for a hearing, is not only barred from employment by the State, but he is barred from employment by any other political subdivision of the State; and, in addition, the State itself is subject to a possible penalty to be determined by the Commission after it decides the matter ex parte, if you choose, so far as the bill proceeds; and after the Commission determines that a violation has occurred it may withhold by way of penalty as much or as little of the funds as it decides. Is not that so?

Mr. HATCH. No.

Mr. DANAHER. In what particular is my conclusion open to criticism?

Mr. HATCH. One particular is the Senator's statement with reference to an ex parte proceeding. That is entirely wrong.

Mr. DANAHER. It is not an ex parte proceeding?

Mr. HATCH. No. There must be opportunity for notice and hearing; and what does hearing include?

Mr. DANAHER. Where does the Senator find that provision? That is the very thing in which I am most interested.

Let me say to the Senator that I have prepared an amendment, and for purposes of discussion I should like permission to offer it now and let it lie on the table.

Mr. HATCH. What is the Senator's amendment? Will he read it?

Mr. DANAHER. Yes; I will.

If the Senator will please look at page 5, line 18 of the bill, he will find that it now says this. The sentence commences in line 15:

> Upon the receipt of any such report, or upon the receipt of any other information which seems to the Commission to warrant an investigation, the Commission shall—

> forthwith by registered mail give notice to any such officer or employee and to the State or local agency employing such officer or employee of the pendency of the charge, in which notice shall be set forth, a summary of the alleged violation and of the time and place for a hearing upon said charge, at which hearing (which shall be not earlier than 10 days thereafter) either the officer or employee or the State or local agency, or both, may appear with counsel and be heard, whereupon said Commission—

And now we revert to the bill—

> shall determine whether any violation of such subsection has occurred.

In that way we not only insure notice to the individual of the nature of his alleged offense but the State itself has a chance to appear, and a full hearing then may be had by the Civil Service Commission.

Does not the Senator feel that, appropriately to remove any doubt, such an amendment should be accepted?

Mr. HATCH. I do not quite agree with all the amendment as the Senator has read it. I am not in disagreement as to the principle of having a hearing before the funds are withheld; and the bill does provide for that. If it is not adequately provided for, I shall be perfectly willing to have it done. I think probably the amendment offered by the Senator contains matter which perhaps should not be in it; but, as I say, I shall immediately look at the amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, let me point out, then, in conclusion, that it is perfectly clear that the Senator from New Mexico wants to have a hearing after it has been determined that a violation has occurred. The hearing, however, is only on the penalty. It does not for one moment, in that language, provide for any hearing whatever for the person accused of violating the statute. Consequently, it would mean that an individual may lose his job and lose for 18 months his opportunity for a livelihood in any division of the State. Therefore I believe we ought to amend the bill in that respect, and I ask the Senator from New Mexico to consider acceptance of the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have lie on the table until an opportunity appropriately to offer it shall occur.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be received and lie on the table.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HATCH. One minute. I cannot yield just now, because the Senator from Connecticut has seen fit to interpret and construe my motives and intentions, and has said that the Senator from New Mexico does not intend to have a hearing on whether or not there has been a violation of the law. In that respect the Senator from Connecticut is just as wrong as it is possible for human beings to be wrong.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I had yielded to the Senator from Michigan. I shall be glad later to yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BROWN. I am perfectly willing to defer my inquiry until the Senators have settled their dispute.

Mr. DANAHER. There is not any dispute, I am sure. I simply wanted to say to the Senator from New Mexico that I have been at least as wrong as he says a human being can be, but I do not think I am in this case; but, in any event, whether I am or not, if the Senator will now indicate where in the bill there is provision for notice to an accused, and for a summary of the charge against him, and for a hearing on that charge, I should like to have him do it.

Mr. HATCH. The point about which I disagreed with the Senator was what he was interpreting my intentions to be.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to call attention to two fundamental matters in the bill and ask the author of the bill with regard to them.

The first section of the bill, which I think is called section 2, relates to the prohibition of the use of official authority by the higher-up officers of a State government and employees of the State who are paid in part from Federal funds, or who direct activities in connection with which the Federal Government makes contributions. Is that statement substantially correct?

Mr. HATCH. It is correct.

Mr. BROWN. What penalty is provided in the bill for any violation of section 2 of the act?

Mr. HATCH. That is in the original act.

Mr. BROWN. That is in the original act, and that provides for a fine of a thousand dollars or imprisonment for 1 year, or both.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. BROWN. In what is known as section 12, on page 4 of the bill, we find a prohibition which applies to minor officials, those who are not policy making, those who are not elected, and that is where we have a prohibition against any participation in a political campaign. What penalty, if any, is provided against one who violates the provisions of section 12?

Mr. HATCH. That is the difficulty with which we were confronted, about the power of the Federal Government. We do not have any power to remove one from office, as we did under our original act, so we adopted the approach of withholding funds, and then, if the State insisted on retaining employees who violated the act, and insisted on their going ahead with political activities, we could add a still further withdrawal or withholding of funds from the States.

Mr. BROWN. Of course, there is, and in the Senator's judgment there could be no criminal penalty against a person who violates section 12.

Mr. HATCH. That is quite correct, and there should not be. The type of thing prohibited by section 12 I certainly think should not be held to be a criminal offense.

Mr. BROWN. It leaves us in such a situation that it would be pretty difficult for a citizen to complain about political activity on the part of the proscribed official when the ultimate result would be the withholding of Federal funds from the State, which would be a punishment of the whole State, and no person would be very likely to make that kind of a complaint, would he?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; I think so. It has happened, and is happening. I know in more than one State of complaints being lodged with departments here which, if sustained, would result and have resulted in the withholding of funds from the States.

Mr. BROWN. But that is the only method of enforcement of section 12?

Mr. HATCH. That is true.

Mr. BROWN. I think we have to keep in mind, in the questions I want to ask the Senator, the difference between the two sections, and I wish to refer particularly to some of the answers elicited from the Senator by my colleague a few moments ago.

In the first section of the bill, which is section 2 of the Hatch Act, which would prevent the use of official authority—and I think such authority should not be used in politics—is there anything which would prevent the Governor of a State from using his official authority to aid in bringing about the election of the Lieutenant Governor in an election in which there were upon the ticket candidates for the office of Governor?

Mr. HATCH. The Governor is not exempt from the provisions of section 2.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will refer to lines 15 to 22, on page 2 of the bill, he will find that the Governor, to use that example, is prohibited from using his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting, the election or the nomination of any candidate for the office of President or Vice President; but he is not prohibited from using his influence with respect to any State officer who happens to be running upon the same ticket, is he?

Mr. HATCH. If a Federal official is to be chosen at that election; yes.

Mr. BROWN. The bill does not say so, and I ask him to read it and see if it does.

Mr. HATCH. The Supreme Court has definitely passed on the separability of provisions.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate? I should like to hear the debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). The Senate will be in order.

Mr. HATCH. The prohibition is this—"to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting, the election." If a Member of Congress is being voted upon, that is the election.

Mr. BROWN. There is no comma there; there is no semicolon; there is no indication that there is a stop when the word "election" is reached in line 17. It says "the election or nomination of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President." Every officer who is named there is a Federal officer and not a State officer.

Mr. HATCH. If he is interfering with that election——

Mr. BROWN. No; the election of a candidate for these offices.

Mr. HATCH. If he is interfering with a particular election, whether his action is only in behalf of a Lieutenant Governor or not, he is interfering with the election of the President or Vice President.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator wants to say that, he can say it much more clearly than he says it in the bill as it now reads. He can say "affecting an election at which these officers are to be elected"; but he does not say that, as I think every lawyer in the Senate will agree.

Mr. HATCH. I think the Senator has made a good suggestion. Does he object to my accepting it?

Mr. BROWN. No; I do not object to that at all, but I say that the language certainly does not bear out the Senator's intent.

Mr. HATCH. It seemed to me to be perfectly clear that it did. I do not say this as in any degree flattering the Senator from Michigan; but when any Senator as skilled in the law as is the Senator from Michigan raises a question of that kind, if there is a question in his mind, I would much rather meet it right by an amendment. He might be right and I might be wrong. I accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan, and ask permission to modify the section to which he refers, if he will state the language.

Mr. BROWN. I would rather have a little time to frame the language.

Mr. HATCH. We will send up the language later.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to pursue the inquiry my colleague made. He referred to section 12 (a), which provides that "No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns"; that is, an officer or employee who is employed in connection with any function which the Federal Government finances. The Senator has that in mind. My colleague referred specifically to the State highway commissioner of Michigan, and he asked the Senator from New Mexico this question:

> But would the proposed act circumscribe him—
> Meaning the State highway commissioner of Michigan—
> with respect to the use of any official authority?
> Mr. HATCH. It would. He could not use his official authority. He could not say to the employees in his department, "Go out and work for me; I am a candidate for Governor." That would be prohibited.

I think that is proper, using the theory the Senator has adopted in section 12. I think it is proper to do so. But I do not think the Senator's answer is accurate with respect to the highway department of the State of Michigan, because there are many employees in the highway department of that State, as there are many employees in the office of the Republican secretary of state, and in the office of the Republican State treasurer, who have no connection with Federal activities, whose political actions could not in any way be proscribed by the proposed act.

I refer specifically to this question by my colleague:

> Mr. VANDENBERG. And all his subordinate staff would be completely prohibited from participating in his campaign?
> Mr. HATCH. They would be.

The Senator did not mean that there is a general prohibition against all the employees of the State highway department. He meant those employees who are connected with an activity of the State highway department which is financed in part by the Federal Government.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, the whole theory of the bill is limited to agencies which receive financial contributions, loans, or grants from the Federal Government. I stated at the time that I disliked to answer questions as to individual officers of the States about the function of whose offices I did not know.

Mr. BROWN. I not only disliked it, but I disliked the false impression created by the colloquy between my colleague and the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. There is another thing to which I would refer in connection with that. I think, if I am not mistaken, that the particular man to whom the Senator refers is an elective official as well.

Mr. BROWN. Yes; he is.

Mr. HATCH. There is another provision relating to such an official.

Mr. BROWN. The prohibition to which my colleague must refer necessarily is not one directed against the State highway commissioner; it is directed against any of his employees who take an active part in political management or in political campaigns. The State highway commissioner is expressly exempted from the provisions of section 12. But I wish to point out that, just as the Republican secretary of state of Michigan, and as the Republican State treasurer, and as the Republican attorney general, and as the Republican Governor, and as the Republican Lieutenant Governor may all use their employees without violation of the proposed act, likewise the employees of the State highway department, which happens in Michigan to be Democratic, are not prohibited from participation in politics similar to that engaged in by these State officers, when they are not engaged in an activity which is financed by the Federal Government. I may say that the maintenance organization of the State Highway Department of Michigan is not in any way supported by the Federal Government. The Federal Government does aid in the construction of roads but not in the maintenance of those roads.

In this matter I am much in sympathy with the Senator from New Mexico, but while he is doing this job I wish he could in some way apply the provisions of the proposed act to these Republican officials in the State of Michigan who are absolutely untouched by the provisions of the Hatch Act.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Michigan that nothing would give me more pleasure. I should like very much to do that. I stated when I was explaining the bill that the very complications and things which the Senator from Michigan and other Senators have mentioned have long since convinced me that we need to go much further, and actually use other powers, stronger powers, vested in the Congress by the Constitution. I have already drawn a bill which will do a very reasonable job with respect to the whole matter, and some day—not in an election year—I hope we may pass a complete measure which will accomplish many of the things which are necessary.

Mr. BROWN. I have one other question of a minor nature to ask. I refer again to lines 21 and 22 on page 4, which is the prohibition against officers or employees taking "any active part in political management or in political campaigns." It occurs to me that the Senator should except from that particular prohibition, which is the heart of the bill, in my judgment, participation in political campaigns of a nature totally disconnected from partisan politics.

For instance, I myself happen to have been long interested in the school affairs of my own community. For 25 years I have been a member of the board of education. It is an office which I prize very highly. In my judgment, under this prohibition any employee of the State of Michigan whose salary was in any way contributed to by the Federal Government, or any employee of the Federal Government itself, would be prohibited from participating in an election at which the sole question was whether or not the city of Detroit should bond itself for an additional $500,000 for the purpose of erecting a public school. Does not the Senator think that such an election should be excepted from the stringent provisions of both section 2 and section 12?

Mr. HATCH. I would have no objection to that.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator should go a little further. I think he should say that it would be desirable to have such an exception.

Mr. HATCH. I do not find quickly what the rulings of the Civil Service Commission have been on that question. It seems to me they have held that a nonpartisan election, such as for a school trustee or on a bond issue, is not within the language; but I am in hearty agreement and sympathy with what the Senator has said, and I shall be very glad to confer with him further; and if he has a suitable amendment to accomplish the result, if it has not already been accomplished, it is perfectly agreeable to me to have such an amendment adopted.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to ask the Senator a few questions in connection with the bill, and I do so solely for information, or in an attempt to clear up some things which seem to me to be a little doubtful; and the answers to the questions in the event the bill becomes law will eliminate some confusion which exists in the mind of the public at the present time, and will exist in the mind of the public in the future, if the bill is amended in line with the suggestions which have been made.

First, on page 2, I invite the attention of the Senator to subdivision 2, which contains the language "any person employed in any administrative position by any State." Is there any question in the Senator's mind that that language does not include the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor, and the mayors of cities?

Mr. HATCH. I think it should include them.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator thinks it should?

Mr. HATCH. Yes. That is, as to this provision of this section.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; I understand. I am talking now about section 2. There is no question, then, in the Senator's mind that the officials I have just named are included as among those occupying administrative positions?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; that is correct. That was the intention.

Mr. LUCAS. Very well. Is there any interpretation by the subcommittee or by courts as to what is "official authority"?

Mr. HATCH. I am quite sure the term has been defined by the courts. I do not have the decision before me. But it is authority which the person is possessed of by virtue of his office. That does not mean a great deal. That is just about the same as saying "official authority." But it is power which he would not have were it not for his office.

Mr. LUCAS. I have in mind the general notion of what is "official authority." But what my opinion is and what the Senator's opinion is might not coincide with what the courts have said with respect to that one question, and, in view of the penalty that is provided in case of an administrative officer exercising or using his official authority to control or to interfere with an election, it seems to me that if the Senator furnished a brief upon that one point it might help in administering the act in a better way.

Mr. HATCH. I shall be very glad to submit it for the RECORD.

Mr. LUCAS. I have in mind one other point which has to do with a typical situation which can be cited with respect to practically every city throughout the country. I am thinking now of a mayor in Illinois who has been instrumental in the development of a housing program for his city. He seeks a grant of $2,000,000 from the Government. Assume that in the midst of the construction of the project an election is held for United States Senator, and that during the preliminary negotiations the sitting Senator seeking reelection has cooperated with the mayor to the fullest extent in obtaining the grant. During the campaign the mayor feels that he should like to aid the Senator for reelection. He therefore calls in 10 of his employees, some of whom have been working on the housing project. He presents to them the Senator's petitions and says, "Boys, Senator Jones has been our friend on this housing project; he is a high-class public official, and has rendered excellent service for his people throughout the State. As mayor and as a citizen, believing in good government, I want you to circulate these petitions of the Senator. Get the required number of signatures and return the petitions to me." Query: Has the mayor used his official authority as the phrase is used in section 2 of this bill in affecting the nomination of Senator Jones?

Mr. HATCH. I think the Senator's question—my mind was distracted for a moment toward the end of it—is whether the city should suffer the penalty by reason of the action of the mayor?

Mr. LUCAS. No. In the question I asked the Senator, I used as illustration the case of a mayor who called in certain employees of the city who were under his control, and requested them to circulate a petition for the Senator who was seeking reelection, and who had cooperated with them on a housing project.

The mayor said, "Boys, Senator Jones is a good fellow. He is a public-spirited citizen. He is a good man for the United States Senate. As mayor of the city, and as a citizen, believing in good government, I am for his reelection. I ask you boys to take the petitions out and circulate them, bring in the required number of signatures, and then we will send them on." Is the mayor using his official authority to aid in the election of the candidate for Senator?

Mr. HATCH. Oh, yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Very well. In other words, if the mayor of the town merely requests the employees to circulate a petition, that act subjects the mayor to the penalty of a fine of $1,000 and imprisonment of 1 year for exercising such official authority. There is no question about that?

Mr. HATCH. There is not in my mind, and we have insisted it should be so.

Mr. LUCAS. If the same mayor called a meeting of all his employees in the city hall and said, in substance: "Senator Jones has been my friend as mayor. He has been a real friend of the city. He has been your friend. He is a credit to the party. Believing as I do that the best interests of good government would be served by the reelection of Senator Jones, I hope you will all support him."

He would be using his official authority in that kind of a case, and would be subject to the pains and penalties of the law as he would be in the other case.

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Very well. I am thinking of another mayor of a city in the United States who has P. W. A. grants for sidewalks, sewers, and subways, and who has constructed them out of an allotment of Federal money, or at least partially so, and a number of the projects are uncompleted. There is a great deal of money yet to come to the city. The mayor says, in substance, to a number of his employees: "I believe that the individual who is the present President of the United States has done a remarkable job in the way of taking care of individuals like yourselves. I want you to take these petitions and go out and circulate them." Fifty men circulate the petitions and get, for the mayor of the city, 200,000 names for the nomination of a President of the United States.

That mayor, under the provisions of this bill, if it should be passed, would also be using his official authority, and would be subject to the pains and penalties of this proposed law.

Mr. HATCH. Did the Senator say that the mayor had no control or supervision over the employees?

Mr. LUCAS. No; the men that he asked to circulate the petitions were employees of the city.

Mr. HATCH. Then he would be subject to the law's penalty.

Mr. LUCAS. Then he would be subject to the penalty?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. One other question. In the three cases I have cited, the employees themselves would also be subject to the penalties of section 12, would they not?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, if the mayor and his employees, acting together, should violate the law, assuming it becomes such, one individual would be subject to criminal penalties while the other individual who violates it would merely be subject to the penalty of being relieved of his job. That is the way the law would operate.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; and I think it should act in that way.

Mr. LUCAS. They are both equally guilty of an offense.

Mr. HATCH. No, sir.

Mr. LUCAS. Well, practically so.

Mr. HATCH. No; there is the greatest difference in the world between them. I do not want it to appear in the RECORD that I am agreeing to that statement.

Mr. LUCAS. They are both guilty of——

Mr. HATCH. Of an offense.

Mr. LUCAS. They are both guilty of an offense; and the Senator thinks one is guilty in a greater degree than the other?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; vastly greater.

Mr. LUCAS. Suppose the Governor of a State is a candidate for reelection. He has obtained grants from the United States for highway purposes. He writes to the highway officials and to a number of employees of the State, advising them of the fact that he will be a candidate for reelection and that he hopes they will give him their support and influence in the election. Is he using his official authority in writing that letter? If so, is he subject to a fine of $1,000, and to the other penalties?

Mr. HATCH. He has written a letter to the highway employees?

Mr. LUCAS. He has written a letter to the employees of the highway department, or he has called them into his office and spoken to them. Suppose he says, "I should like to have your support in my campaign for reelection." If any of the money in the highway department comes from the Federal Government, would the Governor be subject to indictment and prosecution, and, if convicted, to a fine of $1,000 or imprisonment in the penitentiary for 1 year?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The question would be whether or not he used his official authority.

Mr. HATCH. The question is one of the use of official authority, always bearing in mind the fact that the election must be one in which a Federal official is elected.

Mr. LUCAS. Under those conditions, if the Governor should write letters to individuals in the highway department, or call in a hundred employees of the highway department and say to them, "I am a candidate for reelection, and I want you boys to go out, if you feel you can do it, and use your influence and support to have me reelected," would the Governor be subject to the penalties of this bill?

Mr. HATCH. He would be if a Federal official were being elected at that election. It must be an election at which a Federal official is elected. This section is confined to elections at which a President, Vice President, Members of Congress, or Senators are elected.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, that would always be the situation in Illinois.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wanted the Senator to bear in mind the fact that that is the kind of election referred to. Under those circumstances a Governor calling in his employees would be violating the law if the other conditions were met.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to be certain about that, because I think it is a very important question.

Further, do I correctly understand the Senator to say that under the provisions of the bill, if a congressional election or a Presidential election is being held, a Governor calling in such employees and asking them to support him and use their influence toward his reelection would be violating the law?

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course in Illinois he would always be violating the law if he did so, because in our State we always elect a Governor at the same time some congressional or national election is held.

Mr. HATCH. In one or two States that situation does not obtain, but in the vast majority of States Federal officials are elected at the same time a Governor is elected; but I do not believe, if the bill is passed, that State officials will always be violating the law.

Mr. LUCAS. One further question. I should like to ask the Senator if he agrees with the construction of section 9 of the Hatch Act set out in an opinion rendered by Attorney General Frank Murphy on October 26, when he said, among other things, the following——

Mr. HATCH. To what language does the Senator refer?

Mr. LUCAS. Section 9 of the original Hatch Act. The Attorney General said:

> Section 9 of the Hatch Act has been construed as not applying to the following:
> 1. Officers and employees of the legislative branch of the Federal Government, including secretaries and clerks of Members of Congress and congressional committees.

Is there any question about that?

Mr. HATCH. Not in my mind.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, as Members of the United States Senate we may use our official authority and our personnel to have ourselves reelected, under the interpretation of the act which I have read.

Mr. HATCH. I think the Senator will use his authority, and properly so. I do not think he will use official authority to obtain the services of his office force. That was the objection which I made. Nothing in the act relates to members of the legislative branch.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, we are exempt under the act.

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. And we may use our official authority, not only to help elect ourselves, but to help elect a candidate for Governor of a State, if we see fit and believe he should be elected, whereas the Governor is denied that privilege.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator mean to suggest that there is anything in the act to prohibit the Governor of a State from using his own personal secretary or personal employees who are not paid from Federal funds?

Mr. HATCH. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Or to keep him from using the guards in the penitentiary, the members of the public-service commission of his State, or the members of the tax commission, as political counsel if he chooses to do so? As I understand, the prohibition is simply against the Governor of a State or anybody else using the coercive power of appointment and removal over employees paid out of Federal funds.

Mr. HATCH. That theory was developed by the Senator from Michigan, and I thought it was thoroughly understood.

Mr. LUCAS. I thoroughly understand it, and am glad to have the further explanation of the Senator from Missouri, because he always makes a contribution to any argument in which he participates. Nevertheless, the fact remains that we ourselves, as Members of the United States Senate, are doing some of the things about which we are complaining.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Not at all.

Mr. LUCAS. Perhaps not. However, I should like to know whether or not there is one United States Senator who in his campaign for reelection does not use the personnel of his office in order to obtain reelection. If we are to have the purity in politics which we are all seeking, I submit that we all ought to come under the same ban, and that when campaigns come along we ought to set aside our personnel, hire our own groups, and use our own funds rather than the taxpayers' money. It seems to me that is exactly what we do. If I am mistaken about it, and if any Senator says I am mistaken, I certainly will apologize; but I know what I am doing, and I believe every other Senator is doing the same thing.

One other question: The Attorney General further says that section 9 of the Hatch Act does not apply to—

> 2. Officers and employees of the judicial branch of the Federal Government, including United States commissioners, clerks of United States courts, referees in bankruptcy, and their secretaries, deputies, and clerks.

Does the Senator agree that those classes are also exempt?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, under the provisions of the act, a referee in bankruptcy in the State of Illinois who has control of a number of foreclosures in which the Federal Government is involved may continue to participate in politics, and may even manage the campaign of any individual in my State who is seeking public office?

Mr. HATCH. I wish to say on this point that the Senator has developed something which I think should be corrected. I want the persons to whom he has just referred included. They were included in the first draft of the bill which I introduced. Members of Senators' staffs also were included. That was my intention and my desire; but certain practical considerations were met, as they are often met when legislation is undertaken, and in order to secure the passage of the bill it was confined to the executive branch of the Government. That is why the persons to whom the Senator has just referred were left out. Frankly, I should like to see them included.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator. I agree with him. Referees in bankruptcy in my State have a tremendous amount of power in connection with foreclosures in which the Government is involved. I am thinking about R. F. C. loans, H. O. L. C. loans, and other financial matters, which, as the Senator knows, are constantly going through the Federal courts. It seems to me that matter is something we might work on in the future.

Mr. HATCH. I shall be very glad to discuss the matter with the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask the Senator one further question. Will the Senator yield the floor to me for a few minutes in order that I may discuss section 15?

Mr. HATCH. Yes. Mr. President, a very unfortunate incident arose yesterday which I did not then understand and do not yet understand. The Senator from Illinois, evidently wishing to relieve me of the burden of standing on my feet while he discusses something in his own time, has asked me to yield the floor for a few minutes. I presume he expects me to resume the floor. I have finished my remarks and am perfectly willing to yield the floor or to answer any Senator's questions. Perhaps the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] is objecting to that form of procedure. He may desire to obtain the floor in his own right. I have no wish in the matter one way or the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield the floor?

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator from Illinois desires to ask a question, I shall be delighted to yield; and I expect to continue to yield so long as Senators desire to ask questions.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President——

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the only thing I am trying to do is to put forward some examples which have been discussed pro and con with the rank and file of the citizens of this country with regard to the Hatch Act. My only point is that we should perhaps do something in a practical way to clear up a certain amount of confusion which has existed from time to time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have not challenged the good faith of the Senator at all. His questions have been very fair. I am glad to help in any way possible in clearing up any confusion. The only question is as to just who has the floor. If the Senator desires to ask another question, I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. LUCAS. I desire to discuss in my own time section 15 of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield the floor?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I shall not yield the floor so long as Senators desire to ask questions.

I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to ask the Senator one further question with respect to the new section 12. The first sentence of that section reads as follows:

> SEC. 12. (a) No officer or employee of any State or local agency who exercises any function in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency shall use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof.

The next sentence is the second sentence referred to later:

> No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

Then the bill proceeds to exempt certain officers, including the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, mayors of cities, heads of executive departments, and elective officers.

I assume that the definition of the word "officer" or "employee" in the second sentence of the section is the same as officer or employee in line 15 at the beginning of the section. That also raises the question of what is "official influence."

Governors, Lieutenant Governors, and the other officers named at the end of the subsection are exempted from the provisions of the second sentence of the section which provides that:

No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns—

By which is meant that under the exemption the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor, and the other officers exempted can go out and make campaign speeches; but under the first sentence of subsection (a) of section 12 where it is provided that no officer or employee "shall use his official authority or influence," how does the Senator draw the distinction between the influence of a man who is out making speeches in behalf of his party or his ticket or himself even and a man who is undertaking privately to influence the result of an election? How does the Senator draw the distinction there, and to what extent would the second sentence and the exemptions in the third sentence conflict with the first sentence in subsection (a) of section 12?

Mr. HATCH. The exemption would not relate to the first sentence. There is a distinction between official authority and official influence.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand there is a difference between official authority and official influence.

Mr. HATCH. I myself am not so fond of the word "influence."

Mr. BARKLEY. I think every Governor and every other public officer who is elected by the people not only should be allowed to go out and advocate his record or proclaim it, as the case may be, but that he rests under an obligation to do so, because the people are entitled to know how any man has performed his duties when chosen to an office by them. But I am wondering whether a speech made by a Governor or a mayor or any of the other officers who are attempted to be exempted would come under the prohibition of the use of official influence carried in the first sentence of the section——

Mr. HATCH. I do not think it would.

Mr. BARKLEY. Because, undoubtedly, when any elective officers or heads of agencies are out advocating certain things in a political contest or advocating their own record against assaults made on it by others, they are undoubtedly attempting to exercise influence over the people.

Mr. HATCH. But not "official influence."

Mr. BARKLEY. Perhaps not; it might not be official; but when he is speaking as Governor it is impossible to separate his governorship from his personality and say how much is personal and how much is official. I am wondering how that is going to be interpreted, and I am trying to get the Senator's view of it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Mexico will yield for a moment, I will ask if this would not be a distinction between official authority and official influence? If the Governor of a State were to discharge an employee of the highway commission because the employee would not support the candidate for an office whom the Governor wanted him to support, that would be an exercise of his official authority. If he simply used such action as an example to scare other highway employees into supporting the candidate, I would think that would be an exercise of his official influence.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true; I agree that that distinction may be made; but which is which? Is it personal or official when he is out making speeches publicly to audiences advocating his own reelection or the election of others?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would say that is a personal appeal to the people of the State which any citizen has a right to make.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but he would not be making it if he were not Governor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He might be.

Mr. HATCH. He might be making political speeches, of course.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the distinction which the Senator from Missouri made is that of a Governor while acting in his official capacity violating the law when he discharges an employee and his action frightens the other employees, and they fall in line.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is influence.

Mr. SMITH. Exactly. He is not allowed to discharge an employee, and yet when he does do it without any reference to what effect it may have, his action is "influence" which he cannot exercise.

I think this bill has in it some element of virtue, though very little; but its proponents have destroyed what they are seeking to do by trying to make a man who accepts a position and receives pay from the Government, no matter how exalted and how distinguished he may be, surrender some of his American and inalienable rights in order to do so. He is unfortunate in that he was not elected. In order to carry out the functions of the office to which you and I are elected we have got to appoint persons to do certain work, and if they accept the appointments to help us perform the functions of Senators they are denied the ordinary privileges of a private citizen. That is "going some."

I am familiar with the adage, "Whose bread I eat, his song I sing," and that is characteristic of our politics. So far as the Federal Government is concerned, I suppose it may have jurisdiction over the political activities of those who are appointive officers, but when the Federal Government comes down into my State and spreads the poison of Federal patronage and Federal funds and says, "When you accept Federal funds you submit yourself to the Civil Service Commission," I cannot approve of such a proposal. If those who advocate the bill had stayed within the purview of the original measure, I think it had in it an element of real benefit to the American people, but when they widen it and seek to have it apply to officers of States there is where I stop.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, later on during the discussion, if opportunity presents itself, I intend to discuss the question of inalienable rights.

Mr. SMITH. This bill infringes on them, and the proponents of the measure know it. That is what they are doing.

Mr. HATCH. I am not discussing that question now.

Mr. SMITH. Of course the Constitution is obsolete; it has come to be merely an old rag to be kicked about; but some of us yet have some respect for it.

Mr. HATCH. That particular question is one which I desire to discuss.

Mr. SMITH. I hope the Senator will do so.

Mr. HATCH. I will be glad to do it, and I will rely not upon my own authority but upon far abler and better lawyers than I am.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I have a city in mind which is receiving Federal benefits in the way of W. P. A. projects, old-age assistance, and welfare funds of one kind and another. The city has employees whose duties are in no way connected with the Federal funds except that they are employees of the city which is receiving Federal funds. Are such Federal employees eligible to hold political office, such as committeemen, and so forth?

Mr. HATCH. Did the Senator say Federal employees?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; city employees.

Mr. HATCH. If they have nothing whatever to do with a Federal project itself, the answer is no; they are exercising no functions in connection with a Federal project. Is that the question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is the question.

Mr. HATCH. No; they would not be. The bill refers to employees of State or local agencies who exercise functions in connection with any activity financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; but the funds come to the city and the city is financed in part by Federal funds.

Mr. HATCH. I think it is confined to employees who exercise functions in connection with such activities.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question following that?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. This situation would also apply: Federal funds have been granted to a State or to a city, with which a building has been constructed. For instance, it might be a dormitory at a State university, a sewage-disposal plant in a city, a waterworks, or some other plant. The structure is completed. The Federal money went into it. Would the employees who subsequently were engaged in the operation or management of that structure be included?

Mr. HATCH. I think not.

Mr. ADAMS. Is the Senator sure?

Mr. HATCH. That is the way I interpret the language, and I do not believe it can be otherwise interpreted. Such is not the purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Take, for instance, a case in which the Federal Government has contributed to the building of streets in a city. Say the city puts up so much and the Federal Government puts up so much, and all the employees of the street-construction activity are under what is called the city engineer in the city in which I live. They are all under him; and all these employees participate this year in building the streets, some in clerical capacities, some in actual work on the streets, and some as engineers. They are all engaged in spending, in part, this Federal money. Do they come within the terms of the bill?

Mr. HATCH. All working in connection with this activity. That is the test—if they are connected with the activity.

Mr. McKELLAR. And all of them therefore come under the measure?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. For instance, take the engineering department in our city, where there is a contribution for a sewer-interceptor project. There are now several hundred persons in that department. They are all connected with the expenditure of that money.

Mr. HATCH. Actually engaged in the particular activity?

Mr. McKELLAR. Actually engaged in that project. All of them would come under the ban of this bill?

Mr. HATCH. If they are engaged in the work itself.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not a fact that there have been so many Federal contributions to various things, such as levee building and dam building and street building and road building and the building of schoolhouses and of courthouses, that the provisions of the bill would come very near including the greater portion of the persons in almost any community? Has the Senator ever figured out how many persons would be under the ban of the bill and how many would be free to do as they pleased?

Mr. HATCH. Those coming under the ban of the bill would be a very, very small percentage of the people in any city or any community.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator will find that during the past few years the Federal Government has contributed to almost every municipal project that has been built.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, the Senator from Tennessee is giving a retroactive effect to the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; I am referring to its operation this year. We have appropriated Federal money for such projects this year. W. P. A. money goes into secondary roads. W. P. A. money goes into streets in every city. W. P. A. money goes into the construction of certain kinds of buildings in every city. If that is contemplated within the terms of this bill, as the Senator says it is——

Mr. HATCH. It is.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am afraid some of us are going to get a good many persons into a good deal of trouble, because we are virtually disfranchising these persons insofar as their influence is concerned. They may take no part in politics. They will violate the provisions of the bill if they do.

That is the way the matter strikes me. I cannot see how it is possible for us to put under the ban of the bill so many persons in our own communities.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. I recall the observation the Senator made a short time ago with regard to the Social Security Board, and the regulations required to be followed by the State in conformity with the requirements of the national board.

I rise at this time to bring to the attention of the Senator the fact that at least in my State there is developing opposition to the regulations required by the National Social Security Board; and I do not inject the matter into the debate for the primary purpose of referring to that fact. I inject it into the debate so that other Senators may become informed of the possibility of similar action being taken in their States if we go too far in granting authority under the pending bill.

I am in favor of protecting the rank and file of our civil-service employees from the exploitation of partisan politics; but I should be very careful not to limit and restrict the free activities of our citizens in the discharge of their political rights. I offer, as a contribution to the exercise of great care in the adoption of helpful amendments while the bill is under consideration, this statement, which is from a recent issue of the Buffalo Courier-Express. It has this heading:

WADSWORTH RAPS SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD FOR DICTATING TO STATE—CIVIL SERVICE DEMANDS HELD UNWARRANTED, ARROGANT

A blistering attack by Assemblyman James J. Wadsworth * * * on the unwarranted and dictatorial action of the Federal Social Security Board in demanding, under threat of withdrawal of Federal aid, that the entire public welfare personnel in New York State be placed under civil service, rang through the assembly tonight.

Then the article goes on to say that Mr. WADSWORTH said:

A more arrogant and arbitrary ruling on the part of an American governmental unit I cannot recall, and I feel that every citizen of the State of New York should be apprised of what is going on.

The article continues:

The difficulties and dangers surrounding the classification of these 827 workers to make their status conform to the merit-system ultimatum of the Federal Social Security Board was stressed by the western New York lawmaker.

He concludes by saying—this is a very long statement, and I am only giving the Senator a sketchy, brief analysis of it—

In 1937 I warned the legislature and the Governor against jeopardizing our own interests by succumbing to the enticement of Federal aid, ending up with these words: "When Washington puts its foot down, that settles it here. You can't help your own people even if you want to."

So I bring to the attention of the distinguished Senator, whose efforts in behalf of civil-service workers are well known, the fact that there is a rising tide of resentment as it applies to Federal dictation of State policy. We must, therefore, exercise great care lest in going beyond the protection of the rank and file of the civil service we infringe upon the prerogatives of the citizen in the discharge of his duties.

Mr. HATCH. Let me say to the Senator, in reply to what he has said, that I mentioned that very possibility as I was discussing the Social Security Board; and I pointed out that in the amendments to the act which we adopted last year we went much farther than we are trying to do today in establishing a complete merit system, barring political activities and everything else. We invested all that broad, sweeping, general power in a Board here in Washington. Congress did that, and the Board is exercising the power which the Senate and the House gave to the Board.

But what we did in the other act and what we are doing today is just writing a simple provision of law in which we ourselves say what shall or shall not be done. We are putting a ban on partisan political activities, using exactly the same language which now applies to the thousands and thousands of employees under the civil service. We are saying nothing and doing nothing but that. The matter to which the Senator refers is altogether different. As I said to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], that has been my objection to the particular bill which he seeks to offer as an amendment. We do not do that in this bill.

Mr. MEAD. I have no desire to defend a position which is contrary to the extension of the merit system, especially in social security, and welfare, and work of that particular kind, but I do rise to suggest the advisability of exercising great care when it comes to administrative and elective officers of the highest category.

Mr. HATCH. I am very much in accord with the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As I understand the Senator's bill, it has nothing on the face of the earth to do with the selection of personnel, or with the merit system, or with anything else. It simply is a provision that Federal funds shall not be used for political purposes.

In other words, in my own State we have an administrator of the social-security set-up there who devotes his every waking hour to playing cheap politics. This bill is designed to prevent that sort of a practice; to prevent the man who is handling Federal funds in so vital a matter as the social-security set-up either from devoting his own time and activities to politics, or certainly from trying to coerce the beneficiaries of that system.

Mr. MEAD. With that I am in full accord.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It has nothing to do with the merit system. I agree with the Senator from New York that some of the actions of the Social Security Board in many instances which have fallen under my observation have been extremely arbitrary. I have deplored that tendency in the Board, and my general observation has been that the bureaucracies of Washington have a great tendency to go in that direction. I certainly hold no brief for the Civil Service Commission, because there is hardly a bureau or commission in this city of which I have a poorer opinion than I have of the Civil Service Commission as at present constituted with the exception of one lady member. What we are trying to do in the bill before us is merely to provide against the use of Federal funds for political purposes in a State, as we have already provided, so far as we could, against the use of Federal funds for political purposes in the Nation.

Mr. MEAD. I wish to say to the Senator that I do not even find fault with the social-security set-up in insisting upon the coverage of all State employees within the civil service. I am for that. I merely rose to bring to the attention of the sponsor of the bill the possibility of doing some harm to the effective application of the law he sponsors, by going a little too far. As was suggested by the Senator from Michigan, I think that making progress a little more slowly, the adoption of carefully worded amendments, will help in the enforcement of the law later on.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from New York that I have tried to go most slowly, and sometimes I think I have progressed entirely too slowly. My ideas go far beyond the pending measure and far beyond the law Congress passed last year. But I realize the dangers and possibilities the Senator from New York has mentioned. I have tried, as those who have worked with me on the committee have tried, to be as reasonable and as careful and as fair in the drafting of the measure as it was possible to be. I think the pains we took and the results we brought on the floor demonstrate that, because we did avoid very many of the questions which have been raised on the floor of the Senate, of which we had already taken care.

The Senator from Tennessee, who is standing just behind the Senator from New York, I remember stated on the floor of the Senate a few days ago that the Senator from New Mexico has an obsession on this subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. I will yield in a moment. I desire to say that the Senator from Missouri has stated exactly, in very few words, what we are trying to do. We are not trying, as the Senator from Illinois suggested, to purify politics. There are some tasks which even I, with all my obsessions, would not undertake. We do think there is a duty and a responsibility on the Congress of the United States, when it sets up certain standards for its own employees, and furnishes money, to see that the moneys we supply are not used to corrupt and control elections and disfranchise, not a few thousand employees, but millions of American citizens.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HATCH. I must first yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. On the last page of the bill I find a new section 15 of the law, which provides as follows:

> SEC. 15. The United States Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized and directed to promulgate, as soon as practicable, rules or regulations defining, for the purposes of this act, the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns." After the promulgation of such rules or regulations, the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns," as used in this act, shall have the meaning ascribed to it by such rules or regulations. The Commission is authorized to amend such rules or regulations from time to time as it deems necessary.

Suppose the Civil Service Commission, in promulgating its rules, should assume to put into its regulations a statement to the effect that the act of going down to the polls and voting in an election was taking an active part in politics. While it might not adopt such a rule, suppose it should, and suppose for a moment that the Civil Service Commission, instead of being a commission composed, as it probably is, of fair-minded men, should be composed of politically minded men, and we all realize that most of the people of this country are politically minded. Whatever we may say about it, that is the truth. Suppose they should make such a regulation; then think of the kind of a law we would have, if the proposed law should be constitutional, which I seriously doubt. I do not think we have the right to turn over to the Civil Service Commission or to any other commission the right to legislate.

I think it is absolutely indefensible to put a section such as this into a law. I do not think we have a right to pass a law giving to a commission the right to say what the meaning of the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns" is, and make that the law, and, in advance, make anything they say about it law. I have known the Senator from New Mexico for a long time, and I know he is a man of great ability and of a fine sense of right, and I would rather trust his judgment any time as to the meaning of the term "active part in political management and in political campaigns" than to trust any commission.

Why is that provision inserted in the bill? Why is it necessary to include a provision turning over to a body created by the Congress the power to define a phrase, as is provided here? If that section should be retained, I could not honestly and conscientiously vote for the bill. I do not think we have a right to transfer to a commission the duty of this body to legislate on such a matter. I should like to hear what the Senator has to say about that.

Mr. HATCH. First, I desire to thank the Senator from Tennessee for his very complimentary remarks. I am sure that he means every word he has said, and believes in the position which he has taken.

I am quite sure the Senator from Tennessee has not recalled the many times he has voted for legislation of this type; indeed, for a far more stringent type and character, giving departments power to make rules and regulations, and making a violation of such rules and regulations criminal offenses. I am quite sure the Senator from Tennessee will recall, when he thinks of it, that many times that has been done. Now, I do not defend that.

Mr. McKELLAR. They were not measures like this. We are asked to give to a commission, by this section, the power to legislate.

Mr. HATCH. I do not defend giving departments such power. When we give them power to make rules and regulations, and to make a violation of such rules and regulations criminal offenses, if that is not giving them power to legislate, I do not know what is. But I say, I do not defend that, and I think we have done entirely too much of it.

I have tried to explain why the committee adopted section 15, and I wish to say to the Senator that right now the United States Civil Service Commission has this power as to more than half a million people. It has had this power for more than 50 years.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why give it again, if it already has the power?

Mr. HATCH. It has it only as to civil service employees. I have never heard that they have made a ruling that it was political activity for a man to vote, and of course they will make no such ruling. If they did make such a ruling, it would be totally invalid, and of no effect whatever. But it was because the Civil Service Commission has built up over a period of 50 years decision after decision interpreting this exact language—and the language comes from their rule—that we thought they should have the power to define that term, and we believe that the term should now be defined definitely. The Civil Service Commission does not have a definition of the term. They have, as I have stated, a body of common law, built up by decisions over the years. I wanted the rule to be something flexible, as experience grows. This has been included with no desire to delegate legislative power to any board or commission, but it seemed to be a sensible solution of a difficult problem.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator may have discussed during my absence from the Chamber the question I am about to ask, and if so, I regret propounding the inquiry, but I should like to know whether the Senator has discussed the power that is given to the Civil Service Commission to take away a part of the funds contributed, say, to a land-grant college, because of the action of an individual employed by the P. W. A., we will say. The Senator has devoted a good deal of time to this question. Congress legislates and appropriates money, pursuant to statutory authority to a land-grant college. By the proposed law we would give the power to the Civil Service Commission to take money from the land grant college appropriation, repealing the law to that extent, if the P. W. A. had an employee who violated this statute. Again I direct my remarks to the penalty clause, because that bothers me considerably. My question is, What is the explanation of the Senator in support of conferring the power given to the Civil Service Commission to take a part of the funds appropriated by the Congress for a land-grant college, for instance, because some 6 months previously an individual connected, we will say, with the State vocational educational board, had been guilty of political activity under the definition adopted by the Civil Service Commission?

The report of the committee on page 4 states:

> However, there will be some cases (such as the case where an employee who has been removed on account of a violation in one agency is immediately reemployed in another agency) in which the particular circumstances make it appropriate to withhold funds from an agency which is not the one in which the violation occurred.

Of course, the bill does not limit it to immediate employment, but says if he is employed by any other agency of the State within 18 months.

The report continues:

> It is necessary to vest the Civil Service Commission with sufficient discretion, in determining from what agency the funds are to be withheld, to enable it to withhold funds from the agency upon which the responsibility for wrongdoing actually rests if such agency is one whose activities are financed in whole or in part by Federal funds, and to enable it to withhold amounts from some agency in instances where State officials permit State or local agencies whose activities are not financed from Federal funds to defeat the purposes of this section by employing persons who have been dismissed from other agencies because of violations of this section.

I wish to advise the Senator how that impresses me. The Senator called attention to the fact that when the Civil Service Commission had passed upon the question of the right to discharge an employee because of his political activity the punishment, which is dismissal, is inflicted upon the employee. But the land-grant college may be in no way connected with the violation of the act. None of its employees has violated this provision of the statute. But because the employee of another branch of the Government who has violated it is thereafter employed by the mayor of a city in the State, the right would be given to the Civil Service Commission to say, "We will not take money from this P. W. A. or this other agency. We will take it from the land-grant college"—perhaps because they have more money, or for some other reason. Has the Senator given thought, at least, to limiting the application of the provision to the agency whose employee offended?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; that matter was discussed in the committee and we tried to make such provision.

Mr. BYRNES. Why would not the Senator limit its application to the agency whose employee offended?

Mr. HATCH. The only reason is the illustration I gave with respect to interchange between agencies. The adoption of the Senator's suggestion might do away with the other evil.

Mr. BYRNES. Let us say a hospital is being built, and an employee of the P. W. A. has been discharged, and he has been reemployed by city officials. P. W. A. comes to the Civil Service Commission and says, "Do not stop the funds for that hospital. We need the money to complete it. Take it out of the land-grant college." The land-grant college may say, "No; take it out of other funds." The Civil Service Commission will have a difficult decision to make.

Mr. HATCH. They will have to take it from the institution in which the offending person was employed.

Mr. BYRNES. No; the report says that they will not.

Mr. HATCH. That was the intent.

Mr. BYRNES. The report at the bottom of page 3 says:

> Normally amounts withheld because of any violation of this section by an employee of any State or local agency will be withheld from a loan or grant to the agency by which such employee was employed at the time of such violation; however, there will be some cases (such as the case where an employee who has been removed on account of a violation in one agency is immediately reemployed in another agency) in which the particular circumstances make it appropriate to withhold funds from an agency which is not the one in which the violation occurred.

Under the language of the report and the bill, an agency whose employees had never offended could be penalized for the offense.

Mr. HATCH. I do not agree with that interpretation; but if there is any question about it, I shall gladly make that provision of the bill clear if the Senator will furnish the appropriate language.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator will read the report, he will see that it makes that specific provision.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it seems to me the Senator from South Carolina is absolutely correct. Not only does the bill authorize taking money from some innocent agency, but there is no limit on the amount.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, no.

Mr. ADAMS. It says:

> The Commission shall determine and certify to the appropriate Federal agency an additional amount to be similarly withheld from a loan or grant to a State or local agency within such State.

There is no limitation as to the agency from which it is to be taken, or the amount to be taken, but that is left absolutely to the discretion of the Civil Service Commission. In other words, it is made a capital offense, so to speak, for which one agency may be executed because some other agency committed a trivial violation of the law.

While I have the floor, may I go back to section 15?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is not entirely correct.

Mr. ADAMS. Just a word along the line to which the Senator from Tennessee referred. I listened very intently to the Senator's explanation of the reason for section 15. I am fully aware of the fact that the Civil Service Commission have in many instances laid down the definition of objectionable political activity. The rules have grown up in cases somewhat like rate-making, that is they have issued a regulation with reference to this phase, and another as to that, and the Senator has in mind a sort of codification of these rules, but I think he has made his proposed law unconstitutional by the way in which he is seeking to work it out.

In other words, the Senator has made it an offense, with a very unusual penalty, for anyone under this classification to take an active part in the political management of a campaign. The Congress, by passing the measure, would set forth what constitutes an offense. It would be perfectly proper for the Civil Service Commission to interpret that in the exercise of its authority as it would for a court. We lay down doctrines. But the Senator I think has made the mistake of saying that it shall not be a determination of the words as used by Congress which shall constitute the offense, but that the Civil Service Commission may lay down a definition of its own and that its definition shall then become the law.

I really think the Senator from Tennessee is correct, and that section 15 could be eliminated without in anywise harming the purpose of the bill. I think the Senator is jeopardizing the validity of the bill by allowing to remain the provision delegating the authority to define the offense or the crime.

Mr. HATCH. I am very glad, of course, to have the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, in whose judgment we all have the greatest respect. That type of legislation, however, is not altogether new, and, in my opinion, it is constitutional. It is not a child to which I am so devoted as might appear. The idea was that there had been much talk throughout the country about political management and political campaigning. To me the words are perfectly simple. As the Senator from Colorado has said, they do not need any definition whatever. If an attempt is made to define them it might be in worse shape. A good many Senators have clamored that definitions should be established for this, that, and the other. It occurred to us that the Civil Service Commission has this power, and it has in effect been making similar decisions over the years, and that is the reason this section was included. It seems to me the words do not need any definition, and if we were to attempt to define "political management" or "political activity," somebody might want another definition defining the definition we gave, and so on and so forth. I think the words are perfectly simple.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has served on the bench. He knows that definitions will be made by the courts of words used in a simple criminal statute. But no legislature has ever said that the court itself may specify what shall constitute the crime and define it. In other words, the courts interpret the intention of the Congress rather than have delegated to them the power to make any definition they see fit.

Mr. HATCH. Has the Senator ever had occasion to read the various definitions of "reasonable doubt"?

Mr. ADAMS. Not all of them, but I have read a great many hundred of them. They run into thousands.

Mr. STEWART and Mr. PEPPER rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. HATCH. I am trying to yield the floor. I yield first to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. STEWART. Am I to understand the Senator's construction of the language to mean that the duties imposed upon the Civil Service Commission are conclusive; that is, if the Civil Service Commission shall find that the law has been violated? Is there any provision for review?

Mr. HATCH. There would be in certain respects. I have been a little amazed at the objections to this bill, when some other things have been done which I might mention.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator understand that, so far as the provisions of the bill are concerned, the findings of the Civil Service Commission as to whether or not there has been a violation of the act in any way circumscribe criminal prosecution?

Mr. HATCH. They have nothing to do with criminal prosecution.

Mr. STEWART. Would the Senator object to an amendment to the bill which would provide for a review of the findings of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. HATCH. How and where? I shall be glad to discuss the subject with the Senator.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose arbitrary or unfair action should be taken by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. HATCH. No Member of the Senate is more zealous about protecting against arbitrary action than am I.

Mr. STEWART. I am sure that is true.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator has in mind something which will prevent arbitrary action—something which is practicable and can be worked out—I shall be happy to join him.

Mr. STEWART. No one in this body has a higher regard for the Senator's integrity than I have.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STEWART. I mean that sincerely.

Suppose that in the application of the law, in the event the bill shall become a law, an arbitrary, unfair rule should be promulgated by the Civil Service Commission; then we would be wholly without a right of appeal.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, we are in that situation now in connection with many agencies. I do not like that condition at all. I like the theory of review. I am committed to that idea on general principles.

Mr. STEWART. To illustrate the thought I have in mind, suppose a more or less remote employee of some municipality should violate the provisions of the bill, and in providing for punishment under the bill, as the Civil Service Commission is given the right to do, the Commission should, as was suggested a moment ago by the Senator from South Carolina, impose punishment upon some innocent community within the State. Then there would be no review, no appeal, and no constituted body to which an appeal could be made. I wonder if the Senator would object to an amendment providing for review.

Mr. HATCH. Has the Senator any such amendment prepared?

Mr. STEWART. I have no such amendment prepared.

Mr. HATCH. I shall be very glad to have the Senator prepare such an amendment and submit it to me. I really like the idea he suggests.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator has given much thought to the matter.

Mr. HATCH. No matter how much thought we give to it, suggestions for improvement may still be made. As I previously stated when this measure came out of the committee, none of us imagined that it was perfect. I now have in mind an imperfection which I shall offer an amendment to correct. I wonder that it has not been mentioned. I shall offer an amendment covering certain institutions whose funds may be pledged in advance.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. As I understand, the bill which is now before us is an amendment to the original Hatch Act; and section 15, giving the Civil Service Commission power to make definitions, applies also to the original act.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. There is at least one provision in the original act providing for criminal prosecution. That is section 8.

Mr. HATCH. There is provision in the act for criminal prosecution.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator wish to ask a question?

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to ask two or three questions.

Mr. MILLER rose.

Mr. HATCH. I do not want to get into the situation which arose yesterday by trying to yield the floor to one Senator in preference to another. The Senator from Arkansas wishes to obtain the floor. If the Senator from Florida wishes to ask a question, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to ask two or three questions, if the Senator will yield.

Mr. MILLER. I have not the floor.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Arkansas is trying his best to obtain the floor.

Mr. PEPPER. I certainly have no desire to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to obtain the floor after the Senator from New Mexico shall have concluded.

Mr. PEPPER. Before the Senator from New Mexico takes his seat, I wish to propound two or three questions.

In the first place, I notice that on page 2 of the bill, employees of a State who are engaged in an employment which is partially subsidized by the Federal Government, are forbidden from taking any part in a political campaign for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, Member of the House of Representatives, or Delegate, or Resident Commissioner from any Territory or insular possession.

On page 4 of the bill, in lines 21 and 22, I read:

No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

I observe that the first provision to which I refer restrains such employees and officials from participating in what might be called a Federal campaign. The latter language to which I have referred seems to preclude them from taking part in any kind of a campaign—local, district, municipal, county, or State, as well as Federal. Is that true?

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator really means that they are not only precluded from participating in a Federal campaign, but they are also precluded from participating in one of their own local campaigns?

Mr. HATCH. The section from which the Senator is reading is confined to Federal elections; but the other part of the bill, relating to political activity and providing for the withholding of funds, would apply to a strictly State election.

Mr. PEPPER. But the legal effect is as I have stated?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. That is the first question I wanted to ask the Senator.

The next question is referring to the latter part of page 6——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, would the Senator object to my asking a question on that point?

Mr. PEPPER. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to find out if voting is taking an active part in a campaign.

Mr. HATCH. It is not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why is it not? Why does the Senator think voting is not? If a person leaves his home and goes to the polls and votes, why is he not taking an active part in the campaign? It is certainly not a negative part.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator was not present in the House of Representatives the night the original bill was discussed. In the original act there is a provision that nothing therein shall be construed to affect the right of a person to vote. Distinguished lawyers in the House criticized that language very much, because it attempted to confer a right which they said could not be taken away.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is possibly true, but that does not show that voting is not taking a part in a political campaign. The Senator makes an exception of voting.

Mr. HATCH. The position of distinguished lawyers in the House was that putting the exemption in the bill added nothing whatever to the bill, because we could not take away that right from a person. I do not think we can. We may call it political activity if we wish, but it is still an inviolable right.

Mr. PEPPER. I note at the bottom of page 6 of the bill that the Commission—referring, I believe, to the Civil Service Commission—is authorized to—

Take into account the nature of such violations and the circumstances under which they occurred and shall fix such amounts, and prescribe such permanent or temporary withholding thereof and such conditions with respect thereto, as in its judgment are sufficient to prevent violations of this section or evasion of its purposes and to carry into effect the purposes of this section, but without interfering with the activity for which such loans or grants are made to a greater extent than is reasonably necessary for the purposes of this section.

I was about to ask the Senator if it is not an accepted rule of law that the right of review in a judicial tribunal prevails with respect to the decisions of administrative agencies, and that, when such review occurs, in order for the administrative judgment and decision to be sustained there must have been at least substantial evidence to sustain the conclusion reached by the administrative agency. It must have dealt with the matter in controversy in such a way as to meet the requirements of due process of law. It must not have dealt with it arbitrarily or capriciously. I should like to ask the Senator, as an eminent lawyer and judge, if in the absence of any possible standards being laid down in the law to govern the action of the administrative agency it is possible for any judicial tribunal to set aside or reverse the action of an administrative agency.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator mean there is no method to get the question into court?

Mr. PEPPER. No. I mean that in the ordinary case the statute prescribes at least certain general standards which must be observed by the administrative agency in the decision at which it arrives. In this case I am asking the Senator whether or not any standards whatever are laid down to govern the amount of money that may be withheld by the administrative agency? In other words, would it ever be possible for a judicial tribunal to review the action of the administrative agency and reverse the decision of the administrative agency?

Mr. HATCH. I think so.

Mr. PEPPER. What standards are prescribed so that the administrative agency shall have some legal admonition or some legal basis upon which to determine the amount of money to be withheld? What is there in the measure to suggest to the administrative agency the standard it shall follow in determining the amount of money that may be withheld?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator himself just read part of it.

Mr. PEPPER. Let me put this case to the Senator——

Mr. HATCH. Let me read:

(c) In determining the amount of loans or grants to be withheld under subsection (b) on account of violations of subsection (a), the Commission shall take into account the nature of such violations and the circumstances under which they occurred and shall fix such amounts, and prescribe such permanent or temporary withholding thereof and such conditions with respect thereto, as in its judgment are sufficient to prevent violations of this section or evasion of its purposes and to carry into effect the purposes of this section, but without interfering with the activity for which such loans or grants are made to a greater extent than is reasonably necessary for the purposes of this section.

Suppose the Civil Service Commission arbitrarily withholds all funds from a particular agency.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well, let us assume that one case and let us assume——

Mr. HATCH. Then the statute is clearly violated.

Mr. PEPPER. It might possibly be clearly violated in that case. Let us assume from the Senator's discussion that it is; but let us take another case—take the State road department of my State. It has a foreman in one of the counties in south Florida; we will say that foreman actually violates this proposed law and that fact is brought to the attention of the Civil Service Commission in the way the statute contemplates. The Civil Service Commission directs that a hundred thousand dollars be withheld from the State authority in the allocation of the State road department funds at the next period of allocation, and that matter comes before a judicial tribunal for review on the complaint of the State of Florida that the Commission has dealt unjustly or has imposed an excessive penalty in this case, what decision would the judicial agency render?

Mr. HATCH. Very frequently in cases in court—and I myself have been in such cases—where the action taken was clearly outside the authority vested, the court could and would act.

Mr. PEPPER. The point I meant to suggest to the Senator was that in the ordinary case in passing a law to afford a basis upon which administrative action may be taken Congress has persistently—and the courts have uniformly required that Congress do so—laid down the broad scope of the administrative authority. Here we are merely saying that in the case of the violation of this proposed law the Civil Service Commission may withhold such funds as they think should properly be withheld because of the violation in question. If a case comes before a judicial tribunal it is the determination of the administrative agency that is the criterion and not any legal standard; so there is no way for the judicial tribunal to judge of administrative wrongdoing, if any.

Mr. HATCH. Confining it exactly to the language the Senator quoted, he would be correct, but he does not quote it all.

Mr. PEPPER. What is it that I have omitted?

Mr. HATCH. I read it to the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. The language of limitation to which the Senator refers, I assume is the part beginning with the words—

But without interfering with the activity for which such loans or grants are made to a greater extent than is reasonably necessary for the purposes of this section.

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. What does that mean? I will ask the Senator to define what that means.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator cannot understand it.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator from New Mexico were sitting as a judge, what would he say that means?

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator cannot understand the language, I am sure that nothing that I can say would make it any plainer. It means exactly what it says. It is not difficult to tell if the withdrawal of funds would interfere with or cripple or destroy an activity.

Mr. PEPPER. Suppose the State of Florida receives, we will say, $1,000,000 a year from the Bureau of Public Roads, and suppose $50,000 is withheld because of an employee or a group of employees violating this proposed law, is that to be held erroneous or justified if it comes into a court, and, if so, what is the standard that the court should follow?

Mr. HATCH. It would depend altogether on the nature of the violation.

Mr. PEPPER. I will ask the Senator this question: Is there any analogy of which the Senator knows in any existing statute or law to that provision?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. I will be glad to have the Senator suggest one.

Mr. HATCH. I referred to one a while ago. We gave the Social Security Board power to require the setting up of a merit system and to withhold funds if such a system were not followed. That course of action has been pursued right along. And among other conditions required to exist is identically the same rule against political activity.

Mr. PEPPER. I want to suggest to the Senator that in the ordinary case the Federal Government prescribes the conditions upon which the Federal funds may be allocated. If those conditions to do not exist, then the Federal funds are not allocated, and, therefore, generally not received. In certain cases, for example, the Federal funds must be matched.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator say that?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; I say that that is usually the case. For example, social-security funds must be matched by the States. If they are not matched, Federal funds are not allocated. Generally speaking, I say the Congress defines the conditions upon which the Federal appropriation becomes effective; for example, a matching requirement. If the State agency does certain things, then it is entitled to a Federal appropriation; it is up to the administrative agency to determine whether or not the conditions have been met; but those are standards usually capable of definition, whereas in this case there is unlimited discretion and uncontrolled caprice which may be exercised by the Civil Service Commission in passing upon the matter.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should be glad to have the Senator from Florida state the instances where the specific provisions as to matching are written. Of course, that is true in the case of highway funds and in a few other instances. I know of one Government activity in connection with which my State gets four times as much from the Federal Government as the State appropriates for itself; but in the great body of appropriations we have made during the last 7 years we have simply signed blank checks and allowed the money to be allocated to the States.

Mr. PEPPER. What I intended to say was that a general standard was provided in the law with respect to the appropriation of Federal funds, and I stated that that is true with respect to the Bureau of Public Roads funds and social-security funds and practically all other funds that are appropriated by the Federal Government. The existence of the conditions and whether they exist or not usually depends upon the finding of the administrative agency.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator does not contend that that applies to relief or public health or numerous other Federal contributions?

Mr. PEPPER. I am glad the Senator mentioned relief, for I can use that for analogy. Under the existing relief law each State is required to put up a minimum of 25 percent of the cost of W. P. A. projects.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; but Congress appropriated vast sums for direct relief without any requirement whatever of that sort, and for a long time it did not require any direct contribution locally on W. P. A. projects, with the result that we found in the unemployment committee a year or so ago that the city of Greater New York, for instance, had made a contribution of less than two-tenths of 1 percent, while the State of North Dakota has made a contribution of 34 percent.

Mr. PEPPER. And it was because we were dissatisfied with an uncontrolled discretion in the distribution of relief funds that Congress laid down the standard of 25 percent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In some cases.

Mr. PEPPER. But that is not a penal statute, as in this case.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, the Senator was himself the one who raised that question, and I was amazed at his statement that we did make money grants and provide appropriations without any limitations whatsoever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; I desire to offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DANAHER. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 7, after line 3, after the word "section", it is proposed to strike out the period and insert the following:

Provided, That in no event shall loans or grants pledged by a State or local agency as security for its bonds or notes be withheld where such action would jeopardize the payment of principal or interest on such bonds or notes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that is an amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the committee amendment.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendment will be so modified.

Mr. MILLER obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I inquire, Are we considering the language in italics in section 12, on page 4? Is all section 12 a single amendment?

Mr. MILLER. That is one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that is one amendment.

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me to make a point of no quorum?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mrs. CARAWAY. I made the point of no quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	King	Russell
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Schwellenbach

Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon I proposed an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment, beginning with line 15 on page 4 and going down to and including line 18 on page 7. If the amendment I propose should be adopted by the Senate, it would necessitate also striking out sections 13 and 15 of the bill. The amendment I propose, which is in the nature of a substitute, is for the purpose of getting at what I think to be the real heart of this entire controversy. I am proposing to strike out of the bill section 3, the section in italics, which has been the cause of most of the discussion, and to substitute therefor a provision repealing section 9 of the original Hatch Act.

The original Hatch Act was passed by this body on the 13th day of April 1939. It is true that the act had been discussed to some extent prior to that time; but on the day on which it passed, and on the day on which the amendments were adopted, it received scarcely any, if any, discussion. As the remedy I suggest calls for a repeal of a portion of the original act—which, if it is repealed, will make it utterly unnecessary to consider sections 3, 13, and 15 of the pending bill—I desire, if I may, briefly and I hope fairly to review the provisions of the so-called Hatch Act. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to that act to see just where we are and what we are undertaking by this bill to amend.

I take it no one would have any objection to section 1 of the Hatch Act. It simply makes it unlawful to intimidate or coerce any person in any election.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. That section applies to everyone?

Mr. MILLER. It applies to everyone.

Mr. MINTON. The person affected might be the president of a corporation intimidating the employees of the corporation.

Mr. MILLER. That provision is universal.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator approve of that section?

Mr. MINTON. Oh, of course I approve of it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I desire to be courteous to my colleagues; and, if they want me to yield, I shall be glad to yield to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Arkansas would like to have Senators ask permission to interrupt him.

Mr. MILLER. I think that is perfectly proper.

Mr. President, section 2 of the Hatch Act is dealt with in this bill. If Senators will observe the bill now under consideration they will see that section 2 is exactly the same as section 2 of the Hatch Act, with the exception of the words beginning on page 2, in line 4, at the figure (2), going down to and including the words "United States" on the same page, in line 16. In other words, that part of the bill is section 2 of the Hatch Act made applicable to certain State officials, and is a reenactment of certain provisions of section 2 of the original act.

Section 3 of the Hatch Act was at that time, and is now, substantially the same provision that is carried in the Corrupt Practices Act, which has been the law for many years.

The reason I am calling the attention of the Senate to these provisions is that, in my opinion, the provisions of the Hatch Act which I do not seek to repeal or to change are ample to protect everybody, and at the same time preserve to the average citizen his rights as a citizen.

Section 4 of the Hatch Act, which is not sought to be interfered with, makes it unlawful to deprive anyone of employment or threaten to deprive anyone of employment. That is the provision which was enacted because of certain talk about W. P. A. manipulation. Everybody approves of that provision, and it is general in its application.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the same provision is in the appropriation act regarding W. P. A. workers.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; the same provision is in the appropriation act. That is true. Nobody can object to that provision, and it is all-inclusive. It is general in its application.

Section 5 of the Hatch Act makes it unlawful to solicit funds from persons who are receiving their pay from appropriations made by Congress. Nobody objects to that section.

Section 6 makes it unlawful to furnish or to aid in furnishing lists of employees receiving their pay from appropriations made by Congress.

Section 7 makes it unlawful to use any appropriation now or hereafter made, or any part of it, to coerce, to intimidate, to influence, or otherwise to interfere with an election. That section is left intact.

Section 8 is the criminal provision affecting the sections referred to, and it provides a penalty of $1,000 fine for violating those sections.

Now, we come to section 9 of the act, which, in my opinion, should be repealed. If it should be repealed, it would make unnecessary further consideration of section 3 of the pending bill or that part which is in italics.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the portion of the bill under consideration, beginning on line 15, page 4, the portion in italics, is an attempt to extend section 9 of the original Hatch Act to State employees, with the addition of the enforcement provision, through and by the Civil Service Commission. That, in effect, is what this section in italics, the one I am seeking to strike out, does. If it should be stricken out, then it is certain that section 9 should be repealed.

Now let us see about section 9 and consider what kind of a measure we have here. What is the present law? I have called the attention of the Senate to the provisions of the Hatch Act which would be left intact, and which, in my opinion, and I believe in the opinion of every disinterested person, protect everyone from any influence, coercion, or intimidation, official or otherwise. Now we come to section 9 of the Hatch Act, and I call attention to this specific language:

> It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof.

That is the first sentence of section 9. Let me call attention to the first sentence of section 2 of the same act, because if there ever was a "nigger in the woodpile," he is found lurking in section 9 of the act. The first sentence of section 2 is almost word for word like the first sentence of section 9, with the exception that in section 9 the words "or influence" have been added. Under section 2 of the original Hatch Act the use of official authority is prevented. No one objects to that. Officials should not be permitted to use official authority. But let us see what the act provides, reading a little further. In section 9, by the first sentence, it is sought to prevent the use of official authority or influence.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator contend that the first sentence of section 9 is fully covered by section 2 of the Hatch Act?

Mr. MILLER. I think so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In other words, the statement in the first sentence of section 9 that "it shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof," is, in purpose and effect, the same as the language in section 2, which reads:

It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, or any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting the election or the nomination—

And so forth. So that the first sentence of section 9 is, the Senator contends, a mere repetition of the provision of section 2?

Mr. MILLER. A repetition, except in this respect—and this is why it was inserted—that after inserting the first sentence in section 9, then in the next sentence we provided an escape clause, and practically nullified section 2. Let me read further:

No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects.

Then:

For the purposes of this section the term "officer" or "employee"—

And the words "officer" or "employee" are in quotation marks, seeking to convey the thought that the application is to the particular words "officer or employee," but the provision of the first sentence is that whoever shall be employed in the executive branch shall be under certain obligations, and a man is your employee, although you may not call him such, if he is working for you, and likewise a man working in the executive branch is an employee of the executive branch. Therefore those are exempt, because—

For the purposes of this section the term "officer" or "employee" shall not be construed to include (1) the President and Vice President of the United States; (2) persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the office of the President; (3) heads and assistant heads of executive departments—

And it would be interesting to see a roster of the assistant heads of the various departments—

(4) officers who are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who determine policies to be pursued by the United States in its relations with foreign powers or in the Nation-wide administration of Federal laws.

Such officers in the executive branch of the Government may use their official authority under section 9. The only thing that section means, when it is reduced to practicalities, is that we are exempting and saying to a certain group of men in Washington, men who direct the policies, "You can do whatever you please about it. You can take such action as in your judgment the conditions warrant and dictate," but if any man who is not a director, or who is not a policy former, or who is not an assistant head takes the action, what happens to him? He is discharged. And who discharges him? The same man who is exempted from the penalty.

The next section provides:

Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

What does that mean from a practical standpoint? Let us be practical about this matter. There is nothing mysterious about it. I know there is not a Member of the Senate, indeed, not a Member of the Congress, who does not want fair elections. This act is called an act to prevent pernicious political activities. In section 9 is the most pernicious provision found in any statute I have ever seen, for this reason: We have exempted the policy formers, the bureaucrats, the men in Washington; yet the men who are out in the bushes, the men who are out in the field, the men who are doing the work, cannot do anything except vote, and probably whisper to their neighbors, if they do not get caught at it.

Suppose a man does not comply with the law; suppose a man attempts to preserve his rights as an average citizen; what happens to him? His superior takes his head off, that is all. It merely means, from a practical standpoint, that the head of the executive department may dictate to every employee in the department, because the head is exempt, while the employees are not. Is that fair? Is it American?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it is a good law, why exempt Senators, for instance? Why not include Senators? Senators are as much interested in politics as anyone else in the world.

Mr. MILLER. I have heard so.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why should we take the inoffensive, small employees in the various States, who happen to be paid out of a Federal appropriation, and undertake to penalize them for taking any part in elections, and in the same act excuse Senators? I think Senators, members of the Cabinet, and all other officials should be included in the act if we are to pass a law such as this. I think there ought to be the same law for all. There ought not to be exceptions in the law, in my judgment.

Mr. MILLER. I heartily agree with the Senator; but what I am trying to point out is what we have already done. What I am proposing to do is to repeal section 9, and with its repeal goes the necessity of the enactment of that part of the pending bill which is in italics, and also there passes out with it section 13 and section 15.

"Pernicious" means harmful, baneful, destructive. I cannot for the life of me see why it should be considered a pernicious act for an upright citizen, even though he may be drawing his money from the Federal Government, to exercise the same privileges as every other citizen exercises. Yet in this case we say that he can vote and can express an opinion, but he had better not go to any political function; he had better not go into a political headquarters; he had better not be seen lurking around any place of public speaking; he had better not exercise the right of free speech and make a speech, because, if he happens to say something contrary to the political views of the head of his department, off goes the employee's head, and he ceases to be an employee.

I may call the attention of the Senate further to the next provision of the Hatch bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Before the Senator proceeds to the next provision I should like to have him illuminate a little more the argument which he has just made. It strikes me that the Senator has made a very important assertion—namely, that the second part of section 9 of the present law nullifies the provision of the first sentence. The first sentence, which is identical, as the Senator argues, with section 2——

Mr. MILLER. Practically identical.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Prohibits any person employed by the Federal Government from using his official authority or influence to affect an election. I take it that by that the Senator means that any person in the Federal service who uses the power and responsibility vested in him by reason of the law which creates his position to affect an election is offending against this law.

Mr. MILLER. Offending against section 2 and section 9.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator agrees that that sort of an offense should be punished?

Mr. MILLER. It should be, and is, under section 2.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But then the Senator says that the sentence further down in the paragraph, which describes and defines the meaning of the word "employee" exempts from the prohibitions of the act certain types of employees, among them heads of Government bureaus. Is it the Senator's argument that by reason of that sentence the head of a Government bureau is authorized to use his official influence in carrying out a law to interfere with an election?

Mr. MILLER. No; I mean to say, Mr. President, that the first sentence of section 9 is surplusage. Section 2 of the act prohibits the use of official authority. It is made a crime to violate section 2. But to violate section 9 is not a criminal offense; the only penalty being discharge from employment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand that; but I was trying to develop the exact meaning of the Senator's statement that this was an escape clause. Is it the Senator's contention therefore that an employee who is defined in the sentence of section 9 beginning with the words "for the purpose of this section the term 'officer' or 'employee'," may disregard the first sentence of section 9?

Mr. MILLER. I think so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In other words, let us take a particular office, and I use the office of First Assistant Postmaster General because at one time I occupied that position. That official under the first sentence would be prohibited from bringing together, let us say, the employees of the Post Office Department into his office and talking to them about political matters, and saying, "I should like to have you vote this way or that way." That would be prohibited?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; by section 2.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is also prohibited by the first sentence of section 9.

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is it the Senator's contention that by reason of the escape clause such an officer would be permitted, without offending the law, to attempt to use his official influence in that way?

Mr. MILLER. That is my contention, certainly.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. MILLER. I shall yield to the Senator after I have made one more statement. In other words, he can do the very things stated by the Senator from Wyoming without incurring the penalty of section 9, which is dismissal.

I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator does not mean to say, I take it from his last remark, that the employee would not incur the penalty provided in section 2?

Mr. MILLER. No. I am holding sections 9 and 2 separate and apart.

Mr. HATCH. But section 2 is still in effect?

Mr. MILLER. Section 2 is still in effect; yes.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I was obliged to step out of the Chamber for a few minutes. I wish to know how the Senator justifies the contention that the First Assistant Postmaster General, in the illustration offered by the Senator from Wyoming, could exercise his power to influence the vote or the views of his employees without violating the first sentence of section 9, and likewise the first sentence of section 2. What is the escape clause?

Mr. MILLER. The point is that he might violate section 2 of the original Hatch Act; but the only penalty there provided is a trial by court and jury, with possible fine and imprisonment. But if he violates section 9——

Mr. BYRNES. That means dismissal.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; that means simply dismissal. Therefore, he is exempted by section 9 from incurring the risk of being discharged.

Mr. BYRNES. He would have a trial in court.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; that is all. I would much rather be tried any day by a jury of 12 men and a fair-minded court than by a bureaucrat.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas if he does not recognize a distinction between the holder of an administrative position, within the meaning of section 2, and the holder of an executive office, within the meaning of section 9?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I do not; and neither do the lawbooks. I thought there was a difference between an administrative officer and an employee of the executive department. But the books tell me there is no difference; that an administrative officer is an employee of the Government, except in the legislative and judicial branches, and that he is employed to execute the laws in the executive department. There is a distinction in words but no difference in meaning.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator contend, then, that the words "administrative position" as used in section 2, would include, let us say, the President of the United States?

Mr. MILLER. I think they would.

Mr. MINTON. And the members of his Cabinet, of course?

Mr. MILLER. I do not think there can be any doubt in the world about it.

Mr. President, I want to submit to the Senate whether we have not gone as far as any legislative body should go in the enactment of the original Hatch Act, and whether section 9 should not be taken from it now, upon the first opportunity we have, in order to protect the rights of the average citizen.

Mr. President, to me it is a terrible thought that I or any other average citizen of this country should be denied the right of free speech, should be denied the right to go on the public forum and discuss publicly any issue which may be before the American people. Yet there are thousands and thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands of men and women in this country today who under section 9 are denied that privilege.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I realize what the Senator is protesting against, and still is that not the essence of civil service?

Mr. MILLER. Please do not ask me to define civil service.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am not asking the Senator to define it. I am asking if what the Senator objects to is not the essence of civil service.

Mr. MILLER. I do not think so.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. It is not the essence of civil service as the Hatch Act applies it. Those under civil service are required to take no part in political activity, but they are given something in exchange. They are given security of position, whereas those whom the Hatch Act affects are not given anything in exchange for the thing taken away from them. They have no security of position. They have no right to defend their position or to hold their position. That right is denied them under the Hatch Act.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate on this matter. I know that I have as much interest as has any other Senator in the welfare of the people of our country, in the form of our Government, and in the way of doing things according to American tradition. However, we have come to a peculiar point in our history when we give to bureaucrats and heads of departments in Washington the right to discharge any man for exercising a right for which our forefathers fought. That is how far we have gone with the Hatch Act. Section 9 should be eliminated. As I have previously stated, if my amendment is adopted, it will obviate the necessity of giving consideration to section 3 of the pending bill.

I say very frankly, Mr. President, that I think section 2 as proposed to be amended by the pending bill should be adopted. Section 2, as proposed to be amended, applies, and seeks only to apply, to State officers, and applies to State officers in States where Federal money is being expended, the same rule that is applied to Federal officers under section 2. But that is as far as we ought to go. That is as far as we can go in good conscience.

I submit to the Senate, in all fairness and candor, that the way out of this dilemma, the way out of the intolerable situation in which we find ourselves, is to adopt the amendment I have proposed, and thus give consideration to section 2, and determine whether or not we want to apply the official authority applied in section 2 of the original act. Then we shall have a livable, workable American law.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I wish to invite the attention of the Senator to a comparison between section 2 and section 9, and ask his opinion. Before I do so, I wish to point out that the comparison does not bear at all on the Senator's argument solely with reference to section 9, but only insofar as he would have us think that section 9 is surplusage.

Mr. MILLER. No; if the Senator has the idea that section 9 is surplusage, he has the wrong impression.

Mr. DANAHER. I do not have that idea, but I think the Senator may have left that impression.

Mr. MILLER. No; I was referring to the first sentence of section 9.

Mr. DANAHER. Very well.

Then, Mr. President, with that definition of an understanding between us, let me put this question:

Under the language of section 2, an administrative officer is forbidden, under criminal penalty, to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with the election of a Federal officer, but the first sentence of section 9 very definitely applies to and limits the use by the executive officer of his official position in any election.

Mr. MILLER. The language is "with an election."

Mr. DANAHER. Therefore, it may mean any election; may it not?

Mr. MILLER. Taking the context of the act, it would certainly mean any election. That makes it even more obnoxious.

Mr. DANAHER. It may well be that that particular point is in line with the objective which I seek to make clear. I believe the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] recently told us about actions in Louisiana in which a member of the executive branch of the Federal Government, as I understand the term "executive branch of the Federal Government," went into Louisiana and, according to the Senator from Louisiana, very markedly affected an election which took place in that State. That was the burden of the address which we heard. As I see it, that type of violation, if it be a violation, is the type inveighed against by section 9. There is nothing in it which is criminal per se, and therefore such an officer, if he can be said to have violated the law, comes within section 9 (b), but is not answerable in any sense to the criminal penalties involved in the definition of section 8. Is that statement substantially coincident with the Senator's view?

Mr. MILLER. Should he come within the provisions of the first sentence of section 9, he would be excused by the sentence following, because he is an employee of an executive department. The man to whom the Senator has reference evidently occupied a policy-making position. He was an assistant to the head of a department of the Government. Therefore, he would have been excused.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator will understand that I did not charge that the official in question had affected the election.

Mr. MILLER. I understand.

Mr. DANAHER. I was seeking to find out whether or not the Senator's argument would apply to that type of conduct.

Mr. MILLER. He would be excused from discharge because he was the assistant to the head of a Department.

As I started to say, Mr. President, it is not my desire to detain the Senate. As much as any man I appreciate and honor the Senator from New Mexico for his sincerity of purpose, his faithfulness, and his tenacity. I am in sympathy with the objective which he seeks to reach. However, I submit to the Senate that the motives of the Senator from New Mexico are no higher or purer than are the motives of any other Member of the Senate. He has not so implied. He would not so imply, because he is a sincere and honest man. However, because of our unquestioned faith in his integrity and judgment we have been led into a situation which is intolerable, and it is now sought to lead us further. I know the Senator did not mean to lead us into an intolerable situation. Nevertheless, that is what has happened.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I do not wish to take the floor again. I thought the Senator was about to conclude. I wish to thank the Senator for his very gracious and kind remarks. Later, I shall take the opportunity to reply to the argument which the Senator has made, especially with regard to certain legal phases of the act with respect to which I think the Senator is clearly mistaken.

As to being misled into an intolerable situation, I must say to the Senator from Arkansas that I think the passage of the act was not due to leadership and certainly not to purity on the part of the Senator from New Mexico. However, the situation is not intolerable. It is not intolerable to try to protect the freedom and sanctity of the ballot, and to insure free elections of free men. That is what the Senator from New Mexico is trying to lead to, through the act which was passed and through the pending measure, and not to an intolerable situation.

Mr. MILLER. That is exactly what I am seeking to do. I should like to have free elections. I should like to have elections free from intimidation and domination by heads of departments and assistant heads of departments. Such elections cannot be had under this law. Heads of departments and their assistants may act with impunity.

I welcome the time when the Senator from New Mexico will discuss the Hatch Act to prevent pernicious political activity, because I know that a discussion from him in his fair, able, and comprehensive manner will lead the alert minds of the Senate, many of whom are doing me the honor to listen, to the inescapable conclusion that section 9 ought to be repealed if we are to maintain liberty and political freedom in this country.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I particularly enjoyed the Senator's discussion of section 9. I wish to ask him a question or two with reference to section 12.

Mr. MILLER. Does the Senator mean section 12 of the act?

Mr. CONNALLY. I refer to the proposed new section 12 of the act, found on page 4 of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. That is the section which I am seeking to strike out by an amendment which would also insert a clause repealing section 9 of the original act.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then the Senator ought to redraft his amendment, because the new section 12 is a committee amendment.

Mr. MILLER. That is true; but we are operating under an agreement.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to ask the Senator about not only the legality but the public policy involved in the following language on page 5, line 23, as to the powers of the Civil Service Commission:

If the Commission determines that any such violation has occurred, it shall * * * certify to the appropriate Federal agency the amounts of any loan or grant which should be withheld on account of such violation and whether any such amount should be withheld permanently or temporarily or conditionally.

I am amazed that any Senator should be willing to give the Civil Service Commission that kind of authority. It is not for us to decide, but we are to let the Civil Service Commission determine the amount of the loan or grant which shall be withheld, and whether any amount ought to be permanently withheld, or tantalizingly held up before the agency with the statement, "We will make you do as we say or we will take it back," like a person holding up a bale of hay before a hungry horse—

And whether any such amount should be withheld permanently or temporarily or conditionally.

I do not think we ought to give such power to the Civil Service Commission or any other agency:

If the Commission determines that such violations warrant the removal of the officer or employee by whom it was committed from his office or employment—

Most States have laws to the effect that an officer may not be removed unless he is impeached by the house of representatives and tried by the senate, but we proposed to give the States a much more efficient method of removing their officers. We propose to take the matter out of their hands and put it in the hands of the Civil Service Commission, so that an officer or employee may be put out over night; and if the agency does not comply with the decision of the Civil Service Commission, we will take the money away from it.

I invite attention to the following language on the same page:

The Commission shall determine and certify to the appropriate Federal agency an additional amount to be similarly withheld from a loan or grant to a State or local agency within such State.

Then the language on page 6, line 23:

and prescribe such permanent or temporary withholding thereof and such conditions with respect thereto as in its judgment are sufficient to prevent violations of this section—

And so forth. Whose judgment? The judgment of State authorities? No. The judgment of the Congress? No. But the judgment of the Civil Service Commission.

As in its judgment are sufficient to prevent violations of this section or evasion of its purposes.

Then on page 7 the bill continues:

The Commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable procedure and rules and regulations as it deems necessary to execute its functions under this section.

I am amazed to find language of that kind in a bill in any legislative body, to say nothing of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I should like to observe, in reply to the suggestion made by the Senator from Texas, that I am not rushing to the defense of section 12, for I am proposing to strike it from the bill. Let me, however, call the attention of the able Senator from Texas to the fact that, horrified, as he rightfully is, at the attempt to grant power to the Civil Service Commission, I should like to have the Senator turn his mind to section 9 of the Hatch Act and he will find there——

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator I have not that before me, but I think I sympathize with him in his attitude toward section 9.

Mr. MILLER. I do not need sympathy; I need votes, that is what I need.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas sometimes votes as he sympathizes.

Mr. MILLER. I agree most heartily in that statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator about another clause on page 7, following what I quoted a moment ago. I refer to the clause reading:

Any determination made by the Commission under this section shall be final and conclusive upon all accounting and other officers of the United States and all other persons.

I presume on the men who are kicked out of office it is final and conclusive also. In my State if a man sues another for more than $20 he has a right to appeal to some court, but under this measure when the Civil Service Commission acts it is all over; there can be no appeal; no responsibility in anybody; but the action is "final and conclusive upon all accounting and other officers of the United States and all other persons." I agree with the Senator that section 9 is too strong, but I am not prepared to go as far as the Senator from Arkansas when he wants to include State officers in section 2.

Mr. MILLER. I am merely making a suggestion, I may say to the Senator, and I do not think the Senator from Texas would object to a prohibition against a State officer using his executive authority in a political way.

Mr. CONNALLY. The people of a State through their legislature should determine that question.

Mr. MILLER. That is true; but they are spending Federal money. However, I do not care to become involved in that phase of the argument, but, to say the least, it would be tenable.

In connection with what the able Senator from Texas said in reference to the Civil Service Commission and to the finality of their decrees and findings, let me again call attention to section 9. It prohibits a man who speaks to you and knows you from taking an "active part in political management or in political campaigns." What is an "active part in political management or political campaigns"? That is another one of those mysterious terms that may be defined by the man who is exempted. If John Smith, an employee, should go to the campaign headquarters of a United States Senator who was seeking reelection and who was obnoxious to the assistant head of the assistant to the assistant head or some other policy-making official here, what would happen? Off would go John Smith's official head, and there would be no appeal.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. May I point out to the Senator that if he will refer to page 5 of the bill he will find that John Smith, so to speak, would not even know what he was charged with.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator refers to the portion of the bill in italics?

Mr. DANAHER. I refer to the portion on page 5, lines 15 to 19, inclusive.

Mr. MILLER. That is what I want to get rid of; I want to get rid of that section entirely; and if it were eliminated we would stop much argument.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have enjoyed the very persuasive argument of my distinguished friend from Arkansas, and express pride and satisfaction that Kentucky contributed so much to his learning and early training. I think the Senator from Texas has criticized one of the best provisions of the whole bill. Some of us who have recently been Governors of States have had to deal with various boards and commissions, and always just before election, if we were not in accord with existing conditions, we were threatened with the withdrawal of public funds which, under certain statutes, come to the States to be matched by the States.

If I were in an executive position in my State now, I will say to the Senator that I would much prefer to deal with the Civil Service Commission or some unbiased, nonpartisan, honest agency that undertook to decide on the merits than to have some bureau or agency here telephone me once a week and say, "If you do not do thus and so, or if you do not line up thus and so, you will lose the funds." That kind of thing gets very tiresome and monotonous.

We will mistake the temper of the American people if we do not reach the conclusion the Senator from New Mexico has reached, because, obviously, he has seen a vision and realizes that the people all over America are weary—it makes no difference whether it is Federal money or State money—of having the money of the taxpayers of America spent to have men elected to public office. If we do not clear up that situation some of these days the people will have a real revolt, and they will clear it up for us.

I am going to support the bill of the Senator from New Mexico for the reason that at one time I had some opportunity and some reason I thought to complain about the use of Federal employees against a candidate in an election, but I have no right to impose conditions on a Federal employee that I would not like to impose upon one who works for the State. The money we are spending, it must be remembered, is the money collected from the taxpayers of America who now pay every year more than they can afford; they need the money to be used for the purposes for which they pay taxes, and that is not to perpetuate anybody in office in the States or in the Federal Government. If we mistake the temper of the people and do not realize that they are determined, the time will come when they will ferret you out and you can be sure "your sins will find you out."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the statement of the able Senator from Kentucky reveals exactly the error into which the Senate has fallen and is the best argument, as the Senator will realize if he will study the Hatch Act, why section 9 should be repealed. I will go just as far as will anyone else to prevent the use of official influence or official authority to control elections.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I go further and say that every man who holds an office, whatever it may be, and who for any reason expends the money of the people of America in the several States, should come under the law. I do not see any reason to include the little fellow and leave a policy-making official or an executive or administrative official free to use the money of the people of America to perpetuate himself or others in public office. I suspect that the Senator from New Mexico made the exemptions because he realized, perhaps, that he could not get his bill passed without them, and I imagine he will be just as willing as would any other Senator to take them all in and have it generally understood in the future that men who run for public office in the United States of America shall finance themselves and run on their record and quit spending the public money.

Mr. MILLER. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as the Senator from Kentucky referred to me, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Kentucky must have read the original bill, for there were no exemptions in it, and the only exemptions included were placed there because they had to be provided for certain policy-making officers, who, as a rule, hold political offices and have to go out and be active.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas allow me to make an observation?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. We are trying to eliminate the use of Federal appropriations for political purposes. Does not the Senate know that we make them for political purposes? For heaven's sake, why not start at the root of the evil, the universal impoverishment of the United States to the tune of $40,000,000,000 to do what? If we are going to stop to clean house, let us stop where the dirty work begins. We have no constitutional right to pour out billions of dollars for relief, for social security, and old-age pensions. You know, you are doing it to buy votes, and then come here and try to shut off those who are administering it—the little fellows. Let us start where the devilment begins, and stop it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I do not want the issues in this case obscured by any extraneous matter. Let me again, if I may do so without appearing petulant, suggest that we should not make the same mistake in the consideration of this bill that we made in the enactment of the original Hatch Act.

I do not think a majority of the Senate would have voted for the original act upon a thorough analysis of it. Let us confine this proposed legislation to what we want it to be. Let us confine it to a prohibition against the use of official authority, of official intimidation and coercion, for the protection of the man on relief, and for the protection of the man who is dependent upon the Government and upon the appropriations of Congress for a livelihood.

Let us protect him, but at the same time let us protect the citizens of the country who are working for the Government, and give them the same rights that you and I exercise. We can do that in this case by repealing section 9, by adopting this amendment, and then giving consideration to section 2 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas offer his amendment?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In lieu of the language beginning with line 15, on page 4, and extending down to and including line 18, on page 7, it is proposed to insert the following:

Section 9 of the act entitled, "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, is repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas to the committee amendment.

Mr. MINTON rose.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I hope there will not be a vote on that amendment this afternoon. Some of the Members of the Senate are absent, and when the proper time comes I shall ask that the amendment go over until tomorrow; but I see that the able Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] is now on his feet, and I think he desires to address the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, it was not my intention to ask for a vote on the amendment this afternoon. I understand that several Senators would like to be heard first, and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] a while ago served notice that he would like to discuss the Hatch Act, which discussion will be of benefit to us. I had no intention of asking for a vote on the amendment at this time. I merely wanted to have the amendment before the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate the position of the able Senator; but the Chair was about to put the amendment to a vote.

Mr. MILLER. The Chair was just pressing for the transaction of business, as he had a right to so do.

Mr. President, in this connection, while I have the floor, I may say that if the amendment I have proposed shall be adopted I expect then to offer an amendment to strike out sections 13 and 15 of the bill, because they will obviously become unnecessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] to the committee amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: I was out of the Chamber. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], which has just been stated, to the committee amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Legislative Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bankhead	Bulow	Chandler
Andrews	Barbour	Byrd	Chavez
Ashurst	Barkley	Byrnes	Clark, Idaho
Austin	Bilbo	Capper	Clark, Mo.

Harrison	McKellar	Schwellenbach	Wheeler
Hatch	McNary	Sheppard	White
Hayden	Maloney	Shipstead	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. DANAHER and Mr. MINTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Indiana if he has some question to ask. Otherwise, I should like to hold the floor for a few minutes, if I may.

Mr. President, some time earlier I offered an amendment with reference to a provision for a hearing, not only as to any person accused of violating any provision or clause of this bill, but also to require notice to be given to any affected State agency.

Mr. President, the principle involved of giving notice to an accused, one who would be under such penalty as is contemplated by this bill, is so perfectly clear and so ingrained in our law that even the thought of its being omitted would be repugnant to all of us. It has previously been discussed today, and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], in charge of the bill, has had a copy of it, as I submitted it to him. I believe there can be no objection, either in principle or in fact, to the pending amendment; and under the parliamentary situation as stated by the clerk today I understand that since the pending question, other than the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], is an amendment offered by the committee itself to the pending bill, and since my amendment seeks to amend the committee amendment, I ought at this time to ask unanimous consent to be permitted to call up and offer my amendment which now is on the table, if that be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will advise the Senator from Connecticut that he does not need unanimous consent to call up his amendment. His amendment is a perfecting amendment to certain language which the Miller amendment would strike out. Therefore, it is in order for the Senator from Connecticut to offer his amendment without obtaining unanimous consent.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Chair. I feared a conflict between the Miller amendment and mine. I ask that my amendment, which is on the table, be read by the clerk, and I offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 18, after the word "shall," it is proposed to insert the following:

> Forthwith by registered mail give notice to any such officer or employee and to the State or local agency employing such officer or employee of the pendency of the charge, in which notice shall be set forth a summary of the alleged violation and of the time and place for a hearing upon said charge, at which hearing (which shall be not earlier than 10 days thereafter) either the officer or employee or the State or local agency, or both may appear with counsel and be heard, whereupon said Commission shall—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LUCAS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. Is that an amendment to section 9, or section 12?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is an amendment to section 3 of the bill, or the proposed amendment to section 12 of the Hatch Act.

Mr. LUCAS. I understood the Chair to say that this was an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; it is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, under article VI of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States we find this statement of our fundamental rights:

> In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

I recognize that this particular alleged violation is not criminal in nature, but it is penal, and because the question of fundamental rights is involved, it seems to me that the law should specifically provide for a hearing. The thought involved in my presentation of the matter has been thoroughly submitted, the Senator from New Mexico I am quite sure is in accord with me that the perfecting amendment should be agreed to, and I will not further take the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] to the committee amendment.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I wish to take a few minutes to address myself chiefly to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER]. In my judgment, the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas draws the line of cleavage just where it ought to be drawn if we desire to keep within the title of the original Hatch Act, namely, to condemn certain pernicious political activities.

I will go as far as any man in the Senate to condemn coercion, intimidation, undue influence, or the oppression of voters in an election. I will go further in that regard than I think the Senator from New Mexico has gone in the original Hatch Act, or in the proposed amendment to the Hatch Act, which is now before the Senate.

I join the Senator from Arkansas in his eloquent appeal of this afternoon to the effect that we all want clean elections. There is not a Senator who is not opposed to coercion, to undue influence, and to the intimidation of voters.

When the original Hatch Act went quietly through this Chamber, and got by us all without any consideration, we thought that what the Hatch Act was dealing with was coercion, intimidation, the oppression, especially of the poor, unfortunate people on the W. P. A. rolls. At that time we had heard a great deal about the predicament of the workers on W. P. A., how they had been subjected to oppression here and to pressure there, and to coercion and intimidation in the matter of their votes. The country and the Congress of the United States were all outraged at the stories which came to us about the attempt to use Federal pressure and influence, particularly on the W. P. A. employees.

When the Hatch bill, therefore, came before the Senate, we all thought it carried provisions which looked to the extermination of coercion, intimidation, and undue influence. We thought that was the kind of a bill we were passing. But we woke up to find that the law had in it provisions which had never received any consideration at the hands of the Senate, provisions which had nothing at all to do with intimidation or coercion or undue influence of voters, provisions which had to do only with the exercise of the God-given right of every American citizen to support whomever he wanted to support in a political campaign.

Mr. President, the curse of democracy is that it is not possible to get people interested in democracy to the extent of going to the polls and voting, and here it is proposed by legislation to outlaw active and vigorous parties which are interested in the politics and the government of this country.

The Hatch bill was so framed that it covered not only pernicious political activities, but it included all political activities, and we sought by the measure to make a catch-all, covering not merely those who were oppressing and intimidating and using undue influence upon the voters of this country, but we took the voters who voluntarily wanted to go forth and do something in a political campaign and put their jobs in jeopardy, merely because they took part in a political campaign. They had not committed any other offense and they had not threatened to commit any other offense, yet we sought to say to them that they should not take any part in a political campaign, forsooth, because they held political jobs.

Mr. President, the Hatch Act, as the Senator from Arkansas so plainly pointed out this afternoon, contains many good provisions. There is not a Senator on the floor of the United States Senate who wants to destroy or weaken it, but many of us would make it go further.

The Miller amendment, in my judgment, draws a line between those provisions which condemn intimidation and coercion and the oppression of voters, and the voluntary action of voters. In other words, the Miller amendment would preserve every part of the Hatch Act which is directed at condemning the things we all want to condemn, that is, coercion and oppression and undue influence upon voters, but it says to the person who wants to go out voluntarily, not with intimidation, not with coercion, not with oppression, to take part in a political campaign, that he shall have the right to do so, and that no one shall say him nay. That, in my judgment, is what the Miller amendment would do.

It would draw the line between force and voluntary action. It would condemn force, but would permit a man to go out in a political campaign and exercise voluntarily his American right to be for whomever he wants to support in a political campaign.

Mr. President, is that pernicious? Where is the Senator who will rise in his place and say to me that an American citizen who participates in the democratic process by taking part in an election is engaged in a pernicious activity? It is not pernicious; it is an act we ought to encourage. We ought to encourage the people of this country to take part in the democratic process, instead of discouraging them and punishing them. All the Miller amendment would do would be merely to separate the things we all agree upon from the things we are all agreed should not happen.

Mr. President, I say that we are all against coercion. If we are against coercion we should be against the pending bill in all its aspects, because the bill is a bill of coercion. The bill, according to the words of the Senator from New Mexico, is not a bill which looks to the handing out or the withholding of Federal funds upon certain conditions, but rather to bringing about, as he said in one of his statements this afternoon, the withholding of funds because we want to bring about a certain result in the States among State employees.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I do not want my position to be misunderstood. I am afraid the statement the Senator has just made is not quite clear. The certain result to which I referred, using that term, I think I later explained, but to make it clear what I do desire to accomplish by this measure, and by the means of withholding funds, because that happens to be the only means I know of, I want applied to employees in the States to whom the Federal Government makes contributions exactly the same restrictions against political activities which we have applied to our own employees. That is exactly what I am trying to do, and if that is coercion, so be it.

Mr. MINTON. Very well. If I understand the Senator correctly, by this bill he does not want to withhold Federal funds. Hs is not concerned about withholding Federal funds from the States. What he is concerned with is to obtain a certain result in the States which everyone admits is purely a State matter.

Mr. President, let us see if the bill which the Senator from New Mexico has offered to us is coercive. It provides that if someone who is employed in a State office, or an employee in an administrative department of the State, shall, forsooth, play some politics, and someone finds it out and reports it, we will say, to the Department in Washington which may be contributing some Federal funds to the department in which he is employed back in the State, then it becomes the duty of the Civil Service Commission here in Washington to investigate the matter. To determine what? Whether the funds shall be cut off? Oh, no.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let us assume that a State gets some road money. That money is allocated on a formula, supposedly, of need and other things. I do not remember the formula now, but we give the State that money on the theory that it needs some roads, but if someone connected with the system plays a little politics, why then——

Mr. MINTON. Then the State does not need any roads.

Mr. CONNALLY. It does not need any roads, and the money is withheld. I object to that kind of coercion. The use of the power of giving or withholding money is the worst sort of coercion. If a State does not need money for roads, do not give it any, but if it needs it, why should one who is not violating the law and needs to ride over the roads be penalized because some other man was politically active? Mr. President, I cannot see the justice of such a policy.

Mr. MINTON. I agree entirely with the Senator from Texas. I want to show in a minute or two that this measure is coercive.

Let us say that the man in question is employed in the highway department in my State, which receives money from the Federal Government; that he has been playing a little politics there, and someone reports him. Oh, there will be plenty of snoopers around who will make such reports to Washington. Do not worry about that; there will be plenty of that done. They may want to get his job or they may want to embarrass him in some other way. So they will report that an employee of the highway commission in Indiana played a little politics. Then does the Civil Service Commission investigate to determine whether something has been done there which would justify cutting off the fund? Oh, no. It investigates to find out if a little politics has been played there, and then the Civil Service Commission will say, "We will cut off so-and-so much of your funds because somebody played a little politics on the highway."

Is that all? No; that is not all. It might be all right if the bill did not go any further. It might be a standard by which we could all agree to operate. But that is not all. It is provided that the Civil Service Commission shall certify to the appropriate Federal agency the amount of any loan or grant involved, and whether any such amount shall be withheld on account of such violation, and whether any such amount shall be withheld permanently or temporarily. It is a question of whether the loan shall be cut off permanently, or temporarily, or conditionally, and, as a Senator said a little while ago, dangle it before their eyes like a bundle of oats before a mule.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator know that that is being done now?

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator know that it is being done now?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; that funds are being cut off from various States by boards and bureaus and commissions? That will not be done if and when the bill is passed. It is being done now. I suggest the case of Ohio, which did not get its relief funds a short while ago.

Mr. MINTON. That situation is on an entirely different basis, as I will attempt to show in a little while. What I was attempting to show, before I was interrupted, was that the bill is coercive. Those enforcing its provisions will coerce action. They will not be concerned about cutting off the Federal funds. They will not be concerned about conserving the Federal funds. They will not be concerned about whether people in Indiana need more roads or not. They will not be concerned with that at all. They will cut off the funds—to do what? To obtain certain political results in a State, in a field that the Federal Government has no right to enter.

Mr. President, after it has been determined how much shall be withheld, and after it has been determined whether it shall be done permanently or whether it shall be done conditionally, then another consideration may be taken up. If the Commission determines that the violation warrants the removal of the officer or employee in question, then the Commission shall withhold more appropriations until he is discharged.

Mr. President, is that coercion? Is that handling of Federal funds looking to their wise expenditure in the States we want to help? No; that is coercion. It is desired to obtain a political result. It is desired to affect an election. It is desired to affect the activities of the employees of States.

Mr. President, more is desired. It is desired to go into the States and claim the right of the Federal Government to discharge employees of the States. Is that coercion? It is the worst kind of coercion. Is that all? Oh, no; that is not all.

If the Civil Service Commission determines that an employee has offended, he must lose his job. The Senator from New Mexico has not provided any protection to him, as to whether or not he should be heard, or should have the right of appeal. But the Senator from Connecticut has offered an amendment which may give the man a little protection. But when the fellow has been discharged, are we done with Federal coercion of the employees of the State? The Senator is not satisfied. He screws down the screws a little tighter, and the Civil Service Commission may do what? It may provide that the man who has been discharged shall be blacklisted for 18 months in his own State, and he cannot get a job anywhere in his own State for 18 months. For what purpose? In order to coerce and bring about a certain result in the State. It cannot be for any other reason. That is all it is for.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have just returned to the city. Although I am a member of the committee which had the bill under consideration, I was not able to sit with the committee in its hearings on the measure.

Let us say, a State officer of some kind comes within the provisions of the bill, and let us say the Civil Service Commission decides that he should be discharged. Of course, he would have to be discharged under the State law, I assume, according to the provisions of the measure. How impartial would the board trying him be, or the legislature, or whoever had to oust him?

How impartial would the trial be, and how fair, if on one hand the trial board was faced with the threat from Washington that all the money or a part of the money would be cut off by reason of that political activity, and on the other hand the public was howling and clamoring and saying, "For God's sake do not let the money be cut off; discharge that man and do so quickly"? What kind of a chance would he have of holding his place under such circumstances?

Mr. MINTON. He would have about the same chance that a snowball would have in the proverbial place.

Mr. President, let me read a little further from this measure designed to bring about purity in politics, this bill which is so virtuous that those who oppose it have aspersions cast upon them. I now read from page 6, paragraph (c).

(c) In determining the amount of loans or grants to be withheld under subsection (b) on account of violations of subsection (a), the Commission shall take into account the nature of such violations and the circumstances under which they occurred—and shall fix such amounts and prescribe such permanent or temporary withholding thereof and such conditions with respect thereto, as—

To do what?—

as in its judgment are sufficient to prevent violations of this section—

And what is this section? It is the section dealing with persons who hold political jobs and take a little interest in politics.

And so, we see that this measure is a coercive one, designed and intended to coerce the State and the State employees, in order to accomplish a result which we on the floor of the United States Senate think we would like to accomplish.

The question now arises, Have we the right to go into a State and dismiss the employees of the State? Obviously no. Have we the right to go into a State when an election is about to take place involving no Federal office, and say to the State employees, "You cannot take part in the democratic process in politics?" Have we a right to do that? Obviously we have no right to do it. But now it is proposed to do it. How? By means of a measure whose provisions coerce a result that could not be obtained by acting under any authority which the Federal Government has under the Constitution.

In other words, we are trying to do in an indirect and coercive manner something we have not the power to do directly in the first instance. We have no constitutional power—and the Senator from New Mexico will not contend for a minute that we have—to tell the States on what conditions they shall discharge their employees. We have no right to go into the States and control State elections. But what do we propose to do? We propose to use the Federal power to give or withhold money in order to bring about the things we have no power under the Constitution to bring about directly.

Mr. President, that very thing has been condemned by the Supreme Court of the United States all along the line. It is a well-recognized doctrine in the decisions handed down by the Supreme Court that the Federal Government may not go into a State and exercise in that State a power that is not warranted by the Constitution in order to coerce the State into doing something which the Federal Government itself could not do. Let me cite some decisions on that question.

The Federal Government has the taxing power, and it exercises that taxing power with reference to narcotics, but in the case of Linder v. United States (268 U. S. 5), the law was so broadly drawn that a doctor was indicted for prescribing narcotics to his patients, and he was convicted. The case was brought to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States said, "Yes; you have the taxing power, you have the right to establish this penalty, but you have no right to control the practice of medicine in the State of Washington." The Supreme Court said that the Federal Government has no right to control the practice of medicine in the States, and that it may not use the taxing power to coerce the kind of practice of medicine in the States that the Federal Government wishes to bring about. The Supreme Court turned Dr. Linder loose. This is the law laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States:

Congress cannot, under the pretext of executing delegated power, pass laws for the accomplishment of objects not entrusted to the Federal Government. And we accept as established doctrine that any provision of an act of Congress ostensibly enacted under power granted by the Constitution not naturally and reasonably adapted to the effective exercise of such power but solely to the achievement of something plainly within the power reserved to the States, is invalid and cannot be enforced.

So the Supreme Court of the United States held that because the Federal Government had no power to control the practice of medicine in the State of Washington, it might not do so indirectly by the taxing power. I say that we have no power to control purely State elections in the States, and we have no power to say under what conditions a State shall discharge an employee. Yet, through the power which we have to grant or withhold Federal contributions to a State, it is proposed that we shall coerce the State into doing what we have no power to compel the State do in the first instance. The Supreme Court has always said that the Congress of the United States has no power to do so.

A more recent case, which Senators will recall, was the case decided by the Supreme Court a few years ago declaring the A. A. A. Act unconstitutional. In that case the Supreme Court said that the power to confer or withhold unlimited benefits is the power to coerce or destroy.

The Court further said in that case, in speaking of the act:

> At best it is a scheme for purchasing with Federal funds submission to Federal regulation of a subject reserved to the States.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wish to be sure that I correctly understand the Senator. Did he quote the decision of the Supreme Court in the A. A. A. case?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Was that not the subject which he so ably and eloquently discussed on the floor of the Senate one day?

Mr. MINTON. Yes. Unfortunately, however, I am not the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court still writes the law of this land, and not I. The Senator knows that.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to direct a question to the Senator from Indiana on a proposed amendment which I drew, with reference to page 4, line 20. I should like to read it to the Senator. It is brief:

> After the word "election" in line 20, insert: "or the nomination of any candidate for any office mentioned in section 2."

The effect of the amendment would be to limit the entire operation of section 12 to the Federal officers listed in lines 18 to 22 on page 2 of the bill. Would such an amendment meet the objections which have been argued by the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; if it were confined to elections in which Federal officers are elected. However, the Senator from New Mexico would never agree to such an amendment, because section 2 already takes care of that question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No Federal officers are elected except the President and Vice President—through the electors—and Members of Congress. Therefore the provision would be meaningless.

Mr. MINTON. I will leave the Senator from New Mexico to handle the amendments to his bill. I am not interested in them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator does not mean to intimate that he is not interested in the proposal suggested, that Federal funds ought not to be used for the purpose of electing State officers, any more than for electing Federal officers. The legislation goes a little further than I thought it was going at the time. We had the same question under consideration last year in connection with the relief measure, and I secured the adoption of an amendment in the Senate making the prohibition applicable also to State employees who are paid in whole or in part out of Federal funds. However, it seems to me that it is just as virtuous and just as fair to provide that State officers or Federal officers paid out of the Treasury of the United States shall not be allowed to take a pernicious part in the election of State officers as it is to make such provision in connection with the election of Federal officers. The Senator does not mean to say that he is indifferent toward that distinction, does he?

Mr. MINTON. I am perfectly willing to let the bill include anybody engaged in really pernicious political activity. By that I mean coercion or intimidation of voters or taking unfair advantage of any voter. I am in favor of that kind of legislation, whether it be with relation to a State election, a Federal election, or any other kind of an election. I will go as far as the Senator from Kentucky, the Senator from New Mexico, or anyone else in order to punish intimidation, coercion, and overreaching of the voter. I will go as far as anybody on that score.

Mr. President, what I was trying to say is that the bill is a coercive measure. As the Supreme Court said in the cases to which I have referred, it is an attempt by the Federal Government to go into the State and compel the State to do something which the Federal Government could not compel by any act which the Federal Government might pass.

The Supreme Court says that may not be done; and yet a measure which should protect the people against coercion, intimidation, and oppression is founded on coercion and oppression.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I take it that under the constitutional authority we have no right to go into the States and require the States to set up a standard of merit.

Mr. MINTON. I do not think so. I do not think this bill touches that question.

Mr. HATCH. Then the Social Security Act would be unconstitutional.

Mr. MINTON. Not at all, because the Supreme Court has held that under the Federal power there is justification for the existence of social security and the payment of social-security funds to States. Therefore, there is valid reason for the Federal Government going into that field. There being valid reason for the Federal Government going into that field, under the Constitution of the United States it may establish any kind of regulations it wishes. That is entirely different from the Federal Government going in where it has no right to go in the first instance and trying to coerce in the States a result which it could not bring about by its own constitutional power in the first instance. There is a real distinction between such cases and the bill which the Senator from New Mexico is trying to foist upon the country today.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator says there is a clear distinction between the cases, but I am unable to see it. The Federal power is the contribution of funds by the Federal authority in the one case just as in the other. The Federal Government enters into the picture in both cases through the contribution of funds.

Mr. MINTON. But the Senator is trying to coerce the States.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. In the act to which the Senator refers as my act, there is nothing like the coercion there is in the other act to which I refer. The Hatch Act includes only one thing, which the other act also includes among many other things; but, according to the Senator's view, the other act is constitutional, while the Hatch Act is unconstitutional.

Mr. MINTON. Yes; because in the case of social security the spending of the money is directed to the public, for which the Social Security Act was written. The money is distributed among those entitled to social security. On the other hand, the Senator's act is not directed at the distribution of Federal money for the building of roads, for example. We must look to the purpose for which the money was given in the first instance. The Senator from New Mexico is spending the money to control elections, and to disfranchise people, and make criminals of them, and put their jobs in jeopardy. That is the kind of coercion that the bill sponsored by the Senator from New Mexico would foist upon the people of the country.

So, Mr. President, I again direct your attention to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

That amendment would simply take out section 9 of the original Hatch Act by a repealer which the Senator from Arkansas would insert in place of section 12 of this bill, which would take out section 12 and all that follows it in italics in the pending bill. In other words, as I said in the beginning, it clearly draws the line between acts of force and oppression and coercion on the one hand, and on the other hand, voluntary action of which we all approve. So, Mr. President, by adopting the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas we can accomplish everything that all of us want to accomplish; namely, we can preserve the good things that were in the original Hatch Act and take out the things which violate the fundamental principles of the democratic process.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MARCH 5, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Master conceived without sin, our minds are darkened and confused. More and more enable us to seek the philosophy of Jesus of Nazareth and the loving wisdom of His heart. He whose nature is spirit, whose character is love, can only be discovered by spiritual vision and known by the loving heart. We pray that the voice of the Divine One, whose seat is in the bosom of the Almighty, may be heard by this stricken world. We thank Thee, heavenly Father, for His unsearchable riches which are measured by His holy nature. We beseech Thee to give us the vision of the consummation of His plan into which all lives and institutions are to be built and unto Him be glory forever. Forever shall His praise go up; forever shall His blessing come down. We are humble blessed Lord, as human speech, time-colored, breaks down as the anthem of praise falls into the eternities. O grant that earth may put off her garments of weariness and clothe herself to rejoice in the courts of the ever-living God. In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

H. Con. Res. 46. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of additional copies of the hearings held before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, current session, on the joint resolution (H. COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

MARCH 5, 1940.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Certificates of election in due form of law of the following Representatives-elect to the Seventy-sixth Congress to fill vacancies have been filed in this office, viz:

District and State	Representative-elect	Predecessor
Seventeenth: Ohio	J. Harry McGregor	William A. Ashbrook.
Twenty-second: Ohio	Frances P. Bolton	Chester C. Bolton.

Very respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.
By H. NEWLIN MEGILL.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

Mrs. BOLTON and Mr. MCGREGOR appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman who has just taken her oath of office is the first woman from the State of Ohio to sit in the Congress of the United States. This is a historic event for the great State of Ohio and for the Nation. She is not unknown to the Capitol. Her distinguished predecessor, her husband, the late Chester Bolton, was beloved by all of us in the Congress, where he served with distinction. Her record will be a great one because of her knowledge of public affairs. While from a partisan standpoint we of the majority party may have wished another result, the electorate of the Twenty-second District of Ohio have spoken. We abide the result. I rise at this time to extend a welcome to Mrs. FRANCES BOLTON personally and, I am sure, on behalf of my Democratic colleagues from the State of Ohio, many of whom personally are acquainted with the gentlewoman, who has just taken her seat. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the two new Members from Ohio appreciate very much what our distinguished colleague from Cleveland, Judge SWEENEY, has had to say. I am happy to say to them also that at no time since I have been a Member of this House do I remember of an induction of new Members attended by any more genuine felicitation than that which is evidenced here today. These two new Members come to us as victors in a contest, but the membership on both sides of the House welcome them with as much sincerity as if they had been elected by the unanimous acclaim of their constituents. On their behalf I want to thank the membership on both sides of the House for their courteous reception, and on behalf of the Republican membership I am happy to welcome them into our ranks, and on behalf of the Republican Party I am proud to say that we feel and believe that the election of these two new Members is a sure harbinger of the result of the general election next November. The people realize the condition in which the country finds itself and they are going to restore the Government to a course of safety and sanity. [Applause.]

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, while I do not know both the new Members from my State who have just been sworn, I am very well acquainted with the new Member from the Twenty-second District. I predict for her a useful and notable career in the office for which she has just qualified. Mrs. BOLTON has a sincere desire to serve the ends of justice and has ability, which I know will be recognized in due time. Although we do not always agree and do not always see eye to eye, I know the gentlewoman from the Twenty-second District well enough to say in advance that she will give a good account of herself. I am sure that we shall all take pleasure in cooperating with her. While, as I have already said, I am not acquainted with the new Member from the Seventeenth District of Ohio, I have no doubt of his desire to do what he believes will be for the best interests of the American people, and therefore greet him as a colleague and assure him of my best wishes. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in two respects, first, on the subject of ancient and modern Greece; and second, on the subject of administrative law, and to include therein an address by John Foster Dulles. I am informed by the United States Government Printing Office that the cost of inserting this address will be $248.

INEQUALITY OF FREIGHT RATES

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an excerpt from the Los Angeles Examiner of February 24 on the subject of inequality of freight rates.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I am inserting in the RECORD today an excerpt from the Los Angeles Examiner of February 24, on the subject of inequalities in shipping rates affecting the Pacific coast.

Cement and other items may be hauled for $2.50 a ton from eastern seaboard cities, New York to Colon, while at the same time the freight rates from Los Angeles are $7 a ton.

If you people would like to see some of the operations of the Panama rail line down there and how that operation is worked out I think it would be a good idea to read this insertion from the Examiner.

[From the Los Angeles Examiner of February 24, 1940]

BOAKE CARTER SCORES LOS ANGELES HARBOR SHIPPING RATE

LOS ANGELES.

To the Honorable HARRY WOODRING,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.; and To Admiral EMORY S. LAND,
Chairman, Maritime Commission, Washington, D. C.

DEAR HARRY AND JERRY: I would like to nominate for occupancy of the dog house once again the Panama Railroad Steamship Co.

You remember, Harry, back 4 or 5 years ago—that was before the Commission was born, Jerry—that evidence in the forms of consignment sheets and bills of lading was produced to show that the Panama Railroad Steamship Co. was carrying American-made goods from New York to the Canal Zone. Then they encouraged transshipment on foreign-flag ships, especially German boats, on down south, ignoring completely the fact that privately operated American-flag ships were available for those transshipments.

Do you remember at that time the Panama Railroad Steamship Co. was running junkets for Congressmen; was operating parallel to the old Colombia Steamship Line and other United States lines in direct competition; cut its freight rates and passenger charges way below what the private operators could charge? And remember the people who knew this condition remarked that that was a hell of a way for the United States Government to encourage private enterprise and the American merchant marine. The Colombia, by the way, had to quit and go out of business.

I remember, Harry, you investigated, and the Panama Railroad Steamship Co. nabobs came back with specious and circuitous arguments, all evading the issue.

Since the Panama Railroad Steamship Co. is owned by the Panama Railroad Co., and the latter is owned by the United States Government—under the direction of the War Department—it seems not unreasonable to me to nominate the steamship company for the dog house again for some new and additional monkeyshines—not to mention loss of private business it is causing to people of many Western and Northwestern States of this country.

The Government intends to widen the locks of the Canal, I take it. This means that there'll be a considerable amount of business for American manufacturers and the American workmen employed by them. Steel, cement, lumber, machine tool makers of the West would like to get a crack at this business just as much as the easterners. They would ship out of Los Angeles to the Canal Zone. But they can't, Harry—the freight rate differential is prohibitive.

Now, Jerry, you explained last November to Senator DOWNEY, of California, that the rates couldn't be equalized, and you quoted a communication from Harry's War Department justifying difference in rates from New York and Los Angeles to the Canal Zone. You, Jerry, disclaimed the Government-owned Panama Railroad Steamship Co. was discriminating against private operation since the real reason, you said, was that Pacific coast ports are farther away from the Canal Zone than New York or Gulf ports.

Now, Jerry, you wouldn't be trying to kid anyone, would you? To try to justify the big difference in rates on the grounds of "distance" is hooey. And, Harry, that goes for the War Department, too, since Jerry was quoting one of your official memos. Maybe you personally didn't have a thing to do with it, but it sounds as though it was written by somebody who didn't know a thing about ocean freight rates, or hoped to fool someone. At any rate, Jerry, being a seaman, you should have known better than to try and palm it off on the public.

From Los Angeles to Balboa the distance is 2,913 miles. From New York to Colon it is 1,974 miles. Your Government-owned Panama Railroad Steamship Line is carrying cement for the new construction on the Canal from New York to Colon at $2.50 a ton. From Los Angeles to Balboa it is $7 a ton. That makes a difference of $4.50 a ton for a difference of 939 miles in distance. Now you, Jerry, say that's justified because some chump in Harry's Department said so.

Then will you explain to the people, Jerry, how come the rates from New York to Seattle, 6,038 miles, and New York to Los Angeles, 4,930 miles, are uniformly the same, with a difference of 1,108 miles? If there's a difference of $4.50 a ton to the Panama Canal Zone because of a difference of 939 miles, why no difference in rates for a discrepancy of 1,108 miles?

Or, Jerry, how about this? Singapore to New York via Suez is 10,172 miles; Singapore to Los Angeles is 7,866 miles. A difference there of 2,306 miles. The rate on crude rubber over the 10,000-mile route is $14 a ton, and over the 7,800-mile route is $13.50 a ton. A difference of 50 cents for 2,300 miles, Jerry—and yet you are trying to kid these westerners out here that it's O. K. for a Government-owned steamship company to resort to below-cost, sweatshop rates because of a 900-mile differential.

But, Harry, here's where you come in. The annual report of the Governor of the Canal to the Secretary of War—that's you—for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, shows your steamship line lost $87,005.35. But the neatest trick is how your Department wipes out that deficit. It does it through operation of the docks in the Canal Zone, all of which are also owned by your Department's Panama Railroad, the same outfit that owns your steamships. These docks kicked in with $1,936,016 in revenue for 1939. This came from a toll of $1 per ton assessed by the Panama Railroad on all cargo entering the Canal Zone. For instance, on every ton of freight out of Los Angeles to the Canal Zone, the private shipper in Los Angeles has to pay a dollar per ton to the Panama Railroad. The Panama Railroad takes that money it levies on private business to pay for the losses it incurs with its own ships, competing against private business at below-cost prices. And the below-cost operation is caused by inefficient operation and low rates allowed the eastern shippers.

Now, if that is what is called encouragement of private enterprise, then I begin to suspect you've both gone New Deal on us.

By the way, the public pays taxes to support the War Department's operations. Some of that dough goes to keep the Panama Railroad out of hock. It seems then that the public is socked twice—through taxes, and by being forced to kick in with another dollar per ton on all private freight.

That, to me, is a good example of the most pernicious form of Government competition with private industry; Government destruction of the very system the Government yells all the time should be maintained. It prevents private industry from pulling its share of the load, which Mr. Roosevelt, your boss, says it should, and bars employment of people who must otherwise remain on relief.

Yours,

BOAKE CARTER.

P. S.—I hope you two fellows don't mind my drawing your attention to this example of Americanism on the part of the Government's War Department and Maritime Commission.—B. C.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include an address I delivered to the League of Republican Women of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I want to just read into the RECORD here, by request, the program for world peace and foreign relations adopted by the foreign relations committee of the American Legion on January 28, 1940, at Indianapolis, Ind.:

The duty confronting your committee is the announcement of a foreign-relations policy which will avert involvement in international disturbances and leave our Nation in its continued enjoyment of peace, with its sovereignty and independence secure. We base this policy upon mandates of national conventions, rather than embark on uncharted courses or express personal opinions upon particular phases of this great problem.

To exert every possible effort to keep our country out of war is the definite mandate of the last national convention of the American Legion. It reads:

"The American Legion views with gravest concern the apparently widespread belief that this Nation must inevitably become involved in the present European conflict. We not only believe that this Nation need not become involved but insist and demand that the President of the United States and the Congress pursue a policy that, while preserving the sovereignty and dignity of this Nation, will prevent involvement in this conflict. The American Legion is not a law body. It has often recommended to the Congress the enactment of legislation establishing a permanent or fixed policy on important national problems. The American Legion has always strenuously advocated that this Nation pursue a policy of neutrality and peace. In the present world crisis world conditions may change so rapidly that a pronouncement by the American Legion at this time on specific legislation might be wholly inadequate in the near future. Therefore, with full confidence in the President and the Congress, we demand that the Congress continue in session during the present grave crisis, and that appropriate action be taken to preserve the peace, sovereignty, and dignity of this Nation, and that our armed forces be expanded immediately to maintain our neutrality."

In furtherance of this and earlier convention mandates, we urge specifically the support of the following:

1. To maintain an adequate national defense, including the principle of universal service.

2. To uphold the principles of nonintervention and noninterference, as embodied in the Monroe Doctrine.

3. To urge continually upon the President and Congress of the United States that they make every effort to prevent our involvement in the present wars, and to cooperate with them to that end.

4. To demonstrate that our involvement in war is not inevitable and must not occur.

5. To combat vigorously propaganda, of whatever kind and from whatever source, designed to break down our neutrality.

6. To strive for the restoration of good faith and nonaggression among men and nations, without which there can be no lasting peace.

We have necessarily stated this program in basic terms because details change with changing conditions. It is also to be noted that by action of the last national convention resolutions relating to Fidac have become inapplicable.

As our contribution toward this goal of permanent peace and safeguard against war, we of the American Legion have pledged ourselves to seek and keep an honest neutrality; to do our own thinking and to analyze propaganda, whether it emanates from abroad or at home; and above all, to safeguard our own security, our own liberties, and our own Constitution against attack, secret or open, whether from within or without.

THE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE,
WILBUR M. ALTER,
Chairman, Denver, Colo.

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration laws, relating to the issuance of immigration visas for admission to the United States for permanent residence and relating to admissions at ports of entry of aliens as immigrants for permanent residence in the United States, that provision of section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1917 (39 Stat. 875), as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 136 (c)), which excludes from admission into the United States "persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude," shall not hereafter be held to apply to Ernestine Huber Neuheller, who is the wife of Fritz Neuheller, an American citizen, on account of a conviction abroad for perjury, the alleged offense having been committed in a civil action where the alien, as a witness, denied for personal reasons, having met the defendant, a friend, at a certain time. The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2161) for the relief of the Pacific Airmotive Corporation, Burbank, Calif.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Pacific Airmotive Corporation, Burbank, Calif., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $940 in full and final settlement of any and all claims against the Government on account of the damage done to an airplane belonging to said corporation by a United States Navy plane September 1, 1938, at Union Air Terminal, Burbank, Calif.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of the bill, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

KEUFFEL & ESSER CO. OF NEW YORK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3769, for the relief of the Keuffel & Esser Co. of New York.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Keuffel & Esser Co. of New York, San Francisco, Calif., branch, the sum of $90. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States arising out of repairs made by such company in June 1935 to an engineer's transit upon the order of the project superintendent of camp SP-8-A, Kingman, Ariz., Civilian Conservation Corps. Such transit was the private property of an engineer employed by the Government on such project and was damaged while in use by such camp.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "camp", insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, further proceedings under the call of the Private Calendar will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 411), which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 411

Resolved, That WALTER A. LYNCH, of New York, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the following standing committees of the House of Representatives, to wit: Enrolled Bills, Elections No. 1, Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and World War Veterans' Legislation.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a resolution from the Boston Marine Society in opposition to the Wheeler-Lea transportation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8745) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue through the balance of the day, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8746), the Department of the Interior appropriation bill, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. Chairman, the subcommittee in charge of the Interior Department appropriation bill, after extended hearings, presented the bill to the full committee and it was reported to the House yesterday. This delay of 24 hours after the bill was reported was decided upon because of requests on the part of several prominent Members on both sides of this Chamber. Personally I think it is a splendid idea. It has given the Members an opportunity to read the hearings and familiarize themselves with the provisions of the bill. Frankly, I hope that this course may be pursued in connection with reporting other appropriation bills.

Before going into a discussion of the bill I want to express my regret that the chairman, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], is unable to be present. Because of temporary illness, he was not able to be with us during the consideration of the bill. He has been a member of the Interior Department subcommittee since the committee was organized, and has served as its chairman since 1932. I am glad to be able to report to you that he is improving, and we are assured that he will be back actively on the job within a very short time.

I want to thank the majority members of the subcommittee for their patience and hard work in sitting through the several weeks of continuous hearings which we held on this bill. They have been most helpful and cooperative and deserve the thanks of the House for the able and efficient service they have rendered.

I want to say further that we have had the finest kind of cooperation from the minority members of the committee. Without meaning to be critical of the past, I can honestly say that we have worked together with greater harmony than ever before. In effect, there has been no majority and no minority in connection with the consideration of this bill.

During recent years there have been 21 new activities transferred to the Interior Department and provided for in this bill. In addition to this number, the recent reorganization plans resulted in the transfer of 4 additional agencies, making a total of 25.

Those four agencies are: The Bureau of Fisheries, the Biological Survey, the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, and the Bureau of Insular Affairs.

The subcomittee has given very careful consideration to every item in the bill and has made numerous small cuts in a great many items, rather than a few drastic cuts in several items, as has been on occasions in the past. An examination of the table at the back of the report will show that there have been reductions in 93 items.

As you know, we have had a lot of trouble with legislative provisions in the past. This year we have striven to keep them to a minimum. I think in the last bill we had 14 legislative provisions. If you will examine the bill, I think you will find only 7, and in each instance the committee felt it was not only advisable but in the interest of economy to include them.

You might also be interested to know that this bill, in number of pages, is the largest appropriation bill we have reported in a great many years, and probably the largest since the organization of the committee in 1921. It covers 144 pages. The hearings are very voluminous, there being 3,617 transcript pages which made 1,910 printed pages. The report on the bill covers 55 pages.

Now we come to the items of the bill, and this is the matter in which most Members are especially interested.

COMPARISON OF APPROPRIATIONS AND ESTIMATE

The first question you will ask is: What is the Budget estimate, and is the bill as the committee reported it under the Budget estimate? Then you will want to know how the bill compares this year with the one of last year. The total Budget estimate considered by the subcommittee amounted to $122,057,464. The committee recommends appropriations totaling $119,071,187. This is a reduction under the Budget estimate amounting to $2,986,277, and the bill is under the 1940 appropriations by $29,789,443. The Budget estimates proposed a cut of more than $29,000,000, which represents a cut of more than 20 percent under the 1940 appropriation. The severe cut in the Budget estimates as submitted added to our task of bringing the bill substantially under the estimates. In line with the policy established by the full committee in consideration of the Independent Offices bill we have deducted all new money for administrative promotions amounting to approximately $170,000. This, of course, does not mean that the lapses which may occur cannot be used for promotions.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am glad to yield to my colleague, a member of the committee.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As for the $170,000 item mentioned by the gentleman I voted against that both in the subcommittee and in the full committee. I have been consistently against its elimination from the Budget estimate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman has been absolutely consistent in that attitude. He told us of it several times while the subcommittee was holding its hearings and stated his position again in the full committee, asserting that he would not support that cut. The gentleman has been very consistent in living up to that declaration. It is well known, however, that it is the policy of the full Committee on Appropriations to deduct all appropriations of new money for promotions this year.

PUBLIC WORKS

The estimate provided funds for public works, including the Bonneville project, Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Bureau of Reclamation, and the National Park Service, totaling $62,394,750. Of these public-works items the committee has recommended a total of $61,556,050, which is a reduction of $838,700 in the Budget estimates.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I notice in a hurried glance at the report that the item for water conservation on certain projects, $5,000,000, was eliminated. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No provision whatever is made for it in this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No direct appropriation has been made, because I believe it was stated that this was to be taken care of at a later date.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is not intended to abandon it, then?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Not at all. The committee feels that it is a very important activity and is very sympathetic to it. Personally, I feel more money should be appropriated for this particular activity for the coming year.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I feel that this kind of work is the best type that can be done, because it is more widely distributed in its benefits.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Water is very important in a great many of these areas, and its proper utilization is always one of the most important things we can consider.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly, and I assure him that there is no thought on the part of any member of the committee to oppose such an appropriation.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Is it not a fact that the unexpended balance has been appropriated for this item?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct; yes; that is true.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I am very much interested in it, and I am glad to know there will be some money left to carry on the work during the coming year. Can the gentleman tell me how much the unexpended balance is?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It is in excess of $2,000,000. That is the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $5,000,000 in the 1940 act.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am informed that the amount unused—or, to put it another way—the amount that is reappropriated is about $2,500,000. Assuming this to be the fact, does not the gentleman believe that Congress ought at least to appropriate $2,500,000 additional to bring it up to the $5,000,000 revolving fund that has been suggested by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Personally, I feel very much that way about it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The following States, I understand, are directly concerned: Arizona, Colorado, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, and Wyoming, under the plan evolved and now known as the Wheeler-Case plan.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is my understanding. I am glad the gentleman mentioned that, for it is a matter with which I personally am very sympathetic and I would be glad to see Congress appropriate the full amount suggested by the gentleman to carry on that work.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I ask how the gentleman feels about an amendment along this line?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. So far as I personally am concerned I would not be in a position to object to it, but I cannot speak for the rest of the committee.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the plan was to provide an amount in another appropriation bill for a continuation of the Wheeler-Case plan?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That may be done. I am not informed as to just what the program is.

Mr. CURTIS. Can the gentleman tell us how much that is?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I cannot give the gentleman the figures, but the committee was advised that the proponents of this proposition hoped to secure a Budget estimate for it in the near future. I shall be glad if that can be done.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

For the office of the Secretary of the Interior and the several activities under his immediate office, the Budget estimate amounted to $6,051,260, which is less than the current appropriation by $1,173,000. This represents a reduction under the Budget estimate of $278,000 and is due mainly to cuts of $200,000 in the estimate for the Bituminous Coal Commission, and $25,000 in the estimate for Personnel Management Administration.

WAR MINERALS RELIEF COMMISSION

The committee has eliminated the estimate of $11,200 for the War Minerals Relief Commission. The committee was advised 3 years ago that this work would be completed at the close of the next fiscal year. Last year we recommended a small appropriation to clear up some new cases that had come to light. The committee feels very strongly that this work should have been completed before now and that it can be completed by July 1, 1940. Therefore the request of the Budget estimate of $11,200 was disallowed.

BONNEVILLE POWER ADMINISTRATION

The Budget submitted an estimate of $6,000,000 for the continuation of construction of the Bonneville project. We have looked into the matter carefully and find that on July 1, next, there will be nearly $3,000,000 unobligated and unexpended for Bonneville from funds heretofore appropriated. So we felt justified in cutting $1,000,000 for the Bonneville estimate. We believe that the amount appropriated will carry the work through the next fiscal year.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE

The committee has increased the estimate for the General Land Office. The committee has recommended $2,187,440. This sum is less than the 1940 appropriation by $154,000. It is in excess of the estimate by $135,940. The increase over the estimate will provide funds approaching the amount made available in recent years for the survey of public lands. Funds of this type provide a great deal of employment and survey work is of great value in connection with the development of public lands. The amount allowed is considerably less than the sum appropriated for this purpose during the 3 previous years. There are several hundred million acres of land in the United States and Alaska that have never been surveyed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This is one department of the Federal Government that turns money back to the Treasury of the United States every year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is true, and I may add it is one of the few departments of the Government that turns in money to the Treasury above its expenditures.

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Next we come to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, where the subcommittee recommended $30,497,736. The Budget estimate totaled $30,953,861. The amount recommended in the bill is less than the 1940 appropriation by $4,217,933 and reflects a reduction in the estimates of $456,125. Frankly, I felt that the cut for the Bureau of Indian Affairs was extremely severe. It had already been cut nearly 20 percent.

For industrial assistance to Indians, which includes the administration of Indian forests, the sale of timber, the employment of Indians in gainful occupations, the development of agriculture and stock raising, arts and crafts, and other activities, we have recommended a total of $1,789,080. This is below the 1940 appropriation by $124,170 and is less than the Budget estimates by $152,140.

The major reductions recommended in this item are as follows:

First. Administration of Indian forests, $41,360.

Second. Development of agriculture and stock raising, $59,480. This is one of the items where I felt the cut was rather excessive.

Third. Revolving loan fund of $50,400.

For construction work in connection with Indian irrigation and drainage works we have made two reductions in the estimate—a cut of $100,000 in the Colorado River project in Arizona and reduction of $25,000 in the estimate of $275,000 for the Flathead project in Montana. We were advised that neither cut will seriously retard the work or prevent the Government from meeting its contractual obligations.

For the construction of roads on Indian reservations we have recommended $2,000,000, which is the sum recommended by the Budget and is $250,000 under the 1940 appropriation. The amount authorized for this purpose by the Hayden-Cartwright Act is as you know, $3,000,000. This money is probably of greater benefit to the Indians than any other single item; at least it affords more employment to the Indians.

I have some figures here which I will insert in the RECORD. In short, it shows that this $2,000,000 will keep nearly 8,000 Indians at work. These figures are as follows:

Road work is performed at approximately 70 jurisdictions, comprising about 200 Indian reservations, with an area in excess of 50,000,000 acres of land located in 22 States. Progress of the work continues to be made, as evidenced by accomplishments during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939:

Roads graded	miles	571.5
Roads surfaced	do	468.3
Roads maintained	do	5,274.6
Bridges constructed		102
Bridges repaired		506
Culverts installed		2,056
People employed		8,374
Man-hours work furnished		3,403,570

In connection with employment of Indians, you may be interested to know that of the 14,000 employees in the Indian Service, in the District of Columbia and in the field, there are 108 Indian employees in the city of Washington and 4,390 Indian employees in the field—a total of 4,498.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, for the construction and repair of buildings the subcommittee recommends $916,000, which is under the Budget estimate by $51,000 and is less than the current appropriation by $1,349,000.

BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

For the Bureau of Reclamation we have recommended a total appropriation from all funds, which means the reclamation fund and the general fund of the Treasury, amounting to $48,214,000, which is less than the 1940 appropriation by $13,903,000 and is in excess of the Budget estimate by $195,000.

It is of interest to observe at this point that of the total reduction of $29,000,000 below the appropriation of last year approximately $14,000,000 or nearly one-half the total cut is due to a reduction in the reclamation appropriation alone.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

In considering the item for the Geological Survey we have recommended a total of $3,586,910. This represents an increase over the current appropriation of $118,910, but it is less than the estimates by $1,247,150. The major reduction in this item is for topographic mapping, which is cut $1,211,690. This reduction is due to the denial of $985,350 for the topographic mapping of areas of strategic value in connection with military activities. The areas were to have been selected by the Secretary of War. The committee is not unsympathetic to this work, in fact, the sentiment after hearing the evidence is that it is of much value as far as defense purposes are concerned, but the committee feels very strongly that any defense measures should be provided for in the proper bill, which, of course, is the military appropriation bill.

The remaining cut in this item of topographic surveys amounts to $225,000 intended for cooperative mapping on a 50-50 basis with the States. We are allowing $275,000 of the Budget estimate of $500,000 for this purpose. The Geological Survey advises us that only $246,000 has been requested for mapping up to the present time. It is extremely unlikely that additional requests for matching between now and July 1 will bring the total demand for this purpose to a sum in excess of $275,000.

BUREAU OF MINES

For the Bureau of Mines, we are recommending a total appropriation of $2,808,460. This is $59,300 less than the appropriation last year and $23,500 under the Budget estimates.

Members of the committee and undoubtedly most Members of the House have received numerous letters protesting against the issuance of monthly forecasts of demand for motor fuel and crude oil, complaint being made that the reports penalize many thousands of independent oil marketers; in other words, that these reports are for the benefit of the large distributors. The facts are just the opposite. The committee has taken occasion to inquire into the question and several statements relative to it were made to the committee by responsible persons. Their testimony appears in the hearings on the bill. The committee was advised by those witnesses that a continuation of the issuance of forecasts is highly desirable, that it acts as a stabilizer for the oil market. It is significant that a vast majority of those objecting to the forecasts are in favor of a demoralized oil market which would enable them to purchase oil from the small refineries at a low price and store it for sale when prices have advanced. A demoralized market is obviously more harmful to the smaller dealer, who does not have the resources to weather a depressed market. The committee recommends continuation of the funds for the issuance of these monthly forecasts.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

For the National Park Service the committee recommended a total of $8,948,770, which was less than the 1940 appropriation by $3,661,252, and $117,770 less than the Budget estimate. The major reductions made by the committee in connection with the Park Service items are as follows:

Under the estimate for national historic parks and monuments, the committee has disallowed $17,000 to begin the administration, protection, and maintenance of the proposed historic site embracing Frederick W. Vanderbilt's estate near Hyde Park, N. Y.

We have also disallowed $40,000 for the construction of a comfort station adjacent to the Arlington Memorial Bridge. The committee actually found that, although there are parks without any sanitary facilities, and although there are many urgent demands for money in the field in several States of the Union, the Bureau of the Budget actually had the unmitigated gall to ask this committee and the Congress to appropriate $40,000 for a marble or granite comfort station for the convenience of persons in Washington who attend outdoor plays and concerts at the Arlington Bridge.

But that is not all. The committee disallowed an appropriation of $28,000 for steam lines from the central heating plant to heat the Lincoln Memorial which is entirely open on the east side. The testimony was that it was thought that if the Lincoln Memorial were heated it might last a few hundred or possibly a few hundred thousand years longer, but we were warned very solemnly that if the Lincoln Memorial is permitted to remain unheated it is likely to deteriorate within the next 50,000 or 100,000 years. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. I am sorry I am so far back here that it is hard for me to hear, but did the gentleman say the committee had cut out the funds for the maintenance of the Hyde Park Library?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; not the Hyde Park Library.

Mr. FISH. The purchase of the Vanderbilt estate?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am sorry about the confusion in the back of the Chamber of a few who desire to carry on a private conversation. Possibly they do not care whether the heat is put on Abraham Lincoln or whether the Vanderbilt estate and name is perpetuated by this Government. But as I stated, the committee disallowed the item of $17,000 for the purpose of establishing a new historic site known as the Vanderbilt estate.

Mr. FISH. Is that in Hyde Park?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is near Hyde Park. The committee has never visited the estate and is not familiar with it. It may be a very desirable thing to do. The fact is that there were many, many such suggestions made to the committee; but with all the other activities we have to take care of, and with the many calls upon the committee for money, we thought that we might be able to get along at least 1 more year without the cost of maintaining this beautiful and gorgeous estate. We did not feel justified in adding to the burdens of the taxpayers this additional item at this time.

Mr. FISH. I am glad to see that the gentleman and his party are standing for economy, particularly at this serious juncture of our affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman.

I was just stating that we have also been so cruel as to refuse to add $28,000 for heating the Lincoln Memorial, which is open on the east side, as we felt it would be rather difficult to heat the whole outside world, and could not make ourselves believe it was a great emergency. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question on that point?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did the Budget carry recommendations for $40,000 for a comfort station under the bridge and also an appropriation for the heating arrangement which the gentleman has mentioned?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am ashamed and chagrined to tell the gentleman that it did, this great Federal Budget that we sometimes think is infallible when we go down to try to get a few dollars for some human needs, such as building a hospital where people are being cared for in shacks or in death traps. We are told that in the interest of economy this cannot be done, but it is no trouble to get a $40,000 estimate for a toilet or rest room under the Arlington Bridge, in order to satisfy the socially elite of the Nation's Capital.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the committee is to be congratulated upon eliminating both of those items.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman. But that is not all the items we eliminated. Now, let us see: We not only refused to put the heat on Abraham Lincoln, but we took the risk of getting in bad with the followers of another great and beloved American, Thomas Jefferson. One hundred and eleven thousand, two hundred and sixty dollars has been deducted from the estimate of $263,760 for the development of grounds adjacent to the

Thomas Jefferson Memorial. The work includes cutting away and filling in the seawall—not only one, but both seawalls—and destroying a lot more cherry trees. We allowed half the amount requested, but the committee felt that at least one radical change that is desired to be made down there could at least be postponed another year because it will not impair the memory of Thomas Jefferson and will be in the interest of economy. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will be pleased to yield to my colleague from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It was also stated, was it not, that after the memorial is completed we will have more cherry trees than we have at the present time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The evidence was that it is proposed to have more cherry trees, eventually, than we now have, but that will be in some far, distant time when those trees are set out and grown. May I call the attention of my colleague to the fact that it was also testified that it is proposed to cut away several hundred in the area where cherry trees are now growing, the excuse being given that some are getting old anyway and could not be expected to live much longer. The refusal of this committee will give those trees one more year's lease on life. We took this position in spite of the fact that another great American, George Washington, is said to have cut down a cherry tree. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. I happen to be a member of the Jefferson Memorial Commission, and I assume the gentleman recognizes that this work must eventually be done, and this is simply to defer the excavation work or the filling in.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Oh, I will say to the gentleman that the committee is not trying to usurp the prerogatives of the gentleman's distinguished Commission, which has done a splendid job, but the committee did feel that this work could be postponed for at least another year without any serious damage.

Mr. CULKIN. It will be done at that time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Of course, I cannot say what the next Congress will do or what the next committee will do. I have my own personal feelings in the matter.

Mr. CULKIN. But unless it is done this year or next year it will leave a permanent scar in the landscape there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Of course, that is a matter of personal opinion. I am not as familiar with it as is the gentleman, but nevertheless without more evidence than we had that it is an emergency, the committee feels that we can postpone this work another year.

Mr. CULKIN. I thank the gentleman.

BIOLOGICAL SURVEY

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. As mentioned earlier in my statement, the Biological Survey was transferred to the Interior Department by Reorganization Plan II. The principal change in this item is an increase proposed by the Budget and allowed by the committee, making $1,000,000 additional available for Federal aid in wildlife restoration. This increase makes a total of $2,500,000 available for this purpose. As you know, this money is derived from the provisions of the revenue bill of 1932, placing a tax on firearms and ammunition. The money is distributed to the States for expenditure under conditions set out in the basic act, the act of September 2, 1937.

The committee added 3 enforcement officers. The Biological Survey asked for 55. The committee also added 2 airplanes for enforcement work in Alaska. One member of our committee who had recently been to Alaska said that, in his judgment, this was the most urgent need insofar as enforcement work there is concerned, as they have practically no highways, and where, we were advised, fur bandits and other undesirables are playing havoc with the wildlife in Alaska.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Of course, this $1,000,000 increase for the Biological Survey will not be reflected in the Treasury statement so far as the deficit is concerned, as the basic law provides that the money collected as a result of this tax can be used only for the purposes mentioned by the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman has stated the situation correctly.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is not going to increase the deficit in any way. It would simply take $1,000,000 more of what has been collected for this specific purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is true, and the sportsmen wanted it. They wanted their money spent in that way.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I notice an item of $60,000 has been cut out for the upper Mississippi Wild Life Refuge. Is that included in the $2,500,000 item mentioned in the committee report, which I assume comes as a result of our paying in a dollar a year for a stamp tax when we buy hunting licenses?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will say to the gentleman in reply that the need for that has ceased to exist as the current appropriation is sufficient to take care of that work.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is another item that I desire to inquire about. That is the item regarding the $141,000 appropriation for the support of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippines. As I understand it, on exports by the Philippines to us of vegetable oils, such as coconut oil and oils of that type, which compete with our own butterfat and farm produce, we charge a 3-percent excise tax, and then we refund that back to the Philippines. Is that true?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Of course, so far as this committee is concerned, we had no testimony concerning the matter. Actually, of course, that is true, but, so far as our bill is concerned, that does not enter into the question. That is a subject for the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The point I make is this: Due to the economic situation the Nation is in today, the need to economize at every point, here is an item of $141,000, and it seems to me in good common sense we should take that out of that excise tax rather than turn it all back to the Philippines. As I understand it, they have not a dollar of debt over there. They have millions of dollars on deposit here which has been collected by us in excise taxes and which we are holding for their account and which the Government of the Philippines is squandering in various ways which are more or less questionable. We tax ourselves to the extent of $141,000 to support the United States High Commissioner to the Philippines and then turn back to them every penny of this excise tax we collect, and we collect it to protect our farmers and then turn it back. What sense is there to that? Let us take this $141,000 out and at least save ourselves that much.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman has certainly given us cause for thought, but it does not belong here. That is a legislative matter that Congress has to take up in a separate way. I will say that the amount appropriated here is approximately the same amount that they had last year. The committee did reduce the estimate $18,000 below the sum requested.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the committee has done a fine job, but I still think it is a matter we could well consider at this time, because it is a Philippine matter, and it is all one problem, is it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I cannot agree that it is a problem for this committee at this time.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman tell me what the committee did with the recreation demonstration project? Last year they were financed through the relief money.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. There were no estimates, as I recall, for any of them. It was hoped that they could be taken care of in some emergency funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I shall have to yield myself 5 minutes more. The Committee is very sympathetic with the matter the gentleman has just mentioned, and I am hopeful that it can be taken care of later.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. CARLSON. The gentleman may have discussed this earlier in his remarks. I refer to water conservation and utility projects. Five million dollars were appropriated in 1940, and I notice it now reads reappropriation, and later the bill provides a $5,000,000 reduction. How does the gentleman explain that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I did discuss that earlier in my remarks. The fact is that there is nearly two million and a half dollars unexpended, and it is reappropriated in this bill. The committee had information that those sponsoring this very worthy matter hoped to get a Budget estimate within a short time for considerably more than the gentleman is asking for, and, as one member of the committee, I am very sympathetic toward it and realize the importance of that work, and I will say again that personally I hope we may be able to secure an additional appropriation.

Mr. CARLSON. I am very glad to get that statement.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I was interested in the gentleman's language in respect to the $40,000 toilet that the Bureau of the Budget recommended and that the subcommittee cut out. I am wondering if my colleague from Oklahoma knows whether any of the personnel on that Budget committee ever lived on a farmstead where they have open barns?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The committee did not go into that very important question that my colleague has just raised, but I am of the opinion that had the gentlemen who are handling the Budget had more of the experience that my colleague and I have had in Oklahoma, they would have been a little more sympathetic toward some items of real importance for needy people rather than the frivolous things for which they did not hesitate to grant Budget estimates.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I was wondering if my colleague, who has made a most helpful explanation, could give us a little further information on the recreational areas. I did not quite get his reply to the query made a while ago.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am glad the gentleman has raised the question, because I probably did not speak as fully about it as I should, as I did not want to take up all the time. We have a great many requests for time.

The committee was disappointed to find that there was not a Budget estimate for these recreational areas and, as my colleague from Missouri knows, we had orders to bring this bill in below the Budget estimates. By that I mean by the Appropriations Committee. All of us are doing our best to economize in every way possible, but as I was about to say, we have discussed the matter and it is our hope and expectation that there will be Budget estimates for a number of these recreational areas. I will be glad to join my colleague from Missouri in requesting such Budget estimates and will go the limit to get the money for this very worthy project.

Mr. NELSON. In case there are no Budget estimates, is it possible that funds may be found elsewhere?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; it is. Emergency funds, I understand, were used for this purpose last year. As a last resort, if we have no Budget estimate, I favor using some emergency funds, and if we cannot do that I am perfectly willing to take the proverbial bull by the horns and make the appropriation that this House feels ought to be made. [Applause.] Does that satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. NELSON. It does. Thank you.

BUREAU OF FISHERIES

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Next is the Bureau of Fisheries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes, and I am going to try to finish within this time.

The Bureau of Fisheries is another activity that has been placed under the Interior Department subcommittee. It was formerly under the Department of Commerce. The Budget includes for this purpose $2,171,360. We are recommending a little over $2,255,575, which is $3,825 less than the 1940 appropriation and $84,215 in excess of the Budget estimates.

One reason for that is the fact that we have made provision for the establishment of three additional fish hatcheries which the Bureau of Fisheries felt was most urgently needed, and the completion of another one. The fact is the Bureau of Fisheries had asked for $182,500 for this purpose, but the subcommittee decided it could get along this year, at least, with $75,000.

The remaining increase of $19,175 is for the scientific personnel of the new vessel Harvard, which is to be put into operation about September 1. The Budget made provision for a crew to operate the vessel, but for some reason the scientific personnel and equipment was overlooked in the estimate. Of course, the vessel could be of no value for research purposes without trained personnel to carry on the work.

The bill provides a total of $1,428,760 for the operation of the activities of the Territories of Alaska, Hawaii, and the Virgin Islands and certain islands in the South Seas. This sum is $250,200 less than the Budget estimate and $143,020 more than the 1940 appropriation. The increase in the current appropriation is due to the meeting of the Territorial Legislatures in Alaska and Hawaii, which will cost $97,000. The expenses of those meetings, which occur biennially, are paid for by the Federal Government in accordance with the basic laws authorizing this expense.

BYRD ANTARCTIC EXPEDITION

We have disallowed the estimate of $250,000 for the so-called Byrd Antarctic expedition to the South Pole. Since this bill was reported yesterday the newspapers have carried the story that $250,000 was disallowed, as requested by the Budget, for the so-called Byrd expedition, and judging from the telephone calls I received this morning, evidently a number of people, including some Members of Congress, are under the impression that it is the purpose of this committee to leave the Byrd party stranded high and dry in the Antarctic and refuse to make any provision for their return. [Laughter.]

It is needless for me to say that such an assumption is not only erroneous and fantastic, but is absolutely untrue. No such thought was in the mind of any member of the subcommittee, nor is there any possible animosity in the committee toward Admiral Byrd, whom we all agree is a great explorer. The committee was greatly surprised to learn from those requesting this additional appropriation that it is expected to make this a continuous appropriation. The committee very carefully went into the question of supplies requisitioned and furnished by the Government for the Byrd expedition, and it was found that the Admiral and his party have sufficient, if not abundant, supplies for at least 18 months, which was to be the period of time for this expedition. If additional money or supplies are needed, the Congress can take care of that later on.

I might add here that those appearing before the committee in support of this item almost shocked the committee when they very frankly told us that they would be back next year for another appropriation and possibly the next year for a fourth appropriation, and that they considered it a permanent matter and that it would be a continuous appropriation. We reminded those who appeared officially for this appropriation that when Admiral Byrd was before our committee personally last year he told the committee that $340,000 added to the amount he expected to raise personally and, that, with the help he expected to get from various departments of the Government, it would be all that he would ask for. The committee at that time considered the request very carefully and decided that the amount asked for was excessive. It refused to make the appropriation. Then, during the closing days of the last Congress, the amount was placed in a deficiency bill.

Admiral Byrd did raise some money of his own and undoubtedly put some of his own money into this expedition, but the Federal Government was pretty kind to him for it furnished him with the ship North Star that had been used in Alaska, and also with the ship the U. S. S. Bear, both boats being well adapted and equipped for this special purpose. It has been necessary in this bill to add $10,000 to repair one of these ships and to add another $25,000 in order to take care of transportation costs in Alaska where we are now shipping a lot of supplies for the Indian Service by airplane. So the Federal Government has cooperated in a very effective way. As I said a moment ago, Admiral Byrd took with him sufficient supplies to keep his expedition at the South Pole for at least 18 months.

It seems that the committee did not want to take the responsibility of adding another $250,000 without the Congress itself saying what its policy is going to be. If Congress wants to keep the Byrd expedition at the South Pole from now until the memory of man runs not to the contrary, the committee may not have any serious objection, but we did not feel that it was up to the committee to establish a policy and make an appropriation until Congress itself spoke.

I will place in the RECORD a list of some of the items that Admiral Byrd took along with him. You will find, for instance, that he had a very good supply of 8-day clocks. He had a very good supply of a well-known make of mattresses, enough for 2 years. He had a fine supply of candy, $1,700 worth. He had a fine supply of soap, as we hear nightly over radio programs. He has 156 dogs and an excellent supply of dog food. Personally, I was glad to see the dogs fed, but I cannot bring myself to believe the feeding of dogs choice meats is as important as feeding millions of hungry people who are clamoring for an opportunity for a livelihood. I will place in the RECORD a list of some of these supplies. In doing so I do not wish or intend to cast any aspersions on Admiral Byrd. As I said, his record as an explorer is well known. But until this Congress speaks and states what it cares to do with reference to keeping the Byrd expedition at the South Pole permanently, for 18 months, or for 2 years, the committee felt it could not take the responsibility of trying to lay down a policy. This we did not feel was within our prerogative.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. In light of the fact that 800,000 W. P. A. workers will be discharged between April 1 and June 30 unless this Congress passes a deficiency bill, I want to congratulate the gentleman for economizing on this appropriation which can aptly be called an appropriation for the relief of penguins in the Antarctic.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman for his kindly contribution. As I see it, it is not a bad brand of relief for those 156 high-priced and high-powered dogs.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Would not the gentleman think it well for Admiral Byrd to come back to the United States and explore this country for jobs for the unemployed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That might be food for thought, but the gentleman probably remembers that Admiral Byrd was a very distinguished charter member of the Economy League, and I do not distinctly recall of his ever having made such explorations.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. That is right, and he was a horizontal admiral.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The following is a list of some of the articles I have just referred to which the Byrd Antarctic Expedition have with them:

Some of the principal items purchased for the Antarctic Expedition for 60 men

1. Mattresses: 60 mattresses, at $14 each			$840.00
2. Clocks:
6 alarm clocks, at $3.50 each	$21.00
2 30-day clocks, at $22.50	45.00
2 clocks, 8-day, at $11.25	22.50
			88.50
3. Matches:
150 gross	128.00
4,000 boxes	116.00
28 gross	98.00
			342.00
4. Toilet papers, 5,000 rolls. Supplementary order, 2 cases.
5. Mittens: 1,848 pairs various kinds (buckskin, horsehide, waterproof, all wool)			944.29
6. Dogs:
Purchased, 156	$5,955.00
Transportation to point of departure	436.81
Shelter and care	1,539.59
180 dog crates, at $10.37 each	1,866.60
			9,798.00
This total does not include food, harness, and miscellaneous items. There was a requisition for 35 tons of dog food, amounting to $2,646. However, this amount was canceled and a donation of 35 tons of dog food was made, reducing the food item to $448.00.
7. Butter: 12,000 pounds were ordered but this amount was protested and we succeeded in reducing it to 10,000 pounds, totaling			3,220.00
8. Cigarettes: 5,000 cartons were requisitioned but this was not approved.
9. Candy was requisitioned amounting to approximately			1,722.08
At first this requisition was not approved but after considerable argument and pressure from the expedition's organizers that candy served as food, objection was withdrawn.
10. Cookies: Requisitions totaling approximately			1,535.73
11. Ten electric razors were requisitioned. The requisition was not approved.
12. Meats were ordered averaging around			16,000.00

Provisions were ordered on the basis of having a year's supply in reserve should it be imposible to bring the ice parties out at the end of 18 months. If that fact is not kept in mind, the figures seem enormous and out of all proportion to the needs of 60 men for a year and a half.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY].

AMOUNT OF $112,000,000 PLUS $10,000,000 PROPOSED TO BE ADDED TO THE TAXPAYERS' BURDEN?

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, Thomas A. Edison, the father of the distinguished Secretary of the Navy, was deservedly known as the Wizard of Menlo Park; but not even he, much less his able son, could make figs grow on thistles, or find money in a depleted Treasury or in the already empty pockets of the overburdened taxpayers. Only the Wizard of Oz could do that. It is, however, reported that my friend the genial Secretary of the Navy served notice last week, according to the papers, that he intends to ask the Senate at this very present session to restore the $112,000,000 which the House cut from the Navy appropriation bill. It is further indicated that he says if Congress turns down his request he proposes to return with another request at the earliest opportunity. Knowing his tenacity, I would expect this.

What I have to say is solely for the purpose of advising the Members of the House of Representatives that they should take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

What a coincidence! The Navy comes along, under claim of emergency, and asks for an appropriation of many millions with which to build battleships, the plans for which battleships have not even been completed, and the type of which has not been determined, and the keels not laid.

Then the Army comes along, under claim of emergency, and asks for more millions of dollars with which to erect a third lock in the Panama Canal, before the preliminary engineering job is completed, or started, so far as I know, or the location therefor determined, and the while we are spending millions to make bombproof the two existent locks, and the possible date of completion of the proposed lock is 6 years off, or more, and the possibility of the necessity for the acquisition of more territory is undetermined.

DEFENSE PROGRAM INCOMPLETE

The defense program for the Canal is only half finished, if even that may be said to be true. President Roosevelt recently told newspapermen, according to press reports, that—

More guns and planes are needed at the Panama Canal to permit better opportunity to discover any attacking force—from the air or by sea—at a much longer distance from the Canal than ever had been provided heretofore.

He said:

The first thing to do is to finish the present program for anti-aircraft guns and planes. About half the total of each recommended by the Army-Navy Joint Board, or actually authorized, has been delivered so far.

So much for that.

DO WE NEED A THIRD CANAL?

If we need a third canal, and we may; if we must police, protect, and defend Central and South America; what, then, about the possibilities of the Nicaraguan route? We should not permit ourselves to be sworn out of court by a subterfuge. Let us think it over. What is the great hurry, anyway? Why not protect the Panama Canal to the *n*th power first, as we have started to do? To do that first would be sensible and certainly justifiable, it seems to me.

WHERE IS THE $112,000,000 COMING FROM?

So they are coming back for $112,000,000. Do not forget that; but that is not all.

Have you noticed that they are not satisfied with the amount which the House appropriated for experimental research covering lighter-than-air ships? Well, they are not, if the newspaper reports are to be believed, but are going to ask for $3,500,000 now, which they emphasize, and at once, as they say. According to press reports the Navy Department policy involves a 5-year plan which includes and recommends not only that one $3,500,000 dirigible be constructed at once, but asks for two big dirigibles.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWELVE MILLION, PLUS TEN MILLION IS A LOT OF MONEY

If reports are to be believed, the 5-year program contemplates an expenditure of the taxpayers' money to the extent of a minimum of $10,000,000.

If the set-up which I have seen is correct, and I take my information from the newspaper accounts which I have read, a break-down of the proposed 5-year budget shows that next year $350,000 would be spent on blimp construction and $250,000 for rigid ships. An additional $350,000 would be spent for maintenance and operations, bringing the total cost to $950,000 for the first year's operation of the plan. Think that over.

In 1942 the costs would be nearly tripled and include expenditures of $300,000 for experimental prototype construction and $100,000 for additional shore facilities. Rigid airship construction costs would be raised to $1,500,000 and the blimp costs would be nearly doubled. What about that?

The third year of the program would reach the peak in expenditures, $3,200,000, with more money going into rigid ships. The last 2 years of the program would be leveled off approximately at $1,500,000. "Leveled off" is good; that is what they do to a grave.

NAVIGABLE BALLOONS

Now, all I have to say is that those who have patent rights, rubber, and other materials to sell may have been able to convince some people that we should spend these millions for navigable balloons, but I am still of the opinion, as between the devil and the deep sea, that we can waste the money of the taxpayer less disadvantageously to him along other lines also superinduced by the use of gas and "hot air."

Dirigibles or not, I have yet to be shown that the valuable use to which they might be put is sufficiently valuable to justify the expense involved in their construction, taking into consideration their vulnerability and probable short life, while and if in use, and the fact that, admittedly, substantially all that can be done with them as an instrument of warfare can be accomplished by modern airplanes designed for such use, if in the hands of men trained for a specific purpose.

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet lest we forget—
The Macon, the Akron, and the Shenandoah.

BATTLESHIPS AGAIN

One word more about the battleships. Do you know, speaking to you in strict congressional confidence, I would feel a great deal better about appropriating money for building them if the Navy line and staff would forget their feud, submerge their rankling jealousies, get together, and agree on a type and on plans and specifications on which to build a ship free from serious errors in design and construction; one that they would guarantee not to be topheavy; one that would not tip over or turn over in a choppy sea; one that I would dare to ride in, shall we say, on a shake-down cruise on the Tidal Basin if the tide were coming in.

There is no "impenetrable opacity" of the aura—as they say in Japan—surrounding the Navy Department, nor in fact around any man, group of men, or department of government in the United States as to make loyal and patriotic Americans stand in indubitable awe of anybody or to permit themselves to be dominated by or dictated to in their thinking by an ukase issuing from the throne.

The only earthly throne an American citizen recognizes is his own doorstep, on and from which he feels perfectly competent to defy everybody and anybody who undertakes to order him around or tries to do his thinking for him.

He proposes to maintain that privilege and to insist upon such prerogatives, and in so doing he will endeavor to see to it that no part or department or bureau of his Government ever gets the mistaken notion into its head that it is bigger than the whole.

A LAYMAN'S NOTION

Of course, this is just a layman's notion, but it is your money and my money that they wish and intend to spend, if I may be so bold as to suggest the fact. I still have to be shown. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I received a very encouraging annual report this morning, which I want to offer for the consideration of the House and which I ask that the Clerk read out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

ANNUAL REPORT

To our stockholders: Your officers are glad to report business over the past year has been vastly improved; in fact, we almost broke even.

We feel that much of the company's success during 1939 was due to a more vigorous policy of trying to make the best of it all. It has been the custom of the company officers to worry too much. Under the new policy 70 percent of our officers have cut their fretting down 86½ percent for the fiscal year.

Your company was able to get a little more work done around the plant in 1939 by naming six vice presidents in charge of visits from tax agents, thus saving the higher executives a major amount of time. We built a new wing on the factory in which all data, facts, figures, reports, explanations, and apologies demanded by the Government may be prepared and turned out. This plant is capable of answering 50,000 inquiries from Washington per week. Plans are being drawn for an annex in which all summonses to congressional probes can be received, filed, and cataloged without confusion.

The company has also appointed a vice president in charge of nervousness, a vice president in charge of apprehension, and two vice presidents in charge of grave misgivings.

Our cash position is strong, due to a new system of loose-leaf, loose-thinking, and loose-figuring bookkeeping, now quite the rage. We think this means a lot of good clean fun until we change auditors.

Getting down to figures, our losses for 1939 were $1,358,456, as against $2,567,823 for 1938. This makes it a banner year.

Summary: The general outlook is good. Car loadings are doing nicely. Boat loadings are firm; auto loadings are improving. Bicycle loadings are not to be sneezed at. Our stockholders will be glad to hear that after suspending the custom over the lean years, we have decided to renew distribution of art calendars to all stockholders.

Please notify the company of any change of address, so that you may be kept in touch with all bad news.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN A. HALL].

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I introduced two resolutions, one of which would prohibit any person seeking a third term as President of the United States, and the other precluding such individual from drawing any salary in that third term. At that time it was pointed out that I should not have injected partisanship into the discussion, but may I say to the Committee that I had nothing to do with the injection of partisanship into the matter. As a matter of fact that issue came from the other side of the House.

When I presented these resolutions I did not have in mind partisan politics any more than a discussion of foreign problems and for this reason I will point out to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK], for whom I have a great deal of respect and regard, that at least one of the members who voted in the New York State Legislature for the resolution about which I spoke yesterday was a Democrat. I believe I am correct when I say that Senator McNaboe is a Democrat.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. He introduced the bill, but is the gentleman sure he voted for it?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. It does not seem to me there is any point in his introducing such a resolution if he did not vote for it. I would be loath to introduce any legislation in any body that I did not vote for afterward. Further, I will tell the gentleman that I did not introduce the legislation at anybody's wishes except my own.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I will be glad to yield for a question.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not know whether I can cover the entire situation.

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I yielded for a question only.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I asked the gentleman if he was requested by anybody to introduce the resolution, because other Members of the delegation have been asked to do so.

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I was not requested to introduce it by anyone. I hope that answers the gentleman's question, and I would appreciate the opportunity of being able to continue with my statement.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If anybody had asked me to introduce such a resolution in the House, I would be tickled to death to do it.

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I would be, too, if I had been asked to do so, but I was not.

I was somewhat nonplused when the gentleman stated he could not understand why partisan politics were injected into this matter. My resolution provides that two-thirds of this body will first have to approve of an amendment to be submitted to the people of the United States. I can well understand now, after I heard a certain radio talk last night in which it was stated that the third-term issue was creating a disturbance in the Democratic Party's ranks, why the gentleman brought up the subject. There was a certain poll taken among 1,300 Democratic county chairmen throughout the country and 52 percent only were in favor of a third term. That is all I am going to say about the third-term issue as far as partisan politics are concerned. I can readily understand why the gentleman would have so much apprehension over a vote being taken on the floor of this House in reference to that matter if only 52 percent of the party faithful are in favor of a third term.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I noticed in the morning paper that the members of the State Senate and Assembly of the State of New Jersey, the Republicans, also advocated this. There were no politics in that, I suppose?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. That, of course, was not of my doing.

I submitted the resolution to this body in a purely nonpartisan attitude and I shall continue to take that position.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Many of us have thought this over very seriously. It is a matter of very great grief and apprehension on the part of the Democratic Party. I want to be content with expressing my sincere sympathy. The Democrats are suffering torture over this question. You see them struggling over it every day. As a Republican, I simply say, "You have my sincere sympathy, it is an awful mess you are in."

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I was prompted to present these resolutions yesterday by the firm, just stand taken by the Father of Our Country, George Washington, when he made his farewell address, wherein he stated he felt he should not place himself in the way of anyone who wanted to succeed him in that great office. I believe I am correct in stating that George Washington at that time stood out as one of the most powerful men that the world had ever known. He had served his country in both war and peace. He had generaled the armies of revolution through to unbelievable success and victory. At the end of the war he assumed the highest office that our people can give to an individual, that of President of the United States. During his 8 years as President he had firmly established himself and since he had risen to such heights so far as prestige was concerned, he could have almost become a dictator, but he chose the more sensible, the more sane course. He chose to retire at the height of his glory rather than let any shadow be cast upon the wonderful record he had made in public life.

So in conclusion, after urging this body stringently and urgently to adopt my resolutions, not only in the face of possible present circumstances, but also to preclude any future happenings of the same kind, may I say that I should like to see these resolutions reported favorably, passed by this House, and sent to the Senate for approval. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it depends on whose ox is being gored. It was not so long ago that in the Senate of the United States, during the administration of Calvin Coolidge, a resolution was introduced against a third term by Senator ROBERT LA FOLLETTE, and it passed by an overwhelming vote, including the votes of most of the Democrats in the Senate and most of the southern Democrats.

Now, they say this is a partisan Republican issue, because a Republican, a new Member, makes an able and fair and what I thought was a very nonpartisan speech opposing the third term. Of course, the Democrats would like to wipe out the record now. They would like to wipe out that vote they cast only 12 years ago against the third term. I am not a mind reader, and we do not actually know whether President Roosevelt is going to be a candidate or not, but if he is a candidate the third term immediately becomes the biggest single issue. The people back home are vitally interested, not alone Republicans, but those Jeffersonian and constitutional Democrats, who number at least one-third of the Democratic Party today. I do not know whether they will go along on this issue or not, but I know it is going to worry them from one end of the country to the other. These Jeffersonian Democrats know that if there should be a third term, why not a fourth and even a fifth?

I am not so concerned about what George Washington said or did, but I should think the Democrats should be vitally concerned in what Thomas Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, and Jackson had to say about a third term. They all refused a third term because they thought, and thought rightly, that a third term would be the beginning of a dictatorship in the United States. They refused a third term because they were Democrats, because they believed in our free institutions, and were opposed to any one man's holding office for 12 years or more. They contended that there would be always at least one man in America who could serve the people in the White House, and therefore refused a third term. Naturally such Democrats and those who believe in Jeffersonian democracy are opposed to a third term that violates the spirit of our traditions and free institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe we ought to get excited about this question or the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York. Of course, it is concerning nothing more than a tradition. It is a matter upon which the people in the United States vote. There is no law upon it. It seems to me that it is a little bit on the innocuous side for the lawmakers to be resolving on this question at all. Regardless of what we resolve, as Æsop asked in his fable, "Who is to bell the cat?"

There is also a sort of tradition regarding the President of this country, that whenever a man in his administration as chief does well by the folks and does right by little Nell, all down the line, we give him two terms. This is a sort of tradition in the United States. It just did not happen the last time before the present administration. We had to smack down the gentleman and his administration and knock him out of a second term. So why could not we on this occasion balance the books by having three terms this time, and that will just set it even, and then the United States, this great democracy, can go on forward as far as it likes in the centuries to come and we will have everything on the present schedule settled? We will have three terms credited to this administration and only one to that preceding it, but it will balance the thing up and we then will be on an even keel.

Further, it seems to me a rather interesting proposition that since this is a democracy, and since the third-term question is not covered by a law, since it is not in the Constitution or anything else, we may just let the folks decide. They like to decide things like this for themselves. They are funny that way. There are two things by which they may decide. First, if the man who is presently at the head of the administration chooses to run. We have had men who did not choose to run after the first term when they saw they were mucked up and had accumulated too many problems to carry through. So tradition also says that if a man does not wish to run for a second term he does not have to. He may say, "I do not choose to run." But if a man who is standing at the head of the Government of the United States as its Chief Executive desires to run for a third term, why, there is no law against it, and it may be a pretty good idea to let him do it. And if the general run of the folks, the most of them, want to vote him in, it is a pretty good idea to let them vote for him if they wish to do so, and if they think it is for the best they will be pretty likely to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK] has about the same idea about the occupancy of the White House that the administration has about balancing the Budget. I noticed in those figures that went into the RECORD yesterday that this administration had spent as much money, or rather, had created as great a deficit in the 8 years, or will have according to the estimates, as our other Presidents created in 144 years and 6 months. The total deficits of all previous administrations was given as a little more than twenty and one-half billion while President Roosevelt's administration will give us a deficit of more than twenty-five and one-half billion. You would not want three terms after a twenty-five and one-half billion dollar deficit in two would you? Are you going to keep on in the same way for the third one? If two terms give us a twenty-five and one-half billion dollar deficit will three terms of Roosevelt give us a thirty-seven and three-quarter billion deficit? We have had aplenty of the quack remedies.

Then it was hardly the fair thing to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN A. HALL] as to who asked him to introduce the anti-third-term resolution. On the other hand, we on the minority might ask you of the majority who has been doing your business? Who has been asking you to introduce bills? Has Tommy the "Cork," or Cohen the "Sailor," been furnishing you ideas and preparing legislation for the last 7 years? You tell me of one major bill that the Representatives on the majority side have originated and drafted and put through in the last 8 years.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman will yield, I will name one—the social-security law was drafted entirely by the members of the Ways and Means Committee on both sides.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Had never been thought of before?

Mr. McCORMACK. Then the gentleman is getting some information.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Fine. I always learn something from the gentleman from Massachusetts. I suppose I should thank him for the major part of my education, if I have any, and I recall that in that bill you created a fund, a great, big surplus, which was to be held as a reserve fund, and then you went ahead and spent it for current expenses. Now, was not that fine? If it had been an individual who had used administration or trust funds for a purpose for which it was not proper to use them he would have been sent to the penitentiary, but the majority, or the officials representing the majority, can spend money that was collected from employers and employees and laid aside in a reserve, trust fund—for current expenses. Now, think of that. What a crooked thing it is to take away from future beneficiaries and use funds collected for a specific purpose. If it was an individual it would be different, he would be sent to jail for embezzlement, but for these officials, naturally, it is all right, is it?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not until I finish this statement.

I say what a reprehensible thing it is to take the funds of employee and employer collected for the aged and unfortunate and use them for such a purpose.

Mr. McCORMACK. You ask the question, do you yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am telling you what a reprehensible thing it is to do that kind of a trick and to so misuse trust money.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman decline to yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. What do you want?

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. For what purpose?

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOFFMAN. To continue my education, I presume. Well, go ahead.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman at the outset said——

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do not make a speech, will you?

Mr. McCORMACK. Now, the gentleman has yielded——

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; but just temporarily, not permanently. [Laughter.] This emergency is only a temporary emergency, this does not run on and on like the synthetic emergencies created by the President to cover his successive blunders.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Massachusetts is usually not guilty of the habits of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You do not mean that, do you? What habits do you mean? Drinking, gambling, or what? I do neither.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not know what the gentleman's habits are.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then how do you know what you are not guilty of? [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMACK. I know the gentleman's legislative habits.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You might well follow them. Are you going to sign that petition when it comes up on your side, to bring out the Wagner law for amendment?

Mr. McCORMACK. Are you asking me questions or am I asking you?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I was.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman stated that he did not know of one bill——

Mr. HOFFMAN. You answered me on that.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; and then the gentleman, with his usual ingenuity, which is very clear to those who can follow the gentleman's reasoning, proceeded to argue on the bill itself. Some other time I would be glad to discuss the social security bill with the gentleman from Michigan, but when he states that the fund was used in the manner stated, the gentleman makes a misstatement.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, no; nearly every one on the floor who contradicts any statement you make is in error according to your theory. Now, I cannot agree with you. Practically everyone in the country knows that that fund was used and has been used—it is not down there, is it?—the Government used it and put its I O U's in place of the money, did it not, to pay current expenses of the Government?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman knows I have not been educating him——

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not yield any more. Of course, I could not teach you anything.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN A. HALL] was asked about who requested him to introduce that resolution. I might return the courtesy by asking who suggested the Government's silver policy under which, for several years, we have been buying silver from Mexico at a price in excess of the market price or the world price while letting them steal the oil property of our citizens down there.

Who suggested the policy of buying gold from Russia at a price higher than the world market price, and letting the Russians buy munitions here to destroy the Finns? That did not come from any Republican politician. Did someone on the majority side suggest those two policies? Who claims to be the proud father of those twins? Who was it suggested at the beginning of this administration that the Government should lessen the purchasing power of the bonds that it had sold to the people in America by devaluing the gold content of the dollar? Who suggested that—robbing the widows and the bondholders?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not now.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman mentioned my name—that is, he referred to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Very well. I yield for a question, not for a speech.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What is the purchasing power of the dollar today compared with what it was in 1928 and 1929 in the United States?

Mr. HOFFMAN. You cannot buy as much with it now, of practically anything, as then. If you can it is because the farmer's market—driven down the prices of the things he sells—but raised the prices of the things he buys.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Oh, it is 20 percent more, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Under the New Deal gold and silver sell-out policies, the purchasing power of the foreigners' dollar is more than 125 percent of what it was in 1928 and 1929.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I commend that statement to the consideration of the gentleman from New York. Who was it suggested to the majority side the misuse of the money appropriated for relief? It will be remembered that when the Hatch bill was under consideration in the Senate, Senator BARKLEY opposed the enactment of those provisions under consideration at that time, which would have prohibited the use of Federal money for political purposes. Who was it who suggested, and who was it brought about the spending of relief funds—a wonderfully fine thing it was for the majority party, to ask for appropriations of money to buy food and clothing, and what kind of a trick was it to turn around and use that money to buy votes? Look at the statement Senator GLASS of Virginia made on the floor of the Senate, and you will find it in the proceedings of the 24th day of June 1937, when he said that the last election was bought. I quote the Senator from Virginia, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 6284:

> The last election was carried by people who were getting favors from the Government, people who were subsidized by the Government, people who were on relief rolls.

Now I ask you, do you intend to buy this one? Is that the reason for the opposition to the Hatch bill? Are you going to buy a third term for a President who will give us a $25,000,000,000 deficit in two terms? Is that what you are getting at? Oh, many things have been suggested by someone other than the Members on the majority side. I do not know of anyone, in my short experience in the House, who could have thought of those things—that is, among the majority Members, who would be so lacking in consideration of our national welfare as to think of doing the things to which I have referred. But someone must have suggested them. Someone who wanted to "make over" America.

We might go on down the list. Who suggested the appointment of the members of the Labor Board? Was that some Member of the majority side? Subsequent events indicate it was John L. Lewis who suggested that, and that the appointment of some Board members was a partial payment on his $470,000 contribution to the New Deal campaign fund. Now, John is kicking because he says that your leader did not deliver in full. John's dollar has been devalued; he thinks and charges that you have taken away a part of the purchasing power of his contribution, and he says now that he is not getting out of the Labor Board all that he ought to have.

What are you going to suggest next? May I be permitted to make one suggestion? It is that we get rid of that Labor Board, which, even John says now, is not so hot, and that the A. F. of L. said is really rotten, and that most people say steps clear outside of its sphere, and, as one court has said, assumes not only to be prosecutor, jury, and judge, but investigator, prosecutor, jury, judge, and executioner. I leave that as one suggestion that a Republican whose education has not yet been completed by the instruction of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] has to offer. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

BONNEVILLE PROJECT SELF-SUPPORTING, PROFITABLE VENTURE

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, I have requested this time to talk briefly about the Bonneville project, which is one of the items included in the bill pending before us. This particular item has to do with the appropriation for maintenance and extension of the transmission line. The Bonneville project initially is a river development for navigation, and in that development there has come about a further development of hydroelectric power, and this particular feature of the bill before us has to do with that part of the undertaking. There are 10 units included in the hydroelectric development. Two have been already completed and are in operation. These 2 will produce some 86,400 kilowatt-hours. Two additional units are in the process of construction and will be completed in 1941, and an additional 2 units for which funds have been provided will be ready for operation in 1942, which will make 6 units out of the total of 10. This appropriation carries $650,000 for maintenance and operation, that is, carrying on the project as a commercial venture, which is done under the Department of the Interior through the Administrator, Dr. Raver.

The War Department, through the Corps of Engineers, has the job of building the dams and building these works, but its operation and the erection of the transmission lines, and the disposal of the excess hydroelectric power that is developed, is carried on through the Department of the Interior, and for that reason the bill before us, for the Interior Department, carries these items.

In addition to the $650,000 for maintenance and operation, there is an allowance of $5,000,000 for continuing construction of the transmission lines. That is a reduction of $1,000,000 from the amount carried in the Budget, as I understand it, but that sum of $3,000,000 of unexpended prior appropriations which are allocated will permit the continuation of the transmission development for the coming year, and will provide $8,000,000 for that purpose, with the $5,000,000 included in this bill. Some projected transmission lines will have to be delayed by reason of the cut.

Some have criticized the project, saying that it is being built ahead of the necessity for its development, the demand for power; they claim that we are producing electrical energy at Bonneville in excess of the requirements of the territory served. I want to take issue with that contention. This project is in my district on the Oregon side of the Columbia River, and I am quite familiar with it. In fact, I was familiar with it before I came here, although I have had no official connection with it in any way and am not interested in it other than as a Representative from that district. But the figures do disclose to me definitely that the demand for electrical energy at this plant will more than take up the energy that is produced if we continue the process of development as provided for by these plans and as recommended by the Corps of Army Engineers.

There are 119 applications for power at the present time, totaling 643,489 kilowatts. Those have already been received by the administrator of the project. Of those 119 applications, 42 are from public-utility districts, 16 from municipalities, 29 from Rural Electrification Administration cooperatives, 21 from drainage districts. Public applications total 108, representing 446,529 kilowatts.

Applications have also been received from 6 private utilities, totaling 66,900 kilowatts; 5 from industries, totaling 130,060 kilowatts. When you consider that the 2 units now in operation produce only 86,400 kilowatts and the additional 2 units which will be in production next year will produce, with the 2 in operation, only 194,000 kilowatts, and that all 6 which are now provided for will produce only 300,000 kilowatts, I think it is clearly evident that the demands for electrical energy in the district far exceed the capacity to produce.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I am glad to yield to my colleague the former Governor of Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. Is it not true that the demand for electricity depends entirely on the price?

Mr. ANGELL. That is true.

Mr. PIERCE. If the price is low enough, it is used extensively, not only for industries but for lighting and heating and in all other industrial pursuits. If the price is high, then the quantity used is low. In the city from which the gentleman comes—Portland—the use per meter is, I think, now about 1,200 kilowatt-hours. In Tacoma it is 1,600; Winnipeg, right at 5,000 per installed meter. It is the price.

Mr. ANGELL. The observations of my distinguished friend from Oregon are correct.

Now, we have a double purpose to serve in this development. One is to serve the outlying communities as well as those adjoining; that is, the farming communities, small cooperatives, little industries, small towns throughout the area served, and the other purpose is to develop industrial enterprises. We are making a very fine advance in the development of industrial enterprises. The Aluminum Co. of America is now installing a plant at Vancouver, just across the river from Portland, which has already entered into a contract with the Administrator, which will consume, during the life of the contract, sufficient energy to pay to the Federal Government some $10,000,000 for electrical energy. Just recently another concern has contracted with the Administrator for a large block of power running over a long period, in the development of an iron-producing project in the same vicinity. A great many other similar organizations are considering coming into that district. Those are not plants which are now operating in some other district which will be discontinued, some district belonging to you gentlemen, but they are new developments in addition to what is already in operation, attempting by these developments in the Northwest to supply some of the demands for manufactured products in that particular district. We have large deposits of natural resources for development with cheap electrical power, which are available to be used in many of these new enterprises that are seeking a home in the vicinity of this project. It is unquestionably true that as fast as these additional power units which are provided for under this program are completed, the electrical energy produced will not only be needed but there will be no place to secure it elsewhere unless these projects are completed.

Some have said that many of these transmission lines are duplications of existing lines. I have given that a great deal of study. I have gone over the district myself. I have asked for reports from the Administrator and his staff as to whether or not there are any duplications of existing lines provided by the funds which you have authorized for transmission lines. I am advised and I state on my own judgment that there are not. These transmission lines supply transmission service for this energy developed at Bonneville that are not now available. There are no facilities available for passing this energy from the place of production at the plant out into the field unless we have transmission lines. These funds will supply that need and put the generators to work as fast as they shall be completed. This will make possible financial returns on the large investment the Government has made in this project.

Unfortunately, when we met last year the Bonneville project was completed insofar as the two units were concerned, but Congress had made no provision for transmission lines to market the energy produced, and we were caught in a position where we had a large investment, where we had the turbines ready to turn to produce electricity, where we had a demand in the field from the consumer for the electricity, but we had no tranmission line over which to carry it from the point of production to the point of use. This has been remedied to some extent, for on the 1st of December of last year the main transmission line running from the plant to Vancouver and Portland was energized, and immediately the electric energy was turned in to industry and private use. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the river development project at Bonneville, between Oregon and Washington, is no longer in the experimental stage. It is now in operation and has proven itself to be feasible, and I am certain is demonstrating that it will be a self-supporting venture and a profitable undertaking.

Work was begun on September 30, 1933, under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the project being formally authorized in the Rivers and Harbors Act, approved August 30, 1935. The project is located 40 miles east of Portland and includes a dam, powerhouse, ship lock, and fishways. The purpose of the project is for the improvement of the Columbia River, for water transportation and utilization of hydroelectrical power made available by reason of this improvement.

The plans call for 10 units in the power project. Two of these are now completed and in operation under the direction of the Secretary of War and under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army.

At the last session of Congress, when appropriations were under consideration for carrying on the work of this project, no transmission lines had been completed, so that it was impossible to market the electrical energy that was then available from the first two units. The transmission line between Bonneville and Portland was energized on December 1, 1939, and delivery of power began on that date to the Portland General Electric Co.

The line to Eugene is now completed, or practically so, and other lines will be completed during the calendar year 1940.

Administrator Ross, who had charge of the marketing of power, died on March 14, 1939, and until September 16 his place had not been filled with a permanent administrator, which resulted in considerable delay in long-time planning.

Contracts already entered into and now under negotiation will absorb the entire capacity of the first two units of the project. A contract has been made with the Aluminum Co. of America, calling for the delivery of 32,500 kilowatts of prime power at $17.50, and a contract with an iron manufacturing company which will take a large additional allotment of prime power. These, together with the contracts made with public utilities districts, private utilities, and municipalities, as shown by the report of the Administrator, Dr. Raver, will afford a market for all of the power available under present plant capacity.

In discussing this subject last year in the Congress, I called attention to the fact that steam-plant capacity in the Northwest area contiguous to Bonneville amounted to 370,000 kilowatts, or 71 percent of the ultimate capacity of Bonneville, and that by 1945 about 400,000 kilowatts of the then-existing plant capacity would, because of age, be removed. During December of last year private utilities serving Portland used as high as 79,000 kilowatts, or 91 percent of the present capacity, which demonstrates that there is a market for this displacing power.

The Annual Report of the Bonneville Project shows that prime load immediately in sight through applications, contracts under negotiation, or contracts executed will total about 177,000 kilowatts in the fiscal year 1941, and 232,000 kilowatts in the fiscal year 1942. Present schedules for machine installation show that only 86,400 kilowatts will be available until the latter part of the fiscal year 1941. This available capacity will not be sufficient to meet actual demands under existing contracts and those in process of execution—in fact, will only be about one-half of the estimated requirement.

The transmission lines now having been in part completed and many trunk lines nearing completion necessitates additional funds for operation, which accounts for the increased budget submitted this year. Operation under Dr. Raver, Administrator, is proceeding satisfactorily, and he is showing remarkable progress in securing contracts, not only with public-utility districts and municipalities, but with private utilities and manufacturing enterprises, which will, I am sure, furnish a market for all of the available power which Bonneville will produce.

LOW RATES TO CONSUMERS

Mr. Chairman, as a result of the energizing of the transmission line to Portland, the city of Portland on October 15, 1939, put into effect a rate reduction which Administrator Raver states is approximately 20 percent.

The organic act provides that 50 percent of Bonneville power shall be reserved until 1942 for public business and agencies. It is the underlying policy of the law that the lowest possible rates to consumers shall be established. This is for the purpose of protecting domestic users, farmers, and the small user throughout the entire territory. It also contemplates furnishing the lowest commercial rates for industrial enterprises consistent with the profitable operation of the project.

NORTHWEST AREA ABOUNDS WITH A WEALTH OF UNDEVELOPED RESOURCES

Mr. Chairman, the whole Northwest territory contiguous to the Bonneville and Grand Coulee projects is a region of very great natural resources awaiting development. We have large areas of highly developed agricultural land, much of it under irrigation, and our great need is for markets. Much of the raw material, through manufacturing and processing, may be utilized and markets found for it through utilization of the electrical energy afforded by these two great Federal projects. Over 50 percent of the pay rolls of Oregon come from the forest industry. The major portion of forest products are sold in the raw state. Much of it, through manufacturing, could be utilized at the place of origin, thus not only affording a market for the production but also pay rolls, and thereby a market for much of our agricultural crops. In the Northwest States of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and Montana there are immense deposits of strategic materials which our Government is in need of, not only in war times but in peace as well. Included, among others, are manganese, mercury, chromite, aluminum ores, in addition to many others. The reduction of these ores and the utilization in manufactured products or in processing requires large volumes of cheap electrical energy which can be furnished in the vicinity of these projects at the very lowest possible cost. The scientific developments which have been and are now taking place through the study of chemistry and the application of chemurgy to farm products will afford an outlet, not only for the agricultural and other products of this region but also give a market for the power produced. Studies made by the Federal Power Commission indicate that the requirements of electrochemical and electrometallurgical industries have been increasing at a rate somewhat greater than that of general industrial activities, and the Commission estimates that these extraordinary requirements will be increased in 1940 by approximately 33 percent over 1936. These developments will call for large blocks of electrical energy.

INCREASED DEMAND FOR ELECTRIC ENERGY AND SAVINGS IN COSTS MADE

The Nineteenth Annual Report of the Federal Power Commission, 1939, shows that rate reductions for electric energy averaged forty-six and one-half million dollars annually in the 3½-year period from July 1, 1934, to December 31, 1937, and that the production of electric energy reached an all-time high in 1939. I desire to quote briefly from this report:

> The total savings resulting from electric-rate reductions for the 3½-year period from July 1, 1934, to December 31, 1937, it was estimated, amounted to $162,761,490, an average of $46,500,000 per year. These figures represent merely a total of the separate annual savings based on average consumption per customer for periods prior to rate changes as reported by utilities, and as such do not reflect a cumulative total of all savings given—do not include savings on increases in the average consumption per customer which usually follow a rate reduction.
> The savings to the customers of privately owned utilities for all services during the period, it is noteworthy, equaled 6.4 percent of the estimated total revenues of such utilities in 1934, as against 5.1 percent in the case of the publicly owned system. Though privately owned utilities in nearly all instances reduced their average typical bills more than publicly owned systems, the average typical bills of publicly owned utilities, as has already been noted, remain generally below those of privately owned utilities.
> Production of electric energy for public use for the 12 months ending October 31, 1939, reached 125,437,000,000 kilowatt-hours—far exceeding the highest previous annual total of 119,224,000,000 kilowatt-hours recorded in 1937.
> In reporting that production in 1938 was 4 percent less than the output recorded in 1937, the Commission, in its comprehensive report entitled "Electric Power Statistics, 1938," published in May of 1939, pointed out that the last 8 months of 1938 had witnessed a steady upward trend in electric production, the output for December 1938 being at that time the largest for any month of record, totaling 10,882,094,000 kilowatt-hours.

BONNEVILLE'S RECORD—INSTALLED CAPACITY AND PLANT-COMPLETION SCHEDULE

Mr. Chairman, two generating units are installed and operating. This represents a total capacity of 86,400 kilowatts. These two units have been designated No. 1 and No. 2. Funds to install and complete units 3, 4, 5, and 6 have been provided, save the $800,000 item which passed the House recently. The second step of the program planned by the Army engineers contemplates that units 3 and 4 will be ready for service by June 1941. At that time the installed capacity will be 194,400 kilowatts. The Administrator anticipates that he will be crowded for capacity by that time and has requested the Army engineers to accelerate completion of units 3 and 4 so as to have them ready for service by January 1, 1941.

Units 5 and 6 are scheduled for completion about June 1, 1942. When units 5 and 6 are completed, the plant's installed capacity will be 300,000 kilowatts.

Units 5 and 6 will be subject to shut-down when the foundations for units 7 to 10 inclusive are installed. Shutting down units 5 and 6 during such a construction period will give the plant a firm available capacity equal to the sum of the first four units or 194,400 kilowatts.

With the installation of units 7 and 8, the plant's capacity will be 410,000 kilowatts. If funds were provided this year the earliest completion date for units 7 and 8 would be June 1, 1943.

When units 9 and 10 are completed, the plant's capacity will be 518,400 kilowatts. If funds were provided this year for initial work the earliest completion date for units 9 and 10 would be June 1944. The lack of provision for units 7 to 10 inclusive will delay this program possibly 1 or 2 years beyond the dates given.

POWER SALES PROGRESS

One hundred and nineteen applications for power, totaling 643,439 kilowatts, have been received by the Administrator of the Bonneville Project. Of these 119 applications, 42 are from public-utility districts, 16 from municipalities, 29 from R. E. A. cooperatives, and 21 from drainage districts. Public applications total 108 and represent 446,529 kilowatts. Applications have also been received from 6 private utilities totaling 66,900 kilowatts. Five from industries totaling 130,060 kilowatts have filed power applications.

Thirty-nine applications, totaling 92,671 kilowatts, are ready for service connections. Feasibility reports have been completed on 24 applications, totaling 128,521 kilowatts, and 21 contracts, totaling 77,710 kilowatts, have been submitted. Thirteen contracts have been executed, totaling 59,110 kilowatts. All of this information on applications and contracts cover prime power only. In addition, the project has authority to sell dump power, which is power subject to recall to satisfy firm contracts. This power under filed tariffs sells for 2½ mills per kilowatt-hour, which is below the bare fuel costs of existing steam plants in the Bonneville area. Contracts have been executed with the private utilities to furnish dump power, and the Portland companies have taken nearly 70,000 kilowatts of such energy. Therefore, it is fair to say that the sum of the firm power business in sight plus the market for dump power exceeds the present installed capacity. The load-development possibilities of the project have been estimated by the Marketing Division in excess of 250,000 kilowatts by 1941 and 450,000 kilowatts in 1942. Comparing these load possibilities with the construction schedule given above, it will be seen that a power shortage will exist in the Northwest during 1941 and possibly 1942.

EARNING POWER OF THE PROJECT

The earning power of the project is set out on page 74, table 8, of the annual report. The Administrator estimates that each kilowatt of capacity will earn on an average $18.36 per kilowatt year, which will give a gross revenue on the completion of the plant of $9,350,000. The investment in transmission, transformer, and operating facilities for Bonneville alone will represent an outlay of $36,288,000. This investment represents only projected lines in the Bonneville-Coulee area, which will be allocated solely to the delivery of Bonneville current.

Based on the Federal Power Commission's allocation, the Army engineers have estimated that the completed investment in dam, power plant, and switch yard will represent $50,293,885. It will be noted that this is some eight or ten million dollars in excess of the original estimate by the Power Commission. The Power Commission's estimate was based on lower capacity. Since that time, as a result of experience with units 1 and 2, the Army engineers have concluded that the capacity can be expanded over the original estimated figure of some 430,000 kilowatts. The first two units installed have a rated capacity of 43,200 kilowatts each, but units 3, 4, 5, and 6 are larger; being in the neighborhood of 52,000 kilowatts each.

The amortization and interest charges, based on 40-year repayment at 3½-percent interest will run $4,060,000 per year and the combined operating expenses, together with maintenance and depreciation, will amount to $1,890,451. This will leave a net of $7,459,549 for fixed charges which is an 8.6-percent return on the Government's investment in power facilities or $3,399,549 in excess of the operating, maintenance, and fixed charges. Therefore, when the plant is completed, the revenues under existing rates will retire the investment in a shorter period than 40 years besides taking care of all costs and deficiencies during the load-building period.

AMOUNT TO COMPLETE

The Administrator in his testimony before the Interior Appropriation Subcommittee estimated that it would take $10,000,000 together with the six million approved by the Budget to complete the transmission system to market this full power capacity. With funds already provided, this would represent $43,250,000 for transmission system of which about seven million will become part of Coulee's system on the completion of that plant, leaving $36,288,000 as Bonneville's part of the total transmission investment.

Fifty-eight percent of the ultimate generating capacity has been provided for in appropriations to date. Funds for about the same effective percentage of transmission facilities have been provided. Due to the necessity of firming up Bonneville capacity by interties, all of these appropriations will not be available for market outlets.

The Bonneville plant is what is called "a run of the river plant." This means that supplemental storage does not exist. During the flood periods in June, the available plant capacity is reduced from backwater on the turbines. During such a condition the elevation of the water in the river below the plant is materially increased, which reduces the drop from the pond to the tail water elevation. This reduction in capacity during the month of June amounts to some 30 percent of the plant's capacity.

Other storage and high-head plants, like Coulee, Tacoma, Seattle, and the storage plants of the private power companies will have surplus production during this flood period. Therefore, by interconnections, surplus power can be borrowed from the storage plants, thus firming up Bonneville's entire capacity. The firming up of 158,000 ultimate kilowatts at Bonneville will result in additional revenue to the Government of around $1,000,000 per year. This is the reason for early interconnections, such as the line to Coulee and to Tacoma.

FARM LOAD

The latest available studies by the Farm Journal indicate that there are 61,137 occupied farms in Oregon and 81,105 such farms in the State of Washington. In Oregon 30,303 of such farms are electrified and 30,834 farms do not have electric service. In the State of Washington 48,375 farms are electrified and 32,730 farms are not.

Eastern Oregon and eastern Washington represent a substantial farm market. In this area 12 Rural Electrification Administration projects are under construction or completed. There is a large and highly successful cooperative with about 1,500 miles of rural lines in southeastern Washington. Eastern and central Oregon and the unserved areas in the Willamette Valley are now active in organizing Rural Electrification Administration cooperatives.

Rural Electrification Administration has recently had a field representative in the State of Oregon and this representative has estimated that there are 11 unserved rural areas that can be profitably developed. These unserved areas represent a rural line mileage of 978 miles.

Under the Bonneville filed tariffs such power can be purchased at one-half cent per kilowatt-hour. This possible saving in wholesale prices represents $12.50 per farm-year for the medium user and about $25 per farm-year for the larger consumer who utilizes an electric stove and labor-saving devices. These areas have farms of large dimensions. Therefore one of the essential requisites for a successful rural enterprise is low-cost current.

In the testimony before the Interior Subcommittee it was pointed out that eastern Oregon and eastern Washington are sections devoid of fuel and installed hydro capacity. The available present capacity in this eastern country per thousand population is only 28 percent of the similarly installed per capita capacity in the remaining portions of these two States. This eastern section of Oregon and Washington has a population of 248,000, of which 91,000 is rural. The possible revenue accruing from the eastern Oregon and Washington lines would be in excess of $850,000 per year, which will justify the lines proposed by the Administrator. There is an early market for 68,000 kilowatts in this region, according to the testimony.

DUPLICATION

The policy of the Bonneville administration is to avoid duplicating existing lines. Last year the question of duplication was raised on the floor, and the parallelism of the project's transmission line from Vancouver to Eugene was cited. When this question was then up, attention was called to the lack of capacity of the private parallel lines in the Willamette Valley. Since that time the position taken on the floor has been sustained by the actual contracts with the Portland General Electric Co. for delivery at Salem and a pending contract application from the Mountain States Power Co. for delivery at Eugene. These companies would not toll current over the Government lines if their lines had the available capacity or requisite reserve.

Parallel lines and duplicate facilities are two entirely different concepts. For example, here in the city of Washington there are 4-inch water mains paralleling 24-, 36-, 48-inch water mains. The fact that these water mains parallel each other does not mean that the 4-inch main is a duplicate of the 48-inch main from the standpoint of service and load requirements. This analogy applies to parallelisms between Bonneville's high-capacity transmission lines and the low-capacity transmission lines of the private power companies. The following lines of the project will parallel existing private lines, but will not duplicate these facilities:

First. Conduit, Washington to Yakima, Washington area.
Second. Midway to Grand Coulee.
Third. Midway to Pasco, Colfax, and Pendleton.
Fourth. Vancouver, Wash., to Eugene, Oreg.
Fifth. Vancouver, Wash., to Tacoma, Wash.

The first two cited transmission lines connect Bonneville with Grand Coulee. The existing private lines in this stretch have such small capacity that the Bonneville and Coulee plants could not be operated together. The same situation applies to the Vancouver-Tacoma transmission lines and the eastern Oregon and Washington lines.

The wires of these private lines are small and the voltage low. The power that has to be transmitted from Bonneville to Coulee is similar in proportion to the current delivered from Boulder. When the city of Los Angeles and the private power companies in southern California contracted for Boulder current, they built lines similar to those now being constructed by the Bonneville project and ignored the existence of the lower-voltage lines in the Los Angeles area.

When subtransmission at lower voltage is involved, parallelism might encroach on duplication. In such cases the Bonneville project has purchased the facilities of the private power companies. The western Washington lines recently purchased by the Bonneville project from the West Coast Power Co. and the Willapa Electric are examples of the nonduplicating policy of the project.

POLICY PROVISIONS

Mr. Chairman, the policy covering the transmission and marketing of Bonneville power has been set by Congress in the organic act, approved August 20, 1937. The four outstanding policy provisions of this legislation are as follows:

First. The Administrator is directed to sell the power at such a rate, subject to approval by the Federal Power Commission, so that the Federal Government will be reimbursed over a reasonable period, with interest, for its investment in power facilities. The interest rate has been set by administrative action at 3½ percent and the amortization period 40 years.

Second. The Administrator is directed to construct, or purchase and to operate, transmission facilities to existing and potential markets, so as to encourage the widest possible diversified use of electricity.

Third. The Administrator is directed that the project is to be operated for the benefit of the general public, particularly rural and domestic consumers.

Fourth. Fifty percent of Bonneville power is reserved to 1942 for public bodies and agencies. However, in this interim the Administrator has authority to sell such reserved power so long as it does not interfere with the preferential rights of public agencies.

NEW INDUSTRIES

The Chicago Tribune has raised the issue that Bonneville is taking away industries from other sections of the country. This editorial has been answered in the Portland Journal. Bonneville has not solicted industries from other sections of the country. These industries which have contracted for Bonneville energy are branch factories or new industries which located in the Bonneville area because of natural resources, abundant cheap power, and market possibilities. The Aluminum Co., so the testimony before the subcommittee shows, was contemplating either the Northwest or Canada. The Northwest was selected over further Canadian expansion. The very nature of the aluminum company's business requires a plant location in close proximity to low-priced power. To meet competitive conditions current has to be be secured for aluminum manufacture at about half the price of the lowest cost steam power. The iron industry, which recently executed a contract with Bonneville, located in this area because of the close proximity to iron-ore deposits in Columbia County, Oreg., and an existing market for such products on the west coast.

BUDGET REQUEST

The Administrator submitted a construction budget estimate to the Bureau of the Budget totaling $9,290,000. This was reduced by the Bureau to $6,000,000. This Budget cut resulted in the elimination of the following transmission lines in Oregon:

First. Albany to Waldport.
Second. Pendleton to La Grande.
Third. The Dalles to Bend.

The transmission lines included in the $6,000,000 estimate are set out on page 204 of the printed Budget, and include the following Oregon lines:

First. St. Johns-Tillamook.
Second. St. Johns-Astoria.
Third. Pasco to Pendleton.
Fourth. Surveys, Waldport and Bend Lines.
Fifth. Surveys, Pendleton to La Grande.

OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE

Mr. Chairman, the estimate and request of the Administrator of the Bonneville Project for $650,000 for operation and maintenance, it is believed represents the minimum that will be required for operation of these facilities for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1940. It is reasonable to conclude that inasmuch as the transmission lines are just being made available and contracts are being negotiated and entered into for the disposition of the power generated at the Bonneville project, that a considerably larger appropriation will be required for this service during these initial years of operation. The Administrator estimates that approximately $2,200,000 worth of power will be marketed during the fiscal year 1941. His reports show that there will be in operation on January 1, 1941, 1,610 miles of transmission lines, and 14 stations on the main line. There will be available with the completion of units 3 and 4, 194,000 kilowatts for sale. This fiscal year will be the first one in which the plant will be in operation for the full period. It is good business judgment to provide sufficient operating funds to operate the plant at full capacity, in order that the facilities now provided will be put to full use, not only furnishing a much-needed service to the residents of the district served, but also returning to the Government revenues which will not only return interest on the Federal investment and power facilities, but eventually retire the capital investment.

TRANSMISSION LINES CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Chairman, as I have stated, unfortunately the Federal Government did not provide for transmission lines for marketing the power generated at Bonneville so that they would be completed and available at the time the power was generated. By reason of this shortsightedness, considerable revenues have been lost. It would be unfortunate to continue this policy by not providing sufficient funds to complete the network of transmission lines so that they would be available as fast as the generators are completed. If this is done, all power generated, as shown by the reports of the Administrator, can be marketed, and thus bring to the Government revenues with which to carry the investment.

You have in the record, from the reports and justification of the appropriations requested from the Administrator of the Bonneville Project, the construction program for the fiscal year 1941. These show that the 19 projects listed are estimated to cost $22,500,000. Three million, five hundred and six thousand, two hundred and eighty-eight dollars of this sum was obligated during the fiscal year 1939, and the Administrator estimates that $9,975,294 will be used during the current year. If this estimate is correct, there will be a balance needed for construction during the fiscal year 1941 of $9,018,418. Under appropriations already made there will be available $3,018,418 to apply against this, which will leave $6,000,000 required as a new appropriation to carry on this work for the fiscal year 1941, which the Administrator states will be the minimum required to comply with the act of August 20, 1937.

I most earnestly submit that this appropriation does not fall in the category of those which we are considering at this session of Congress for new projects or initiating new undertakings. Rather, it is one made necessary to complete an existing project and provide the necessary marketing facilities to enable the Government to utilize a large investment already made. It will not only provide much-needed service to the people of my community and elsewhere, but it will enable the Government to secure adequate returns on its investment.

Should the Congress fail to make the appropriations requested in the Budget, this project will be slowed up and much of the developments which are proceeding so satisfactorily will be stopped. Furthermore, much of the large investment which the Federal Government has in the project will be forced into idleness. Good common sense and good business judgment require, now that the project is well toward the stage of completion, that the necessary funds should be made available for its completion and successful operation.

If the $6,000,000 Budget item is reduced, it will result in further curtailment of Oregon lines and in incomplete facilities. An examination of the projects and functions on page 204 of the printed Budget will show that part of these lines will be built from current funds and completed with funds requested in the $6,000,000 figure. Any cut necessarily will leave work uncompleted and deny service to existing markets.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 14 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House particularly to a paragraph appearing in the bill at page 86 having to do with a small water-conservation project for construction in part by relief forces; the Government's part is reimbursable and the remainder by W. P. A.

In this connection also I call your attention to a letter written by Secretary Ickes, of the Interior Department, in connection with this item by Senator HAYDEN. Among other things the Secretary said:

> There are two distinct phases of the human problem caused by the extended drought: First, that of anchoring insofar as possible the remaining population in the drought areas, and this can be accomplished in part through irrigation developments; and, second, that of providing opportunities for the rooting in new soil of the people who have drifted to the far western States from other areas, and this can be achieved in part by the completion of irrigation projects to utilize the water resources as yet unconserved in those States.
> Last year a start along this line was authorized with the appropriation of the Interior Department Appropriation Act of 1940 of $5,000,000 to develop a few irrigation projects in the Great Plains and other arid and semiarid regions on which this appropriation and some relief funds might be used. Several of these projects are now under way in Montana, North Dakota, and South Dakota. They must, of necessity born of the meager water supplies available near usable lands, be small, and they must, because relatively high per acre, be separated from the usual Federal reclamation projects since they cannot be expected to return directly in dollars to the Treasury the full amount of their construction costs. In savings in future relief expenditures and in the prevention of human misery, however, they will make up the deficit uncounted times.
> A program involving approximately $5,000,000 a year on a reimbursable basis for projects of this type and relief and nonreimbursable expenditures of $5,000,000 to $7,000,000 a year seems indicated. I am furnishing, as you suggested, an outline of a 5-year program proposed by the Bureau of Reclamation of this size, which could be carried forward efficiently.

Under what is known as the Wheeler-Case law, authorizations for the appropriation of $5,000,000 was enacted into law. In other words, it is unnecessary hereafter under the provisions of that act to make any further authorizations, for Congress now has the power to make the appropriations.

The present bill does not carry any funds for this particular sort of improvement and relief work. It simply reappropriates the amount unexpended of the $5,000,000 that Congress appropriated a year ago. This amount should be increased to the original $5,000,000 that Congress appropriated a year ago and for which authorization was carried in the act referred to. I understand there is about $2,000,000 in the fund unused.

The construction of these projects is one of the best methods in which to employ relief labor. The States that are affected and involved in this plan of small irrigation projects are Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, and Wyoming. In my own State the program has already begun in the construction of what is known as Buffalo Rapids No. 2. The major part of the work is now being done by W. P. A. labor. If this project were not in course of construction those men would be employed perhaps on some other work which would not inure to the permanent benefit of the country. As it is, however, the work they are doing will enable in the neighborhood of 300 families to make a living in the future in that territory once the work is completed. It will take these people off relief. If this plan is carried out, what is going on with reference to this Buffalo Rapids project will go on also in the States I have mentioned.

It is true that all the funds the Government will appropriate will not be reimbursed, because of necessity these projects are more expensive in construction than the regular irrigation or reclamation projects; consequently, we must look at the picture as Secretary Ickes looks at it, from the human standpoint as well as the economic standpoint and from the standpoint of employment of W. P. A. labor on useful and productive projects of permanent future benefit to the country.

I want to call the attention now of the Members of the House to a few things in a general way concerning reclamation.

When the Federal Government makes appropriations for battleships, rivers and harbors, flood control, and a thousand-and-one other undertakings, it immediately writes off the cost.

When it builds a reclamation project it makes an enduring investment that returns the outlay and contributes continually to the development and prosperity of the country as a whole, not alone the West, where its operations are centered.

In the 38 years of its operations, Federal reclamation has made its place as a permanent function of the Government's activities and it is here to stay. Its record justifies its continuance, and its future will further emphasize the importance of a program of far-reaching consequences.

Here are a few of the outstanding achievements of Federal reclamation:

It has created more than 50,000 farms, which have been carved out of the desert areas of the arid and semiarid West.

It has provided homes on these farms for nearly a quarter of a million people.

In the cities, towns, and villages that are dependent for their existence on the purchasing power of these farms are nearly three times that number of persons.

Property values in farming lands of nearly half a billion dollars have resulted.

It has stabilized conditions in many areas that were threatened with desolation by shortage of water supplies, and has preserved property values even greater than those it has created.

It has provided a market for the manufactured and agricultural products of the Midwest, East, and South that has averaged more than $200,000,000 annually.

The benefits that have accrued to the 15 Western States in which reclamation projects are operating could be multiplied without exaggeration. Results that have been so favorable in other sections of the country could be given even further emphasis.

The individual States that have been sagebrush land transformed into veritable oases are proud of the reclamation projects and their records.

Montana is one of the States that can offer outstanding examples of what reclamation has done and can accomplish. On the Lower Yellowstone we have the Lower Yellowstone and Huntley projects. To the northward and westward we have the Milk River and Sun River projects, and just outside of my district there is the rehabilitated Bitter Root enterprise and the Frenchtown project. In the eastern part of the State the first unit of the Buffalo Rapids project has been completed, and the second is under construction.

In all this, Federal policy has brought water to more than 3,000 farms in Montana and has rescued more than 300 in addition. It provides the major support for some 40,000 persons in the rural and urban areas of the projects.

Why should the Federal Government be concerned with the development of the West?

More than a century and a quarter after the frontier of the Nation had moved west of the Mississippi, the Federal Government retained ownership of nearly 60 percent of the land area of the 11 States of the Mountain and Pacific groups. Properly in the name of conservation, it has sought to prevent the exploitation of great national resources, but by so doing it has deprived the States of taxable values with which they might have financed their own internal improvements.

The Federal outlay for Federal reclamation developments is an investment that is not only repayable but pays. It might be emphasized that until recent years practically all construction work was paid for out of the proceeds from the sale of public lands and other western resources, and the funds returned to the reclamation revolving fund created by the reclamation law of 1902.

I want to dilate upon this statement. The approximate revenue from the various sources of income from the federally owned land, which includes proceeds from the sale of land, oil royalties, mineral-right royalties, and licenses for water-power rights, amounts to in excess of $3,000,000 annually. This, together with the amount paid on repayment contracts, amounts to about $10,000,000 per year.

How well have these payments been kept up?

The most recent figures available show that out of $200,000,000 invested in projects that have been completed and are in a repayment status, more than $62,314,000 have been repaid. This record shows that better than 30 percent of the Federal investment thus classified has been returned and the future will show an even better record.

The $62,000,000 or thereabouts returned to the Treasury, represents about 97 percent of all payments which have become due and payable, on contracts now in force, which virtually shows no losses have occurred on these contracts.

As for funds advanced from the General Treasury for construction of western projects, attention may be called to the record of Boulder Dam. Although operating only a little more than 2 full years, the revenue from the sale of power and water at Boulder Dam on June 30, 1939, totaled more than $9,250,000. After providing operating funds, more than $8,200,000 has been returned to the Federal Treasury.

Now, in my own State, we have approximately 33,000,000 acres of land which is federally owned, which is about one-third of the entire State. If this property was owned by the State of Montana, the income from it would go some little way in meeting the cost of internal improvements. Now, what have we done?

Last year we appropriated about $61,000,000, which was expended for reclamation projects. This year this sum has been cut to $43,000,000. Over a period of 10 years the approximate expenditure was about $40,000,000 per year. Now, what will happen as a result of this curtailment of developing and completing these projects?

Take, for instance, in my own State. There has been expended on the Vaughn division of the Sun River project $2,400; on the Gibson Dam the sum of $2,515,000—on the same river—uncompleted. The dam is built, but nothing else has been done; $47,300 has been expended on the Fort Peck pumping project. To say the least, if we are going to curtail the expenditures on these projects it will slow their completion up, if not stop the work and the development of of the country.

In 1939, a total of $1,403,800 was spent on reclamation in Montana all told. Five hundred and forty thousand dollars of this was emergency money for Buffalo Rapids. That is a pumping project on the lower Yellowstone. In 1940, $1,100,000 has been spent on reclamation in Montana up to date.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know your hearings have been lengthy. I am here to urge you to make the maximum possible allotments to carry on the reclamation program in the West. I shall speak for the most part about this program in the State I represent in the Congress—Montana—but I feel I should touch a few brief generalities. I do this because this great reclamation program going on in a group of States that comprise nearly half the total area of our country is a program still not clearly understood by our neighbors in other parts of our Nation.

So I want to say:

First. That water for irrigation purposes is literally, not figuratively, the lifeblood of our agricultural and livestock industries. Nature does not treat the West as kindly as she does other States. So our farmers and ranchers are compelled to seek additions to their natural water supply.

Second. We do not produce on our western lands crops that compete with those of the Midwest or any other area. Our main crops are forage crops. Any informed person should know that the West sells its crops inside the bellies of its cattle and sheep.

Third. The main object of the West is to conserve its water and thus to assure an adequate supply of water to nourish lands already in use—not to bring new lands into cultivation.

And, finally, I want to repeat with all the emphasis I can command that the Federal Government does not give or even spend money for reclamation. It merely loans the West the money. And so far the West's record for repayment of every cent of these reclamation loans is better, according to the Treasury's own records, than the record of any other borrower to whom the Federal Government has advanced funds.

Gentlemen, the West is proud to declare and to prove that reclamation projects "pay out," and, what is more important, they "pay back."

Gentlemen, I maintain no good banker, no wise businessman cuts down on that part of his operations which have the best repayment records. He does not trim the borrower or the branch which it benefits him most to keep in operation.

This year the 1941 Budget estimate for reclamation construction purposes is, roughly, $44,000,000, or about a 30-percent decrease from the approximate sixty-one millions appropriated for the current fiscal year.

Aside from the very extreme hardship this drastic curtailment will work on the States of the West, is this a wise move so far as the Federal Government is concerned, gentlemen? I am enthusiastic for improving the condition of our National Treasury. I heartily approve a start toward Budget balancing. I agree it is time to bring Federal income and Federal outgo closer together. But is this the right way to do it; is it the hardheaded, practical business way to do it?

I say no; it is not. And I invite you to a reconsideration of the entire reclamation program, so that you can convince yourselves that money advanced for reclamation development—not "given" or "spent"—is money that will come back into the Treasury.

I shall not review the whole case for reclamation. I think you know it. I merely ask you to reconsider the West's claims.

Specifically, I endorse and submit for your immediate consideration the proposal which has the Secretary of the Interior's approval and under which small-type irrigation and reclamation projects can be carried on in the States of Montana, Wyoming, Utah, North and South Dakota, Colorado, Arizona, Idaho, Nebraska, New Mexico, Kansas, Oregon, Texas, and Oklahoma.

Project	Description	Area	Estimated cost, non-relief funds
	MONTANA	Acres
Big Horn-Turlock	Pumping, Yellowstone River	1,100	$25,000
Sadie Flat	do	4,691	200,000
Haley	do	1,500	120,000
Musselshell	Deadman's Basin Reservoir	15,000	1,000,000
Various	Upper tributaries of Missouri River and Yellowstone River tributaries.	10,000	655,000
Total		32,291	2,000,000

Gentlemen, this is not asking for huge sums for giant reclamation projects. This is asking you merely to appropriate the comparatively small amount needed to continue a program of vast benefits which was started when you appropriated $5,000,000 last session.

These projects, under the plan already begun, can be carried along in conjunction with the relief program in these States. That is the way the entire program was projected. You know the program as the one encompassed in the Wheeler-Case Act. This legislation envisioned and has utilized the cooperation of the W. P. A. It got off to a fine start last year. But there is no new money in the bill to continue this fine work. Not a great deal is needed.

Over a 5-year period, the Secretary of the Interior has indicated that the necessary appropriation could be limited annually to about $5,000,000 of reimbursable funds—funds the Government gets back—plus another $5,000,000 of non-reimbursable funds to cover the conjunctive use of the W. P. A. set-up.

In other words, here is a chance for the Federal Government to continue a profitable line of operations—one with an excellent "pay back" record, and at the same time contribute to a solution of the ever-pressing relief problem.

Before long, gentlemen, the Appropriations Committee of the House and Senate, as you well know, will have to take up again this relief problem. Here is a chance to help solve it.

In Montana, gentlemen, this reclamation program is vital. The greatest need of our ranchers and farmers is an adequate water supply. Montanans do not ask Uncle Sam for a hand-out. They merely ask him to keep up a good program he has already started and give them a chance to make a living. They will pay him back—every cent. They will not ask for relief.

The Reclamation Bureau has been investigating perhaps a dozen Montana projects which later on can be developed to assist our farmers and stockmen. There is the Yellowstone River Basin, with possibilities for storing water outside Yellowstone Park. There is the Vaughn division of the Sun River project—with the dam already built; the Gibson Dam on the Sun River; the Daley Spur for storage on Beaverhead River; the Canyon Ferry Reservoir on the Missouri River; Lake Como Reservoir on the Bitterroot River, and the general development growing out of the Fort Peck pumping project. This will benefit not only Montana but North Dakota as well. The Saco Divide project on the Milk River, Deadman's Basin Reservoir—gentlemen, I could still name more, but I will not burden you with more detail.

This program, gentlemen, is proving out. It would be penny-wise and pound-foolish, indeed, to suspend such a program. So I urge you, gentlemen, to re-examine this program and make the revisions that will permit continuance of a plan that not only is vital to Montana and other Western States, but which affords real cash returns to the Treasury.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman is making an extremely interesting and important statement concerning reclamation. As a member of the Interior Department subcommittee, and one who has been assigned by the chairman of that committee to handle these hearings, I know the gentleman's deep interest in reclamation and I want to pay this tribute to him because he deserves it.

If every Member of Congress from the 17 Western States where water conservation is essential took the same interest in reclamation as the gentleman has during the time he has been in Congress it would be but a short time until reclamation would receive recognition throughout the entire United States. The gentleman's district has profited by reason of his industry and rightly so. These appropriations are not a gift to his district because they are being returned to the Treasury as rapidly as they become due.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thank the gentleman for his kindness and generosity. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS].

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I want to read a letter from a businessman in my district, because I feel it represents the feelings of most of the businessmen in the country. The letter was sent me by Heilig Bros. Co., of York, Pa., and reads as follows:

YORK, PA., February 28, 1940.

HON. CHESTER M. GROSS,
United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GROSS: Please use your influence in trying to bring about changes to the Wagner Labor Relations Act at this session of Congress. This law in its present state has done more to create unemployment and keep idle cash from flowing into legitimate manufacturing enterprises than any one thing on the New Deal calendar.

Heilig Bros. Co. have been contemplating the building of a new mill for the past 4 years, and every time we steam up enough of courage to move forward, the Wagner Act comes along and cracks down on some employer that takes the wind out of our sails, and we settle down to the point that under this lopsided act or law we have all the business we want.

For your information, we employ 150 hands, all voters, and had it not been for the Wagner Act in its present form we would have 300 on our pay roll. We made an offer some time ago to the county commissioners of York County for the old poorhouse tract, but doubt very much if we would consider it at this time if they decide to take us up, unless this very unfair labor law is changed. Heilig Bros. Co. have been operating 100 percent all through the depression. In fact, our plant has operated on a full-time schedule—that of 24 hours, 6 and 7 days a week—over a period of 16 years. Our minimum wage starts at 44 cents, time and half time for all time over 42 hours; and with such a record the Wagner Labor Relations Board is using every means possible in trying to coerce us to recognize the C. I. O. as bargaining agent for our employees through the steel-workers' organizing committee. In working up their case against us the Labor Relations Board's representative, Mr. House, of Philadelphia, Pa., has been before us and our attorney, and one would have to arrive at the conclusion that this fellow is a representative of the C. I. O., getting his pay through the National Labor Relations Board, and using every means at his disposal to coerce employers into becoming the "stooge" of the C. I. O. In other words, the Wagner Labor Relations Board is using every means at their disposal to try to blackjack legitimate business or manufacturing enterprise into joining the C. I. O.

Very truly yours,

HEILIG BROS. CO.,
C. H. HEILIG, President.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, within less than 50 years the production and the utilization of milk has so increased in this country that today we are the greatest of dairy nations.

About 25,000,000 cows are milked daily on three-fourths of the Nation's 6,000,000 farms. More than 45,000,000 quarts of milk are delivered to homes and stores. Milk, cheese, butter, ice cream, and other dairy products create an estimated annual output of $3,500,000,000. The cash farm income from dairy products in 1937 was $1,530,000,000. The next greatest single item was cattle and calves, $987,000,000, and the third, hogs, $902,000,000.

However, in spite of our splendid facilities in the dairy industry, in the consumption of these products we do not make a good showing. For example, in 1935 in the per capita consumption of cheese the United States stood sixth among the nations. In the consumption of whole milk we were third; in the consumption of butter, about ninth.

The following tables prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture illustrate the situation:

Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Compiled from Imperial Economic Committee report, 1936.

If the people of America were consuming the amount of dairy products necessary for a proper diet and for good health, there would probably be no surplus to worry about.

In 1939 the Legislature of Iowa created the Iowa State Dairy Commission. Its purpose, among other things, was to promote "the increased use and consumption of dairy products, whether processed or unprocessed, by providing for a research, educational, publicity, advertising, and sales promotion campaign." The work of this organization should be beneficial to the entire dairy industry regardless of State lines.

We believe we have a good product to sell, and we are spending our money and energy in advertising it. This program is being carried on in conjunction with the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station. This experiment station is supported by both the State of Iowa and the Federal Government, in accordance with the provisions of the Bankhead-Jones law. It has always seemed to me that the weakness of the present farm program has been the failure to develop new uses for agricultural surpluses. It is gratifying to note that both the Federal and State Governments are now becoming active along this line.

As a part of this program and in conjunction with the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station, the Iowa State Dairy Commission has recently developed three types of cheese.

I wish to read here the following letter from E. S. Estel, of Waterloo, Iowa, which sets out the character of the work being done.

WATERLOO, IOWA, February 27, 1940.

Hon. JOHN W. GWYNNE,
Congressional Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JOHN: You will receive by express, simultaneously we hope with this letter, a box containing three very interesting types of cheese developed by the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station. These cheeses are a most valuable contribution towards finding new uses for milk produced not only by all the dairy farmers of Iowa, and they are members of our association, but the dairy farmers of America as well, for you will recognize that these cheeses are superior in most cases to the cheeses which are now being imported from abroad.

The Iowa State Dairy Association voted unanimously, at its annual meeting held February 23, to purchase these cheeses and send them to you with our compliments. We feel that the cheeses will show you better than we can tell you how valuable the work of the experiment station is to us in finding new and improved uses for milk, a tremendously vital thing to dairy farmers.

As you know, the funds to support the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station come from the State of Iowa and from the Federal Government. Some years ago the Bankhead-Jones law authorized certain funds to be allocated to experiment-station work, but these funds have not been included in this year's House appropriation bill. Were these funds, which have been authorized by law, made available, the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station would receive $16,000 to continue the work in cheese and other important agricultural research; or, put in another way, our experiment station is this year short $16,000 of funds on which it had planned to carry on work of this kind.

We hope that you will enjoy the cheeses yourself and that you will see fit to show your colleagues from other States how good Iowa cheese really can be. We further hope that you will use your influence to have the Bankhead-Jones funds restored to the House appropriation bill so that the research work carried on at our agricultural experiment station, which is so valuable to the members of our association, and to the farmers of the Middle West, may be continued.

Sincerely,

IOWA STATE DAIRY ASSOCIATION,
E. S. ESTEL, Secretary-Treasurer.

IOWA SWISS-TYPE CHEESE

A cheese possessing the excellent eating qualities of Swiss cheese with a convenient form which will permit its wider sale. Swiss cheese is ordinarily made in "wheels," weighing 180 to 200 pounds, and the manufacture of a "miniature" style was thought to be impossible. Through the use of the proper culture of bacteria and the development of proper methods of manufacture, a 5-pound Swiss-type cheese has resulted which has some very unusual possibilities from the standpoint of sales and, therefore, milk utilization.

IOWA EDAM-TYPE CHEESE

This cheese has been developed by proper manufacturing methods. It should be possible to find a market for large amounts of milk produced in this country through this very attractive medium. Further studies need to be made to improve all of the cheeses and particularly this one.

IOWA BLUE CHEESE

A Roquefort-type cheese made from cows' milk. True Roquefort cheese is made from all or part sheeps' milk. Curing requires a long time and with cheese made from cows' milk a considerable variation in the quality of cheese results. The experiment station has found that by homogenizing the milk which is used and the selection of appropriate ripening organisms a uniformly high-quality cheese can be produced in about half the length of time ordinarily required. Many people prefer this Iowa blue cheese to the imported Roquefort, due to the smoother, softer body and a flavor which they think is superior.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I was gratified this morning to have the gentleman from Oklahoma, in answer to my inquiry regarding the appropriation which has just been mentioned by the gentleman from Michigan for the benefit of the High Commissioner to the Philippines from the United States, say that he thought it was "food for thought" that we take that $141,000 expense item out of the excise taxes we are collecting on Philippine exports to this country and then returning to them.

It seems to me we in this country should do one of two things if we are to be consistent and practical in this direction. We should either go all the way in this matter and pursue a business-like course or cut out this talk about giving the Philippines their independence and deal with the subject as we would if they were not going to be given their independence in 1946. If we are going to give them their independence, it seems to me we are justified in treating them now as we would treat any other nation. On that basis I believe we would be justified in not spending $141,000 to maintain our High Commissioner over there and in not giving them back the excise taxes we collect and then so graciously and freely turn back to them under the present arrangement.

The reason I am interested in this particular matter is that I consider it the most important problem confronting the United States today with relation to our foreign affairs. In my estimation—and I will be so bold as to make a prediction at this time—within 15 to 18 months we will find that the situation in the Oriental arena is going to become much more severe and acute as it relates to our own peace than it is at the present time. I believe we will find the Japanese situation will have developed to a point if not of open warfare between Japan and the United States, and I pray that it may not, then of becoming a very serious problem and one fraught with much danger to ourselves.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman was interrogating the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] a while ago on the proposition of reducing the $141,000 by using as a set-off against it some of the excise taxes which we send to the Philippine Islands. It is my understanding that the excise tax on coconut oil brought in from the Philippines, which excise tax flows back to the Filipino treasury, and the excise tax on sugar coming in from the Philippines, amounts in round figures to between $25,000,000 and $27,000,000. It is also my understanding that the total budget of the Philippine Commonwealth ranges from 65,000,000 to 70,000,000 pesos, or, valuing the peso at 50 cents, half of that figure in dollars.

If that is the situation we are sending, say, from $25,000,000 to $27,000,000 to the Philippines each year out of these two excise taxes as against, roughly, a $35,000,000 budget, collected from the Filipinos by the Commonwealth. As I understood the gentleman, that was the approach he was making to this $141,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is correct. I wanted to point out it is just about the silliest, if not the most asinine, thing that we in this Congress could possibly do to continue to fool ourselves, to hide the real intent in this thing and not to face the facts in a realistic way.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I started to mention the seriousness of the Japanese situation over there, and if I am not mistaken our relationship in the Philippines is quite relevant in connection with any consideration of the Japanese situation. I said a moment ago I think that our relations there and the problem in the Orient is the greatest problem with which we are confronted in this country today. I think it is equally important, and should be considered on an equal basis, with our unemployment problem, great as that is, because if we get into a war, from the experiences we had in 1917 and 1918 and the years since then, we know that all of our economic system is disrupted from a war; so I say if we get into a war in the Orient our economic system is going to be still more disrupted, creating economic chaos and more turmoil and more unemployment after the thing is over with and settled; so it has a very immediate and direct bearing not only on our peace, but indirectly on the general future welfare of our workingmen and women, so we should all be interested in it.

I do not believe many people have ever taken the pains to study the so-called Tanaka report, which was put out in 1927 by the then Prime Minister of Japan, who, in that report, made out a program with reference to Japan's expansion and development based on a world viewpoint. In that program the Prime Minister recommended that Japan go into China, which they have done by degrees starting 4 years later or in 1931. I want to point out a few of the things which the Tanaka report suggested and to show that it is being carried out by Japan, in order to show what we can expect in the future with reference to our own situation in the Orient and with reference to the Philippines.

Japan, as we know, has gone into Manchuria completing her easy conquest there in 1932. The Tanaka report then recommended that Japan go into Inner Mongolia. They have done that. Then the report recommended that Japan go into Outer Mongolia. Well, they attempted that, but they have been stopped there temporarily by Russia. Then the report recommended that they go into China and mop up there, and it even recommends that they set up puppet governments whenever Japan goes into and conquers these provinces, and this has been done, as you know.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is the gentleman familiar with the reported memoirs of Baron Tanaka, the former Japanese Premier, who outlined in those memoirs a comprehensive program for taking over control of Asia?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is what I am talking about now, except I am talking about the direct report which was made in the nature of a recommended program for expansion by the Prime Minister at the request of the Japanese Government, which I assume he inserted in his memoirs to which the gentleman from Idaho refers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I want to make one more observation.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. My concern, as a Member of the House, is not so much that we are sending this $25,000,000 or $27,000,000 to the Philippines, but my concern is what will the Filipinos do with the $25,000,000 or $27,000,000 or whatever the amount may be. What will they do with what has already been remitted. What will they do with that which is now subject to withdrawal from the United States to go to the Philippines? Will it be used on a purely constructive basis, preparing the Filipino economy to be independent of the United States as, when, and if Filipino independence is granted, or will those funds be wasted, spent recklessly, bring about no good and then, subsequent to the coming of independence, will we again have to contribute in the way of cash and other assistance to the preservation of the economy of the Philippines? That is the thing I am interested in.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the gentleman has quite well stated the situation. There is this additional aspect which I pointed out all during the first session of this Congress, and that is that the government officials in the Philippines are, of course, afraid of Japan, and for that reason are playing fast and loose with the Japanese, both in the Philippines and in Japan, which is not at all to our interest or fair to us in view of our largess and generosity which seems to have no end.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan if it is his contention or assumption that these benefit payments or processing taxes go to the Filipino nation, as a nation, or to the individual sugar producers.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They do not go to the individual sugar producers. Read the Sugar Act of 1937. This money is sent to the Treasury of the Philippines, presumably, for the purpose of enabling the Filipinos to adjust their economy so that they can operate without free trade with the United States following independence.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does not the money go to the Filipino Treasury as trustee for the producers who produce the sugar?

Mr. CRAWFORD. And then to the individual growers?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; not at all.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Before I conclude my remarks I want to point out one additional feature of this Japanese situation as it reflects on our own future.

At the present time Japan is pursuing a more or less watchful, waiting game. For this reason she is uncertain as to whether she wants England or Germany to win the European War, because under the terms of the anticomintern pact of 1936, which was entered into between Japan, Germany, and Italy, Germany at that time stated her intention of having a slice of the British-Dutch East Indies. In other words, I am informed, Germany has insisted in her conversations with Japan, then and since, that she wants to take over the Malay States, Sumatra, and some of the other immensely rich island possessions over there of European nations, including Holland as well as England and France, if she wins this war, Japan to get the islands east of Malaysia and Sumatra.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As I say, if Germany wins this war, and takes over the British Navy, Germany will be in a position to promote her claim for island colonies and possessions in the Far East, and which contemplates a split with Japan, which, of course, is obnoxious to Japan because she wants a corner on all the tin, oil, rubber, metals, and other raw materials in which these colonies abound. On the other hand, if England wins too fast, then Japan cannot promote this Tanaka program and go on and take over these immensely rich islands in the Indian Ocean, including the Philippines, and her last objective, India, which is a part of her ambition, as pointed out in this recommendation of Prime Minister Tanaka.

For that reason I think it is a vital thing that the people of this Nation be given the facts in this situation with reference to the Philippines and the Far East in general, so that we can decide on a realistic, farsighted program and policy and protect ourselves against what is growing over there, rather than to go on in a blind and unwise manner, as we have been doing during the past several years, continuing to get into deeper water and not protecting ourselves from what one can see on the horizon approaching us in reference to our foreign relations. The lives of our sons, and, indeed, the future safety and welfare of our Nation depends on this. I hope Americans will wake up on this.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, first, may I pay deserved tribute to the subcommittee which has charge of the bill now under consideration, the Interior Department appropriation bill. From the first time I appeared before the committee, in 1933, until the present day, I personally have had only the utmost courtesy and consideration shown me by the subcommittee, and as appears on page 377 of the record of the hearings, I have been permitted to sit with the subcommittee in consideration of the items of the bill pertaining to Alaska. I am deeply sensible of that privilege, and grateful to the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON], and to the other members of the subcommittee.

Alaska, of course, has much to do with the Department of the Interior and the Department of the Interior has much to do with the Territory of Alaska. Since the Bureau of Fisheries and the Bureau of Biological Survey have been brought within the Department of the Interior, that Department is even more important in the administration of the affairs of Alaska. The bill is a disappointment to those of us who live in Alaska in a great many particulars, but I can understand thoroughly and appreciate that the committee could do nothing else, under the circumstances, in view of the rule which was announced by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON], whereby it is the duty of the subcommittee to keep the bill within the Budget estimates.

However, I congratulate the subcommittee and the full committee upon doing one thing that should have been done several years ago, and that is making a more adequate provision for the use of airplanes in the game-law enforcement in the Territory.

I have said so often that I suppose I should not repeat it again, people generally really do not understand the condition in Alaska with its vast area and the scarcity of roads. If we had our roads equally divided among all of the 590,000 square miles embraced within the territory of Alaska, there would be only 21½ feet of road to each square mile. So in these latter days there is only one practical way to travel in many parts of Alaska, and that is by the use of airplanes; and it is reassuring to find set out on page 21 of the report of the bill that the committee has added $20,000 to the game-law enforcement estimates, which will permit the purchase of two airplanes for use by officers in the territory. That, in my judgment, is true economy. The money will be saved over and over again. The appropriation should have been made before, but at least, if made now, it will be effective in the future, and I hope there will be no objection to the item when we consider the bill for amendment.

To show the use of airplanes in Alaska, and to show particularly the character and capacity of some of our citizens, including some of the wildlife agents, as they are called, the game-law enforcement officers, who will use these planes, I refer briefly to a newspaper article which appears in the issue of the Cordova Daily Times, of Cordova, Alaska, of February 19, telling of the rescue of Benton W. Davis, a Civil Aeronautics Authority pilot whose airplane had crashed in the mountains of Alaska.

Planes went out from the nearby cities to search for him, and at last a pilot in one of the searching airplanes of the Star Air Lines discovered the wrecked machine on the side of a mountain. They knew that Mr. Davis was alive because some smoke issued from the wreck. Two wildlife agents, one named Grenold Collins and the other Clarence Rhode, in one airplane, and another man named Dick Miller, not connected with the Alaska Game Commission, who also flew a small plane, landed their ships on the steep mountain side near the wrecked plane. It was necessary for them to keep their propellors running, so steep was the mountain, in order to prevent the planes from sliding back downhill. But they took the wounded man aboard and brought him to the hospital. The planes of course were on skis. They rescued Pilot Davis and brought him to the hospital and now the report is that he will recover. Those men, both wildlife agents, Collins and Rhode, and Dick Miller, who is not connected with the enforcement of the Alaska game law, are entitled to the greatest credit. They risked their own ships and their own lives in making the rescue. Their faithful and valiant work will not be forgotten.

The following is an account of the rescue as it appeared in the February 19 issue of the Cordova Times:

C. A. A. FLYER RESCUED FROM CRASH UNDER DIFFICULT CONDITIONS

Following 24 hours' imprisonment in his wrecked plane and one of the most thrilling and dramatic rescues ever written into the annals of aviation history, Benton W. "Steve" Davis, Civil Aeronautics Authority pilot, was reported this afternoon to be resting easier in an Anchorage hospital.

Davis is suffering from a fractured vertebra, broken leg, frozen feet, bruises, and exposure and shock.

After being missing since 10:35 a. m. Friday, Davis' plane, the C. A. A. Fleetwings amphibian, was located late Saturday afternoon by Pilot Kenneth Neese, one of eight searchers, near Rabbit Creek, just west of Portage Pass. Neese, with his large Star Airlines ship, was unable to land in the limited space on the mountain where the C. A. A. plane lay, so he summoned the light planes of Wildlife Agent Grenold Collins and Dick Miller.

Collins and Miller both landed in a space of 75 feet on the mountain. Wildlife Agent Clarence Rhode of Cordova was with Collins. They had to block their ships and keep the propellers turning to prevent them from sliding back down the mountainside.

The rescuers made a half-mile climb to Davis, who had freed himself from his plane by shooting out a panel with a heavy service revolver, releasing his frozen foot that had been held nearly 24 hours.

Collins succeeded in taxying his plane to a point near Davis, and the badly injured man was put aboard. Collins headed his ship down the mountain and gunned the motor. He raced through knee-deep drifts and took off much as a ski jumper might.

Miller, carrying Rhode as passenger, duplicated the feat after the Collins plane was clear and followed it to Anchorage.

ALMOST UNBELIEVABLE LANDINGS AND TAKE-OFFS MADE IN RESCUE

ANCHORAGE, February 19.—Rescued by brother fliers who performed almost unbelievable landings and take-offs on the side of a snow-covered mountain, Pilot Benton W. Davis is recovering from his crash injuries in the Anchorage hospital, where it was said he had a fractured vertebra, kidney injuries, and frozen feet, one of which still is in danger of amputation.

Physicians are confident he will recover.

Davis' rescue added a startling chapter to Alaska's history of remarkable air achievements. Gen. Collins, flying a Piper Cub, landed in a space 75 feet long. Heading the plane up the precipitous slope as the skis touched, Collins and Clarence Rhode were forced to jump out and prop the plane to prevent it from sliding down the mountain.

Dick Miller did the same feat with his Aeronca.

C. A. A. Inspector I. K. McWilliams circled above the scene and radioed news of the rescue.

Davis had left here at 10:20 a. m. Friday for Valdez. He checked in by radio 15 minutes after taking off and that was the last report from him until the wreckage of the Fleetwings was sighted by Pilot Kenneth Neese nearly 30 hours later.

Perfect weather conditions and excellent radio communication Saturday facilitated the search for the missing plane. Eight planes combed the uncharted peaks of the Chugach Mountains.

Quiet-spoken "Steve" Davis, who holds a captain's commission in the United States Army Reserve Corps, is well known in Cordova, where he has stopped frequently in his work as pilot in Alaska for the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

He is permanently attached to the Anchorage headquarters of the C. A. A., but has been making survey and personal flights all over Alaska for a year in connection with the Authority's radio range-station building program. His family—wife and four children—live in Anchorage.

I deeply regret, Mr. Chairman, the omission from the bill of a fund which I had anticipated might be set up in the Budget estimate, but was not, for the construction of a hospital for the Indians in Alaska, particularly for the relief of those who are afflicted with the dread scourge of tuberculosis. Dr. Townsend, who is chief of the Medical Bureau of the Office of Indian Affairs, appeared before the committee and he was asked the condition of the natives in Alaska with respect to tuberculosis. His testimony appears on page 441 of the printed record of the hearings. He said that there are about 650 deaths per 100,000 among the natives, as against 50 per 100,000 with the whites. In other words, the prevalence of tuberculosis among the native peoples of Alaska, according to this statement, and based upon the percentage of deaths, is about 13 times as great among the natives as among the white residents. There is no cure, and there never will be any cure, for tuberculosis among the natives of Alaska, Mr. Chairman, until those natives who have tuberculosis are hospitalized and thus taken out of the homes where they now live.

Most of the natives of Alaska live in small houses. Some of them in the cities would be called slums. Some of them are slums of the worst type. As many as a dozen people will live in two or three rooms. So if one of those natives gets tuberculosis, as is often the case, it is almost certain that unless the sick one is taken out of that small dwelling, practically every other member of the family, every other person who lives in the house, will ultimately be afflicted with the same dread disease.

As Dr. Townsend so well pointed out when I asked him the question, there is only one remedy for the situation, and that is the construction and operation of hospitals in order to take care of those who have tuberculosis. There is no other way to do it, and until we build the necessary hospitals to take care of those natives who have tuberculosis the death rate will simply remain at its present distressing height, 650 per 100,000, or 13 times as great as among the white people.

I had hoped that the Bureau of the Budget would send up an estimate for at least one hospital to be built this year. During the past 4 years we have received appropriations for one hospital a year. Four hospitals have either been built or are now under construction: One at Point Barrow in the extreme northern part of Alaska, one at Bethel in the southwest, one at Kanakanak on the shores of Bristol Bay, and one for which the money has been appropriated and which will be built next year at Tanana, on the Yukon River, near the mouth of the Tanana. We need at least four more hospitals to put an end to this tragedy that is befalling the native people.

Several years ago, Mr. Chairman, when the program for construction of hospitals for the natives of Alaska was entered upon, it was my understanding that unless prevented by unusual or extraordinary exigencies, money would be appropriated with which to construct one new hospital a year for the Alaska natives until their requirements had been met with a reasonable degree of adequacy. It was then estimated that the total construction expense of the hospitals required would be about $1,250,000. We are not yet half way through that program and, therefore, it is a pity to omit making an appropriation for one hospital for even 1 year. The lack of the necessary appropriation will inevitably mean the long-drawn-out illness and misery, and the eventual death, of many of our native citizens, because, as I have endeavored to point out, one person who contracts tuberculosis almost inescapably is the occasion of spreading the contagion to several others. In my judgment, we need additional hospital accommodations for the natives of Alaska to the extent of about 1,000 beds. If these facilities are furnished we may look forward confidently to a reduction in the rate of tuberculosis among the natives until that rate is little, if any, higher than the rate among the white citizens in the Territory, which is now one-thirteenth of that of the natives.

While I, too, not only understand but sympathize with the desire of other Members for strict economy in governmental operations, I submit that the omission to provide funds for an Indian hospital in Alaska at this session of Congress is not an exercise of economy at all, but is really wasteful—wasteful of human happiness and human life.

Knowing the futility of any such attempt, I do not intend to offer an amendment to the bill tomorrow to make the appropriation for which there is such instant and pressing need. But I urge, Mr. Chairman, that the need is great and that although we may endure the delay of 1 year in our hospital-building program, that delay should not be continued for more than a single year, and at the next session of Congress, when a similar bill is considered, the committee should make provision for the continuance of the program of hospital construction in Alaska no matter what the Bureau of the Budget says about it. After all, it is Congress and not the Bureau of the Budget that is charged by the Constitution and our laws with the duty of making appropriations.

Passing now to another subject, and one concerned with economic rather than humanitarian considerations, I should like to present to the House the need for additional transportation facilities between the United States and Alaska, and within the Territory itself. As I have often before observed, the Territory has sufficient natural resources to support, under proper conditions, several millions of people. And yet we have a present population of only about 70,000, or, at the most, 75,000.

It is my considered judgment that the population of Alaska would be steadily and sufficiently increased from year to year over a period of many years if we could only secure fairly adequate facilities of transportation at reasonable cost to bring people from the States to Alaska and then to provide them with similar facilities within the Territory itself.

The facilities needed are of three kinds or types—on the sea, on the land, and in the air.

With respect to air travel, what is needed at the present time is an improvement and enlargement of existing airplane landing fields and the construction of some others to take care of traffic within the Territory and also to provide for air transport, including air mail, between the United States and Alaska. This entire program could be put into construction at comparatively slight expense, and it ought to be undertaken without delay.

The land transport problem presents the difficulty of requiring substantial sums of money for the construction of the necessary highways. At the present time we do not need any more railroads in Alaska, but we do need a great deal in the way of highways or motor roads. In all of its vast area Alaska has now less than 2,500 miles of highway, and most of that is of a comparatively simple type. No paved roads exist anywhere outside of incorporated cities. We do not need paved roads in Alaska, but we do need immediately several thousand additional miles of comparatively low-grade motor roads. People who are familiar with road building tell me that roads of the type desired will cost in the interior of Alaska, in initial construction, about $6,000 per mile.

Several years ago with the aid of Government funds a farm settlement was established in Matanuska Valley, Alaska. The expense was considerable. In my opinion, at the present time it is not necessary to subsidize farm settlers or other settlers to locate and set up their homes in Alaska. If roads and highways are furnished, the settlers will come just as fast as we can take care of them. But it is impossible for settlers to lead a comfortable life unless roads are provided. It is no longer practicable for people, particularly women and children, to take up residence in some remote section where they have not even the simple means of communication with others which is afforded by a road.

I have in mind particularly, Mr. Chairman, the Kenai Peninsula region of Alaska. In this area the soil is deep and fertile, the climate is comparatively mild, the length of the summer growing season is ample, and the land generally is well suited to agriculture. And yet only a handful of people live there because of lack of means of transportation, because of lack of roads. I have long urged that a road be built the length of Kenai Peninsula and then connected with the Seward-Moose Pass Highway. The construction of such a road and of a few lateral roads would, in my estimation, lead to the speedy settlement of the entire Kenai Peninsula district, which can easily support several thousand people. Again I insist that the settlers do not need any grant or subsidy from the Government but they do need a road, and truly civilized living is all but impossible without road facilities.

The same thing is the case with respect to many other regions of Alaska. Roads are needed for the development of mining and for the use and occupation of the agricultural and grazing lands of the Territory. With regard to mining, I invite the attention of the Members to the testimony of Mr. Carl F. Whitham and Mr. Asa C. Baldwin, which appears in the printed record of the hearings at page 1155, wherein it was shown that the expense of construction of a road in the Nabesna country did not exceed in amount the taxes paid through the operation of one mine which was thereby developed and the working of which was thereby rendered possible. Mr. Baldwin and Mr. Whitham are capable, respected, and substantial citizens of Alaska. What they have said on the subject of road building in the Territory is deserving of the most careful consideration.

This bill contains no appropriation for the Alaska Railroad, other than an appropriation of the earnings of the road. The failure to make a sufficient grant to really complete the construction of the Alaska Railroad and put it in a reasonably good operating condition is an economic mistake. If the railroad were thus completed in the true sense of the word there would never be need of making any appropriation for operation.

Unfortunately, a suggestion has now been made with respect to the Alaska Railroad that is, to my mind, clearly fantastic, and that is the proposal to change the terminus of the road from Seward, its present seaboard terminus, to Portage Bay, Alaska. The general manager of the road has estimated the expense of the suggested change to be about $5,000,000, but I have good reason to believe that the cost of making the shift to Portage Bay would be in excess of $10,000,000. There is not, in my opinion, the slightest excuse or justification for entertaining such a proposal. It would wreck the city of Seward. It cannot be defended by the volume of traffic which is now carried on the railroad nor the volume thereof which any man can foresee for the next quarter of a century. The interest alone on even the lowest estimate of the cost of making the change would more than pay the increased expense of operation over that part of the line which it is proposed to abandon. It is unthinkable to me that with other appropriations cut to the very bone on grounds of economy, money should be appropriated for a project which even in more prosperous times would be completely devoid of merit.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

GLENN FRANK REPORT POINTS TO CONSTRUCTIVE REPUBLICAN PROGRAM

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, with the publication of the Glenn Frank committee report, honest Democratic leaders will no longer be able to accuse the Republican Party of lacking a constructive program. The 8-year-old attempt of the New Deal to throw mud at the partisans of the Grand Old Party with a charge of "obstructionism" can no longer bear repetition. For the Glenn Frank report is a complete answer to those critics who have maligned and slandered the Republican Party.

American citizens who have watched the tactics of the New Deal do not expect the Democratic National Committee to concede the wisdom of the Frank report. Yet, despite the wisecracking and cleverness which the "brain trust" has undertaken to belittle the work of the committee, its results are clearly recorded in the unchanging black and white of print. Newspaper editors, columnists, commentators have examined the conclusions offered by the report and have found them worthy of careful attention.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does the gentleman think that in the deliberation of a matter as important as a bill making appropriations for the Department of the Interior he should inject partisan politics?

Mr. BENDER. I think the gentleman is out of order, for, on the basis of the gentleman's question, then everything that has been done here this afternoon is out of order.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does the gentleman think it is in order to discuss partisan politics on a bill of this kind?

Mr. BENDER. I believe this is just as good a time as any other; and I am not alone in this belief, because it is my observation that there is quite a diversity of opinion on this important question.

Dr. Frank and his committee make no pretense of infallible wisdom in presenting their views. On many of the controversial issues of our day, they concede the possibility that they may be in error. It is highly significant that the authors of the report devote much of their discussion to considering the creative and constructive aspects of our national life. Rejecting the basic New Deal theory that we have reached a point in our national development where all frontiers have disappeared, the national program committee declares its belief that there are no "assignable limits to the possibilities of American enterprise." With telling force, the history of the epoch from 1905 to the present day is cited. In 1905 the automobile industry was not in sight. Yet it furnished the incentive for the greatest industrial expansion in a dozen areas of our national life that we have ever witnessed.

No less important than this refusal to accept the artificial barriers established by the New Deal is the finding of the committee that Republicans throughout the land believe that our unemployment crisis can be solved only through the expansion of normal private enterprise. Taken together with the similar conclusions reached by other polls of public opinion, this reassurance of American confidence in the future is a sharp challenge to the attitude of defeatism which has marked the New Deal.

Dividing its work into several important topics, the committee has treated our labor problems, our farm economy, our business difficulties, our social program, and our foreign relations from a viewpoint which is at once objective and optimistic. In analyzing the persistent unemployment, which is our most pressing obstacle to recovery, the legal right of workers to organize and to act collectively to improve their position is recognized as a basic fact. Without seeking in any way to minimize the importance of recent legislation, it is pointed out that the recognition of the rights of labor was not an achievement of the New Deal. It was established long before the Wagner Act. Republicans long ago recognized the principle of collective bargaining, and it is not an issue in the present campaign. Nevertheless, the committee notes a justified dissatisfaction with the operations of the National Labor Relations Board. In the words of the report:

> The National Labor Relations Act was conceived and has been administered in the spirit of industrial warfare instead of the spirit of orderly peaceful procedure between labor and management, which the act purports to foster—> in the interest of American workers and in the interest of a productive functioning of American enterprise. The objective of such amendment must be to maintain without wavering a firm guarantee of the right of free organization and collective bargaining, while so revising the provisions and procedures and so altering the spirit of the administration of the act as to surround the whole employee-employer relationship with a sense of complete fairness to all parties and all interests concerned.

Specifically, the report calls for "responsible amendment" of the act—

To carry out its recommendations a new judicial and administrative plan is proposed. Under this proposal the judicial functions now performed by the Board would be lodged in a tribunal entirely apart from the Labor Relations Board.

There is frank recognition by the committee that this is only one step in a necessary process looking toward the restoration of private employment. In the business area the long-standing feud between the New Deal and industry is all too apparent. Its termination is essential if anything approaching recovery is to obtain. Governmental regulation is sanctioned as necessary, but under our system—

> It is clear that the best interests of the American people require that we preserve and modernize our traditional system of free enterprise with the minimum governmental regulation necessary to prevent abuse and promote justice in its operations.

Free enterprise demands protection of consumers, markets, and investments. But no regulation is justified when it goes beyond the protective purpose and destroys the freedom of enterprise. The task of producing more and better goods at lower prices is the only way in which the living standards of the Nation can be lifted. Under present conditions the standard must inevitably fall. This view of free enterprise is no idle talk. In our normal routine of living as a free people free enterprise is the be-all and the end-all. Yet free enterprise under protective regulation has been seriously threatened. In the T. V. A. experiment free enterprise received a smashing blow at the hands of our Government. The willingness to risk savings for investment purposes is a condition without which our economic liberty becomes a meaningless term. Under New Deal leadership there is no willingness to undertake risks. Americans cannot predict what limitations may be placed by their Government upon private enterprise. Reasonable profits may meet unsurmountable obstacles in the form of new and punitive taxes or new and increasingly stringent methods of business regulation.

To correct this situation, the program committee urges the readoption of our old attitude toward the development of our private enterprise. Our Government must see to the existence of an adequate supply of short-term credit for agriculture, industry, and commerce. It must see that there is sufficient long-term credit and investment capital to finance a constantly expanding enterprise in each of these fields, but the program of the Government must be that of overseer rather than that of provider. All those agencies of the Government providing long-term capital to private enterprise should be discontinued, in the opinion of the Frank reporters. Their place can well be taken by private sources, once the Nation is convinced that Government does not mean to wage war upon its industry.

No program can be successful in the long run unless it satisfies the maximum number of our people. The great one-third of our people who derive their livelihoods from agriculture cannot go on permanently scaling down the output of our American farms with results any more satisfactory than would be achieved if our manufacturers did the same thing. A policy of scarcity in farming as an industry is unthinkable as a constructive solution to the Nation's problem so long as there are those who need food, clothing, and shelter in our midst.

To replace the present treatment of the farm problem, the Frank committee suggests the use of "that form of subsidy which is simplest to apply generally and which will necessitate the least possible red tape of regulation and the least possible number of bureaucratic regulators." Nothing will ever solve our agricultural problems but a definite expansion of the farmer's market, domestic and foreign. Nothing will ever expand these markets but a constructive solution of our domestic problems and the reestablishment of international peace.

Meanwhile, we recognize the need for relief. Such relief must be adequate in volume, free from partisan bias in its administration, and designed to stimulate self-respect rather than to destroy it. In the New Deal's long record on relief the Federal Government has centralized administration within itself. It has discriminated between economic and racial groups. It has inflated costs at periods shockingly close to national elections. Impartially conducted investigations have demonstrated that total construction costs with relief labor have run from 25 to 150 percent more than construction under private contracts.

These are for the most part abuses of methods, not of purposes. They can be corrected through a program which will maintain and develop local responsibility to replace Federal control. To bring them into the best possible practice, the administration of relief needs should be conducted through a national bipartisan commission completely removed from all direct relationship to party affairs.

On a half dozen fronts the acceleration of building, the creation of a health program, the function of our Government should be to stimulate rather than to dominate. Once we have begun the task of setting our house in order, we may be better able to lend our aid to the gigantic problems of international affairs.

There is much to be done. The report of Dr. Frank and his colleagues, by pointing out the very existence of this multitude of American problems, has charted a course for our Nation. Our people can meet and overcome every difficulty in the list. We who have conquered the wilderness, solving nature's problems, will never be dismayed by the problems created by men. [Applause.]

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, much has been said on the floor this afternoon in colloquy between the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN A. HALL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] regarding a resolution passed by the New York State Legislature on the third term of the President. It is pathetic to realize that petty politics is brought from the capital of a State to the National Capital of this country. All of this controversy was prearranged and concocted with the idea of creating an issue in the National Capital on the basis of the passage by the Legislature of the State of New York of a resolution condemning a third term for a President who is qualified and whom the people demand. Is this the case? Let us turn to the record and see what actually happened in the capital city of New York.

McNaboe—I do not know whether I would call him a Democrat or a Republican, except that I do know that his actions in a number of years were not those of a Democrat—more or less constituted himself as an independent party playing ball with Democrats or Republicans, or anyone who suited his purpose. The present State Senate of New York is made up of 27 Republicans and 24 Democrats. Not a Democrat voted for McNaboe's resolution.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I cannot yield unless I can get more time.

Mr. RICH. I will yield the gentleman time in which to answer this question.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Several years ago in the House of Representatives and in the Senate a resolution was offered by Democrats limiting the tenure of office of a President to two terms. How can the gentleman answer that? Has there been a change of heart?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. All I am interested in now is the present state of public opinion. The President has not declared whether he wants a third term; it is none of our business under present law, and we should not force him to commit himself one way or the other. This resolution is just a way of creating a lot of smoke for the purpose of arousing public sentiment and making an issue with a lot of people. A great deal of this propaganda is prearranged more or less to force the President to say, "I do not want a third term." I do not know whether he does or not, I do not speak for him; but I do say that all this petty propaganda should not be brought to the National Capital, especially in the form of so-called nonpartisan resolutions introduced by a State senator of the type of Senator McNaboe, who sometimes is a Democrat, but mostly plays ball with the Republicans; who is known just as a plain sorehead. I feel sorry to have to say that about a senator from my own State, but he should not have allowed himself to be used as a tool of a political group for propaganda purposes without taking into consideration the sentiment of the people he represents.

McNaboe introduced this resolution with the idea that he would get Republican support, and it worked out just that way: Every Republican voted for it, and so did McNaboe, but not a single Democrat voted for it. The same thing happened in the State assembly.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman believe that President Washington was a good President?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. He was a great President, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. RICH. Did the gentleman hear his Farewell Address read last month?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have heard it read and I have read it. But now I ask the gentleman whether he believes that Washington, if he would have had a third term, would have been a bad President?

Mr. RICH. I do not believe that Washington would, but I am not saying that about the present occupant of the White House. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Now, let us see what the Assembly of the State of New York did; let us look at the political set-up of the State assembly. Mark you, I have high regard for certain Republicans in my State. A lot of Republicans are fine men. Nor do I blame people for playing politics, but I do object to the use of such propaganda for the sole purpose of saying that the State of New York, with 12,000,000 people, has gone on record against a third term.

Mr. Chairman, if a vote were taken today and Mr. Roosevelt were the candidate he would win in the State of New York by over a million votes. [Applause.] The fact of the matter is that resolution does not represent the sentiment in the city and State of New York, and I know the city and State of New York well. If a vote were taken tomorrow, the big city of New York would be about 95 percent for Roosevelt. So what is all this bunk about resolutions? They bring them into the National Capital and make a lot of bones and fuss about them.

The New York State Assembly consists of 85 Republicans, 64 Democrats, and 1 of the American Labor Party. There was not a Democrat who concurred in the McNaboe resolution. A lot of resolutions are sent to us from New York. Some of us take them seriously. But here is a resolution that must have been prepared by Senator McNaboe with the assistance of the Republican Party of the State of New York. I will ask the Clerk to read this resolution in my time, and you will hear something about dictatorships and everything pertaining to a dictator, which is typical of the language used by the Republican Party and a few disgruntled Democrats.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on September 17, 1796, George Washington, first President of the United States, delivered his Farewell Address to the American people; and

Whereas on that day the Father of his Country set down certain suggestions for the guidance of the American people; and

Whereas by his refusal to seek election for the third time he established a tradition that to this day has remained unbroken; and

Whereas in his Farewell Address President Washington said "Friends and citizens; the period for a new election of a citizen, to administer the executive government of the United States, being not far distant, and the time actually arrived, when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person, who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprize you of the resolution that I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made"; and

Whereas this tradition of a President of the United States of not seeking election for a third term forms the one remaining bulwark protecting the people of this Nation against the threat of the establishment of a dictatorship; and

Whereas with the establishment of a dictatorship the minorities now accorded their rights under our Constitution will be swept aside and accorded the same treatment now given them in certain countries of Europe: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Congress of the United States be, and hereby is, memorialized to enact suitable legislation to prevent any President from seeking a third term and that a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Vice President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and each Member of Congress from New York State.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, the clerk of the senate took the trouble to typewrite a personal letter to every Member of Congress from the State of New York in reference to this resolution. This is the first letter I have ever received with a resolution, and they pass them by the dozens in the State legislature. He particularly called my attention to this particular resolution, which was read to you a moment ago. I have communicated with Albany and I talked to some Democrats and Republicans up there. This resolution was worked out by a certain group in the State, with the connivance of McNaboe who was going to introduce it. McNaboe was the sponsor of this resolution with no intention of it representing the Democratic opinion of the State of New York or the country.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, during the time I have been a Member of this House I have received a number of resolutions, but I never received a personal letter from the clerk of the State senate of the great State of New York. He particularly called my attention to this McNaboe resolution and, by the way, he is a Republican also. Who voted for it? The Republicans. McNaboe voted with them, but I do not consider him a Democrat. Yet we have had publicity in the press of Washington, New York, and all over the country that the Legislature of the State of New York has passed this resolution. The New Jersey Legislature is about to follow a similar proceeding. Why? Because the Republicans are in control.

I am not quarreling with the Republican Party. I am not discussing whether they have the right to do that or not, but I do not want it to appear, as indicated by my colleague from New York [Mr. EDWIN A. HALL] that this is a nonpartisan resolution. It was perpetrated after due deliberation. McNaboe is the only one in the senate the Republicans could trust, and he, without even discussing it with the Democratic leaders, introduced this resolution and naturally with 28 votes against 24 was able to pass it. They had 85 votes in the New York Assembly and with the Democrats being in the minority they were able to pass it there. So they would make it appear that the 12,000,000 people of the State of New York are against a third term, but I want to tell the country that this is not so. As a matter of fact, if a vote were to be taken tomorrow the result would be just the opposite.

I am disturbed to see some of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle clamoring for the President to tell us whether he is going to run. Is it any of our business? He can answer for himself. You cannot force him to say yes or no. Let him do what he likes. If the people of the country demand an answer, that is another matter.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Only a few weeks ago when the Republican National Committee met in Washington, Chairman Hamilton, as I remember it, challenged the President to run for a third term.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is correct. I have also heard statesmen in the other body and statesmen in this body say that they were more or less disturbed about the Democratic Party unless he comes right out and answers whether he is going to run or not. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, we are living in a different age, we are living in a different world, we are living under different conditions today that we were 10 or 15 years ago.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman saw the Treasury statement showing that since the first of last July we have gone in the red to the extent of $2,655,000,000. Does the gentleman think this country could last 4 more years with Mr. Roosevelt as President after he has put this country in the hole worse than any President who has ever been at the head of this Nation, in fact five nations?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman give me a minute to answer his question?

Mr. RICH. I will give the gentleman 10 minutes to answer that question.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I shall be glad to answer it if the gentleman will give me the time.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman believes he can give the country an answer to that question in 10 minutes, I believe it would be the most worth-while 10 minutes we could spend.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will try, anyhow.

In the first place, all I have been hearing the last few years is, "Where are we going to get the money?" I hear the gentleman's voice every morning. The gentleman asks what this country is going to do, saying we are in the red $40,000,000,000.

Mr. RICH. We have a limit of $45,000,000,000, and we have reached that limit now.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. How much did Hoover leave us in the red when we took over?

Mr. RICH. Three billion dollars in 4 years, and now you have gone in the red $21,000,000,000 in 7 years.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. This country can stand a debt of more than $40,000,000,000. This country can stand $80,000,000,000. The gentleman should not kid himself. We are all making conversation here, but the fact of the matter is that the gentleman is an alarmist. Look at the wealth it has accumulated for our country in terms of social and emotional readjustment of millions of our people.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I wish to call to the attention of the gentleman that the gentleman from Pennsylvania considers the Budget in terms of dollars and cents, but there is another budget, the human budget.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is what I am getting at. I am just trying to tell the gentleman the intrinsic value of the things this administration has done for this country. The trouble with us is that we are about 50 years ahead of time. Mr. Roosevelt is about 50 years ahead of his time in progress, in the care of human life, in the building of character, and in doing away with conditions which frustrate the development of America. It may be true—we are trying to do too much at one time and it may be hard for Republicans to follow. It has never been done during a Republican administration in my time. I know it used to take on an average of about 10 years before we could get some constructive social legislation through this Congress. It was just the same situation as I have noticed with some aliens. Some aliens will become citizens immediately, but with others it will be 20 years before they renounce their allegiance to the king or potentate of some other country. President Roosevelt has just been 50 years ahead of our times, and he has given you progressive legislation from which this country will benefit for time immemorial.

As to this argument that "Our children are going to pay for it," bah! Our children are not going to pay for it, because we are leaving them a great heritage in building up this country. I do not care whether the debt is $40,000,000,000 or $50,000,000,000; we can stand more. This is the greatest and richest country in the world.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I thought the gentleman was being facetious when he said this country could stand an $80,000,000,000 national debt.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; I did not intend to be.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not believe the statement should go unchallenged. At the present time the public debt of the United States is a little over $64,000,000,000. Economists are quite generally agreed that the Federal Government and the State Governments collectively, or collectively the people of the United States, cannot carry an $80,000,000,000 debt.

In 1933 Senator Costigan, appearing before our committee, was asked a question as to how far he thought we could go in appropriating money before the credit of the United States would be affected. He said he could not answer for himself, but that the experts had advised him that the Federal Government could create a debt of approximately $35,000,000,000, but as it approached the $35,000,000,000 we must be cautious, otherwise we might find ourselves in a condition of semibankruptcy. I believe the record will show that we have gone $10,000,000,000 beyond what the experts found in 1933 was a safe figure.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not have the figures the gentleman has quoted, and that is not the information I have learned from reading and following the debates and the committee hearings. I believe you are all a group of alarmists. You have just grown accustomed to be alarmed about any and everything. You constantly ask: "How are we going to do this?" and "How are we going to do that?" Can you analyze what has been accomplished in the last 4 or 5 years in the way of human rehabilitation? Can you picture the poverty-stricken people, the bad housing, and the economic troubles of the poor? We have lifted them up, and we have given them a ray of hope and a ray of sunshine. This new lease on life we gave these millions of people is certainly worth the money we spent.

What is the price you place on human life? Do you fix a price or not, or is the money your price? Do you not believe we have brought some help and wealth and good cheer to millions and millions of people who have been suffering and downtrodden? Do you not believe they ought to have homes as good as anyone else has? Do you not believe that we ought to remove all their poor houses and give them an opportunity to be independent and receive something from the Government under which they have worked and brought up their children? If you do not figure on that kind of value, then you may as well turn around and say, "We cannot stand $40,000,000,000."

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. Will the gentleman say whether he was for Roosevelt in 1932?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have been for Roosevelt in 1932 and 1936 and will be for Roosevelt in 1940, if it is up to me.

Mr. BENDER. Were you one of the alarmists in that year——

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I was not worried—I was not an alarmist—I just took the facts as I gathered them in talking to most of the people.

Mr. BENDER. Did not the gentleman run on the Democratic platform of 1932?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Personally, I could run on any platform and win, outside of a Communist platform.

Mr. BENDER. Did not the gentleman run on a platform pledging the cutting of the cost of government 25 percent?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; I was not running just because Roosevelt was running. I have been here a long time, and I can come here as long as I want to without anything at all of that sort; but I am a Democrat and I supported Roosevelt because Roosevelt is the greatest humanitarian we have ever had or will have in the history of our country. You cannot get away from it. He is just 50 years ahead of us all. He has done things in 4 or 5 or 7 years it would have taken other administrations and other Presidents 50 years or more to accomplish. That seems to be at the root of all your complaints. The Republicans never actually balanced the Budget. You had not balanced the Budget during the Coolidge or Hoover administration. You have balanced it on paper only.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; certainly.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Republican Party has never balanced the Budget?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; it has not.

Mr. RICH. That is the most ridiculous statement any man could possibly get in the Well of the House of Representatives and make—that is ridiculous.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am telling you that your Budget was balanced on paper, and if we want to take up Budget balancing, I think we can do a little Budget balancing right now—just deduct and charge and then recharge, and that is all you have got to do. [Laughter.] You have not yet, in your arguments, since you have been talking about where we are going to get the money, told us about the wealth of this country, the assets of this country or whether the spending of the $40,000,000,000 was justified or not. You always talk about the spending, but you do not tell us what the value of human life is which was saved by this spending.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Speaking of balancing the Budget and paying off the national debt, I wonder if there was not about $1,000,000,000 of debt hanging over this country for 50 years on account of the War between the States. It was an interest-bearing, bonded debt, but the Republican Party and certain businessmen seemed to think that debt a good thing. Why did so many years elapse without any effort being made, during periods of prosperity, when it might easily have been paid, to pay off that debt? Was it unwise to balance the Budget and pay off that debt between 1863 and 1913 when a few profited because of that debt?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is exactly what I pointed out a minute ago. They balance it the way they want to balance it, and sometimes you balance the Budget but it is a paper budget and you can squeeze the figures one way or the other. I came here in 1922 and I do not think we have balanced the Budget yet. It is just a matter of a state of mind.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has in mind, of course, the loans made during those years to foreign countries?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; amounting to eleven or twelve billion dollars.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. First, let me remind the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] that the debt was reduced by a billion dollars a year immediately after the World War through a series of years, but that is not the reason I took the floor.

I am interested in a business in New York City, the gentleman's city, where the taxes have increased fivefold in 5 years. This, with other circumstances brought about by the policy of the government, has put that business in the "red" for the first time in 50 years. It is hanging between the devil and the deep sea——

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am ready to answer the gentleman.

Mr. LUCE. Let me say, first, that the ending of that business, which is now threatened, will throw on the streets 100 people. Does not the gentleman think that should be thrown in the balance against the benefits to the working people of the New Deal legislation?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Wait a minute! What is the cause for it? We have to know more about the situation and the facts before we can judge. We have to find out the reasons that brought about the conditions as the gentleman has stated them. The gentleman is talking about the city of New York, and we have on the average from 100,000 to 200,000 transients that come from all parts of the world and all parts of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York 1 minute more.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, we have from 100,000 to 200,000 strangers who come to our big city every day—among them the poor who have left their homes and who have left their farms. We have not chased anybody out of the city of New York. We have fed them and clothed them and taken care of them and all of these things bring up taxes for the fellow who actually is a citizen and who lives in the city. We have had an unusual situation in the city of New York where thousands of our people have been out of work. How was this condition brought about? It was brought about by the big fellows owning factories who thought they were paying too many taxes and refused to go on with their business and pay their taxes. My friend talks about paying taxes. He ought to live in Europe where they pay taxes for keeping more than one window, where they all pay taxes for living. We should consider ourselves fortunate to live in a country the Government of which only asks for taxes to be used for the benefit of all its people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise only for the purpose of observing that in this day of instability and bewilderment, in these days of legislative welter and confusion, it is really a remarkable thing when some of those who work hard in the interest of the Congress and the country have observed 20 years of service in the same spot. I refer to Arthur Orr, one of the clerks of the Committee on Appropriations, with whom it is my pleasure to have worked on that committee. Today marks the twentieth anniversary of his advent into the legislative service as a clerk to the Committee on Appropriations. That in itself is remarkable. There are those who work behind the scenes, who bring diligence and devotion to their task, and to whom I believe the people of this country are deeply indebted for their fealty and for their fine service. I could not let this opportunity go by without remarking the fact, because too often in our haste we fail in uttering proper encomiums upon those who are not always adequately appreciated. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to myself to say that I agree thoroughly with what the gentleman from Illinois has just said. Mr. Orr is an efficient and capable clerk to the committee, and I am sure every member of the committee, irrespective of what his party affiliations may be will agree with all that the gentleman from Illinois has stated.

Now, if I might indulge the committee for a moment, I desire to say that the Interior Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations also has a very capable and efficient assistant clerk in the person of Mr. Bill Duvall, who has been there some 13 years. He is not only capable and efficient and painstaking, but he is always on the job and I am sure that all members of the Interior Department subcommittee deeply appreciate the excellent way that he has performed the detailed work involved in the preparation of the bill and report. [Applause.]

I yield now to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

HEARINGS OF H. R. 1, WHICH PROVIDES FOR A FEDERAL EXCISE TAX ON INTERSTATE CHAIN STORES

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, the Ways and Means Committee of the House decided on yesterday to have hearings on H. R. 1, a bill providing for a Federal tax on interstate chain stores, according to the announcement of its chairman the Honorable ROBERT DOUGHTON. The committee of the House is composed of the following Members:

Democrats: Robert L. Doughton, North Carolina, chairman; Thomas H. Cullen, New York; Christopher D. Sullivan, New York; John W. McCormack, Massachusetts; Jere Cooper, Tennessee; John W. Boehne, Jr., Indiana; Wesley E. Disney, Oklahoma; Frank H. Buck, California; Richard M. Duncan, Missouri; John D. Dingell, Michigan; A. Willis Robertson, Virginia; Paul H. Malone, Louisiana; Patrick J. Boland, Pennsylvania; Milton H. West, Texas; Raymond S. McKeough, Illinois.

Republicans: Allen T. Treadway, Massachusetts; Frank Crowther, New York; Harold Knutson, Minnesota; Daniel A. Reed, New York; Roy O. Woodruff, Michigan; Thomas A. Jenkins, Ohio; Donald H. McLean, New Jersey; Bertrand W. Gearhart, California; Frank Carlson, Kansas; Benjamin Jarrett, Pennsylvania.

The subcommittee, appointed by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, to conduct the hearings is composed of the following members: MCCORMACK, Massachusetts, chairman; BOEHNE, Indiana; DUNCAN, Missouri; DINGELL, Michigan; CROWTHER, New York; KNUTSON, Minnesota; WOODRUFF of Michigan.

TIME OF HEARINGS

Chairman MCCORMACK, of this subcommittee, has called a meeting of his committee for March 27, 1940, for the purpose of commencing hearings on H. R. 1. This meeting, I am informed, will be held in the Ways and Means Committee room in the New House Office Building, at 10 o'clock in the morning. No definite time has been agreed upon for the hearings to continue, but I am told by the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MCCORMACK, the chairman, that all witnesses for and against the proposal will be allowed an opportunity to present their views.

AFTER HEARINGS

I do not know what the procedure of the committee will be during the hearings nor after the hearings, but I presume after the hearings are concluded by the subcommittee that the hearings will be printed and that the subcommittee will take action either favorable or unfavorable. After the subcommittee has passed upon the question, I presume that the whole committee, having access to the printed hearings, and after considering the testimony before the subcommittee, will take action either favorable or unfavorable. It is my hope that the subcommittee will act favorably and that the whole committee will act favorably and that the bill will be passed at this session of Congress.

DEATH SENTENCE TO MONOPOLY

This bill, H. R. 1, has been very much misrepresented. It is pictured as a bill which will inflict the death penalty upon the chain-store system in this country. The truth is, there are more than 7,000 chain-store concerns in the United States engaged in the retail business, and this bill, if enacted into law like it is now, will not seriously affect more than 20 of these more than 7,000 chain-store concerns. The object of the bill is to prevent further concentration of wealth into the hands of a few people and to distribute privileges and opportunities. It will be a death sentence to monopoly.

OBJECTIONS TO INTERSTATE CHAINS

We never had Federal relief until the interstate chain-store system drained the local communities of this Nation dry and thereby destroyed their local reservoirs of credit.

We did not have a serious unemployment problem until the interstate chain-store system obtained so much control over retail distribution in the local communities.

Farmers have never fared so badly as they have since the interstate chain-store system obtained control of so much of their market.

Any benefits or advantages claimed for the interstate chain stores will still be available to the people through the local chains, if this bill should become a law.

The question of concentration of wealth and economic power is a serious one. We live in a democracy. We are proud of our form of Government, yet we are sometimes powerless to cope with large corporations and especially those that enjoy or have the privilege of exercising a monopoly.

WITH $1, $7 CREATED

A few men who own a few banks in one city have control over more than 60 percent of the excess reserves in the banks of this country. That means for every $1 that they have in excess reserve they can extend loans equal to $7. In other words, they will receive interest on $7 for every $1 that they have. If the people, who have these deposits created by these loans, should call upon these banks for the money, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Washington would issue to them currency, greenbacks, or whatever you want to call our paper money, to pay the depositors of these banks. The money issued is an obligation of the Government of the United States and represents a mortgage on the property of all the people of this Nation. This power has been abused until most of the property is now in control of a very few men who own and control a few corporations, and now these few men are trying to get control of all the privileges and opportunities in this Nation, including retail distribution. They should not be allowed to do it.

WHY INTERSTATE CHAINS BAD

I doubt that even a monarchy, or a dictatorship, would permit monopoly to run roughshod over the people as we are permitting it here in America. Do you know of any other of the 52 countries of the world that allows a few to control retail distribution? I know we have had other serious problems to consider, and have solved them in a satisfactory way, and now we must deal with the problem of monopoly.

An interstate chain-store system causes the following:

First. Unemployment, relief, and destruction of opportunities for young and old.

Second. Destruction of local communities.

Third. Creates monopoly.

Fourth. Destroys the price of farm products and keeps the national income low.

Fifth. Destroys the local banks.

Sixth. Destroys the local printing shops.

Seventh. Destroys the local insurance agencies and local insurance companies.

Eighth. Causes regimentation of business by a few New York executives.

Ninth. Takes net profits away from local communities, thereby destroying the local reservoir of credit, and creates credit and money concentration into the hands of a few.

If the interstate chain-store system is saving the consumers of America money, these consumers will be able to obtain the same savings in the future, if this bill becomes a law, through the local and sectional chains. The local and sectional chains that do not cross State lines and the ones that keep their money at home, and certainly within one State or one section, have any and all benefits or advantages that are claimed for the interstate chains.

Is it real economy to save $1 as a purchaser or as a consumer by making your purchase from an interstate chain store if such a saving is possible when such a system will cost you, as a taxpayer, $3 or more to take care of the unemployed people and to afford the relief that has been caused by the $1 saving?

There are social, as well as economic, reasons why the interstate chain-store system is bad and should be stopped in this country now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON].

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having in charge the Interior Department appropriation bill, for giving me this time this afternoon. I know that that committee has worked hard and that the hour is getting late. I am glad to see there are about 400 Members of Congress present this afternoon. I rise to discuss a matter for a few minutes that is very rarely dragged out into the open, but it is a problem that should be brought out and on which light should be shed. We have just concluded our hearings on the Labor-Social Security-Public Health appropriation bill. The bill has not yet been marked up. There are several items in that bill that I think the Congress will be tremendously interested in. I am not going into the detail of all of them. I think the C. C. C. proposed reduction is one of them; the N. Y. A. is another. But I am also interested and disappointed in the lowering of the authorization from $7,000,000 to an appropriation of $3,000,000 for the control of venereal diseases for the fiscal year of 1941. I know syphilis is not a very popular subject. Nevertheless, I am willing to address myself to that subject for the next few minutes.

Mr. Chairman, almost 3 years ago I stood on the floor of this House and made a speech for economy—the most rigid economy America could practice. Today, I want to speak again for that rigid economy.

Three years ago, I also stood on this floor and made a speech for an appropriation. I want to make such a speech again.

And, as I did in 1937, I want to point out that economy and appropriations are not inconsistent, because I am speaking of the budget for health; for the control of the venereal diseases, and there are credit items in that ledger.

In social-welfare terms, those credit items are such things as the better physical and mental health of our people, more of a chance of happiness in family and personal life for many of our people, and more of a chance for a full and healthy life for many of our children by saving them from congenital syphilis.

In more hard-boiled dollars-and-cents terms, those credit items are investments in diagnostic and treatment facilities for syphilis and gonorrhea, investments in training of personnel, and in plans—long-range plans—for the future, looking to the ultimate eradication of syphilis and gonorrhea as public-health problems.

What made possible these credit items and these investments? What gives us hope that syphilis and gonorrhea need not be perpetual plagues?

The answer is twofold. An aroused public opinion, looking the facts squarely in the face, has said—and continues to say—that every resource at the command of our public-health fighters must be used to wipe syphilis and gonorrhea from the land. As a result of this demand, Members of the House will recall that the Congress of the United States passed the La Follette-Bulwinkle Venereal Disease Control Act, which was signed by the President on May 24, 1938. This congressional enactment has been the stimulus and the basic ammunition by means of which we have begun to make progress against the inroads of the venereal diseases.

We now have before us an appropriation under the terms of this bill, the purpose of which is to control the venereal diseases. In my opinion, and for the reasons I will outline in a moment, I am firmly convinced that the $7,000,000 originally authorized by Congress for the third year of this Nation-wide campaign should be appropriated—the totally inadequate sum of $3,000,000 suggested in the Budget would not only arrest progress but would completely wreck the control programs now operating in many States. I am in favor of at least the amount authorized for 1940–41 by the La Follette-Bulwinkle Act in 1938. If we are to feel that we have seriously discharged our duties in protecting the public health, we would vote for the $25,000,000 originally recommended by health and medical experts from every part of the country on the assumption that another twenty-five million would be provided by the States and Territories.

Before I point out some of the ways in which real progress against syphilis and gonorrhea has been made, let me refresh in your minds the needs we recognized in 1938 by passing the Venereal Disease Control Act.

Careful 1-day spot surveys, examination of clinic records, review of cases reported to public-health agencies indicate that each year at least half a million new infections of syphilis and another 500,000 old cases are discovered. Figures for gonorrhea are more difficult to assemble, but every estimate indicates many more than a million new cases annually should receive medical care.

More than 100,000 persons die each year from syphilis. One in 10 cases of insanity is due to syphilis. One in every seven cases of blindness is a result of syphilis. Each year 25,000 babies die or are stillborn as a result of syphilitic infection of the mother. More than 60,000 children are born with syphilis.

At the present time there are in America probably 10,000,000 persons who have or have had syphilis, yet less than one-half of all of these cases sought treatment or were recognized during the first year of their infection. And more than one-half of these infections were acquired before the persons were 25 years old.

We've been talking about economy a lot lately. What price these million cases of syphilis we have on our hands each year?

I am well aware that in urging continuance of this fight on syphilis I am recommending a program which will cost money. And I am recommending it in the face of a political trend toward economy. There is no paradox in that—for it is good economics to fight syphilis. It is cheaper for us to provide adequate facilities for controlling syphilis and gonorrhea and eradicating these diseases as community-health problems than it is for us to let syphilis go. Syphilis costs us money today.

In our State institutions for mental disease there are 18,700 cases of general paralysis of the insane—known medically as paresis and just one of the late complications of syphilis. American taxpayers spend $14,000,000 every year to care for these cases.

Nor is $14,000,000 for care of syphilitic insane in 171 State hospitals the whole story. Private institutions care for about 8,000 new cases every year. A total of 43,000 beds are maintained in American hospitals for syphilitic mental and nervous cases. The cost, assuming that the average is the low $2 a day for public institutions, is over $31,400,000 every year.

Add to these figures, at a very conservative estimate, the $10,000,000 which is spent annually for the institutional care of the syphilitic blind.

Though difficult to estimate, one might well consider costs of the end results of syphilis, the cost to the families of victims, the maintenance of indigent wives and children, the loss in purchasing power that would have made these sufferers useful members of society. These things are really part of the cost.

We ought to include also an estimate for the cost of the care of cardiovascular syphilis—the deadliest form of heart disease which results in 40,000 deaths each year. The cost of the care of 60,000 children born every year with congenital syphilis; the millions of dollars wasted on useless quack nostrums; the cost of routine care and treatment of syphilis are all part of the total bill the people are now needlessly paying because of our lack of control of this single disease.

But leaving all these costs out of the picture, merely consider, if you will, the items for the care of syphilitic insanity and blindness as reflected in institutional care—a minimum figure. It totals more than $40,000,000, almost twice what authorities have estimated for Federal participation in the control of syphilis; more than five times larger than the authorization by the Congress for the fiscal year 1940–41.

Money devoted to the fight against syphilis and gonorrhea is not spent; it is invested.

For the fiscal year 1938–39 the Federal Government appropriated $3,000,000 under the Venereal Disease Control Act. Of this total, $2,400,000 was allotted to State health departments. The remainder was used for fundamental research and field demonstrations. The sum made available to States was supplemented by $4,300,000 in State and local funds. State and local governments more than matched the $5,000,000 Federal appropriation in 1940 by raising more than $7,000,000.

Gentlemen, let me point out two important facts with regard to these figures. First, many of the State and local funds made available for venereal-disease control are new appropriations, funds stimulated because of the availability of Federal assistance. Second, the fact that State and local funds are almost double the Federal share is indication of the need for the development of essential facilities and services in the communities, and is based on the declared intention of the Congress to continue Federal assistance over a period of years.

I want to remark in passing, the health officer of one of the States said in the hearing this morning that they had 430,000 known cases of syphilis in that one State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman is making a very informative speech, and I am sure we all appreciate what he has said. The gentleman, however, is too modest to state what else was said at the hearing this morning. If the gentleman will permit, it was stated this morning that the speech made by the gentleman after much investigation and research 3 years ago was sent over the entire United States and was distributed more than any other speech ever made in Congress on the same subject. I desire to congratulate the gentleman on the fine work he has done on that subject. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I thank the gentleman from Oklahoma very kindly.

Now, what has been done with these funds? We can measure to a significant degree progress they have made possible.

During the fiscal year 1938 State health departments reported 3,600,000 blood tests. This figure had risen by 55 percent during the fiscal year 1939, the first year in which Federal venereal-disease-control funds were available, to a total of 5,600,000.

State health departments reported 1,746 venereal-disease clinics as functioning in 1938. By June 30, 1939, there were 2,405 clinics in operation, an increase of 38 percent.

For the fiscal year 1939 State health departments reported that 315,000 patients were brought under treatment for the first time in clinics. This number was 59 percent higher than the total of 197,000 reported the previous year.

The clinics cooperating and reporting through State health departments to the United States Public Health Service in the fiscal year 1937–38 administered 5,200,000 treatments for the venereal diseases. In 1938–39 clinics gave 53 percent more treatments, or 8,000,000. However, doses of arsenical drugs actually used in clinics for syphilis treatment increased by 71 percent during the same period.

While these are only a few statistical items which can be directly measured, they do indicate clearly that the aid which the Federal Government has given to the States has started us toward the control of the venereal diseases.

But let us state this progress in specific human terms. For example, let us consider the effect, in the conservation of human resources, of Federal assistance to the States for clinic treatments—only one of the several ways these funds have been used, which include development of better health-department units specially trained in venereal-disease control, postgraduate training courses for private practitioners and clinic physicians, the highly important public education campaign, and the making available of laboratory facilities and anti-venereal-disease drugs to all physicians.

Venereal-disease clinics in 1938 discharged 78,000 persons with their infection arrested or cured. This means that those people have been under treatment for a sufficient period of time to obtain maximum benefits. I understand from what authorities tell me that for syphilis a patient should be under continual treatment or observation for almost 2 years before he can be considered as having received adequate treatment. This number was almost 32 percent higher in 1939, and 103,000 persons were discharged as cured or with their infection arrested.

These facts indicate that the venereal-disease-control program is a program of conservation of our human resources.

There is one aspect of this consideration of progress to which I want to call the attention of the House. I feel it is unnecessary and unwise to continue to think in terms of ever-increasing numbers of patients admitted to clinics or released from clinics. The program now under way in the United States will soon reach the saturation point in this regard. Its efficiency in getting people to treatment sources has been demonstrated, but the important thing, to my mind, is the quality of treatment rendered and the success with which patients are kept under treatment for the full period necessary.

When the statistics show that all patients are under treatment the program for the control of the venereal diseases will not be over and the necessity of Federal support will not end. It makes little difference to me, as a layman, whether there are 250,000 or 50,000 new cases a year. I know that even a small number of untreated or badly treated cases is a threat to the health of my community, and that without adequate treatment the number will rapidly mount to staggering proportions.

The course of the public-health program seems clear. It must be continued today with vigor and funds to reduce as rapidly as possible the large number of present cases, and it must develop permanent facilities and skill which will make it possible to hold, by good treatment, the number of cases at a reasonable level with a reasonable expenditure.

Substantial progress has been made, and I think the hard-working, unselfish men and women of the medical and public health and other professions have a lot of credit coming to them. But this is only the beginning, and they cannot continue their work and even begin to stem the tide of the great plagues unless Federal support is continued.

The Members of this House should stand behind their pledge to the States and to the American people that the Venereal Disease Control Act of May 24, 1938, meant a continuing program of Federal-State cooperation, and should appropriate for venereal-disease control for the next fiscal year the authorized sum of $7,000,000. If we cut the sum even to the figure authorized and appropriated for the current year we will be giving the germs of syphilis and gonorrhea an advantage for which we will pay dearly in the future. If we cut the sum to the $3,000,000 proposed in the Budget, we will be practically throwing into the ash heap all of the progress so painstakingly and effectively gained during the past 2 years.

We have concrete evidence that in your community and in my community syphilis is on the way out and gonorrhea is at last on the defensive. We owe it to the future of our citizens, to the well-being of the children yet to be born, to make possible the continued vigorous attack on this menace to a healthy America. The least we can do is to vote for the appropriation of the $7,000,000 we are all agreed in 1938 was the minimum for the Federal fiscal year 1941 if we are to end our needless sacrifices to the germs of syphilis and of gonorrhea. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, this bill appropriating $119,057,464.05, the Interior Department appropriation bill, covers a multitude of interests throughout the United States.

Time today will not permit me to touch on many of these interests, but I do want to say a word about the reclamation appropriations carried in the bill.

First, permit me to say that the hearings extended over a number of weeks. Dozens of witnesses appeared before this subcommittee. Among those witnesses were 51 Members of the House of Representatives. It may be interesting to you to know that of the 51 Members, 50 were there asking for increases in appropriations. One lone soul had the hardihood and temerity to ask for a reduction. [Laughter and applause.]

I want to say that, while this bill appropriates more money than it would have appropriated had I had my way entirely, I think the subcommittee as a whole has done a very good job.

I want to pay my respects to the gentleman from Oklahoma, the acting chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. JOHNSON], and other Members of the majority party for their very considerate treatment of us who constitute the minority. They were generous. Partisanship was not displayed at any time. We all sat down and exercised our own best judgments.

I also want to compliment Mr. William Duvall, clerk of the committee, for the very splendid and efficient service that he rendered this committee in the preparation of this bill.

There has recently taken place in the State of California a very devastating and damaging flood. I have before me the Washington Post of Thursday, February 29, showing a picture taken in northern California, the floodwaters covering a large area, reaching nearly to the eaves of the houses. That flood took place in an area downstream from where there is now being constructed what we call the Shasta Dam, a part of the great Central Valley water project. Had that dam been in existence, instead of only partially completed, this destruction would not have descended upon the valley below. That is one value of the reclamation work that is being carried on.

In connection with consideration of the Department of the Interior appropriation bill for 1941, I desire to stress the importance to the West and to the country as a whole of the items proposed for the Bureau of Reclamation. In order that I might be in a position to inform this body of salient facts, I have raised the hood of this effective governmental machine we call Federal reclamation to see what makes its wheels go round.

In pursuance of this quest for authentic information two questions vital to 15,000,000 people west of the one hundredth meridian—in fact, to 130,000,000 Americans—have been raised:

First. Are we advancing the Federal reclamation program as rapidly as the pressing needs for water conservation and irrigated land demand?

Second. How does electric power fit into Federal reclamation and are the power developments justified by present and prospective markets?

Before entering into a brief discussion of the facts involved in frank answers to these questions, I will digress to remind you that reclamation has always been nonpartisan. It originated under the leadership of that great exponent of conservation of the land and water resources of the West—President Theodore Roosevelt. In the 38 years of its operations it has had the support of every administration—Republican and Democratic.

The national conventions of both parties time and again have approved the policy and urged its continuance. Successors of Theodore Roosevelt in the White House have praised its achievements and vigorously defended its objectives. Great impetus has been given reclamation by the present occupant of the White House, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The record is cited by way of emphasizing that this constructive governmental policy has always had a national significance. I do not mean to suggest that the program has not been without opposition. But, as my fellow Californian, former President Herbert Hoover, wrote to western Governors in 1930:

> If the fundamental facts are properly appraised, it seems certain that the arguments of opponents of Federal reclamation will find satisfactory answer and that they will no longer countenance the misleading information that is now being broadcast through various agencies.

President Coolidge had previously—in 1924—exploded attacks on the program by which it was sought to halt further construction because of agricultural distress in other sections of the country. He and Mr. Hoover pointed out that crops produced on reclamation projects are consumed principally in the West. Mr. Hoover asserted the projects—

> Furnish extensive markets for manufactured products as well as farm products not raised under irrigation and thus seem to afford material benefits, rather than detriment, to other sections.

I will not burden the RECORD with quotations from other Presidents of the United States, who from time to time have taken occasion to give their support to Federal reclamation. If there is a desire on the part of my colleagues to be more thoroughly informed, I respectfully refer you to Senate Document No. 36, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, which presents a summary of quotations from Presidents—from Theodore to Franklin D. Roosevelt—as well as other valuable information. The platforms of the Democratic and Republican Parties from 1900 on endorsing the program will likewise be informative.

There has not been a day since 1902 when Federal reclamation has not justified itself and the claims of its proponents. Take a look at the map of the 15 Western States in which projects are located and you will see that these enterprises are what has been described as veritable oases in the desert. They have created more than 50,000 farms on which nearly a quarter of a million persons reside and which are the main support of some 250 cities and towns with a population three times that of the rural areas. In all, something like a million persons are dependent on reclamation farms.

The purchasing power of more than $200,000,000 annually sent eastward that is directly traceable to reclamation crop production aids in turning the factory wheels of the Middle West, the East, and the South. The farms of the humid sections of the country supply the irrigated areas with crops not produced under ditches.

I suggest that our friends from the manufacturing and agricultural areas east of the one hundredth meridian compare the $200,000,000 annual market in reclamation-project areas of the West with the foreign trade of the United States with most of the countries with which we do business. What expansion of reclamation will do in the way of enlarging the home market for American products needs no emphasis.

The impression that reclamation is devoted solely to bringing new land into cultivation is erroneous and a word as to this phase of the program is in the interest of clarification. In the building of a western civilization on irrigation, private capital in many instances failed to provide adequate water supplies. Droughts and changes in agricultural methods have had their effect on water available, with the result that the collapse of established communities, rural and urban, has been threatened in many of the Western States.

In situations of this kind the Federal reclamation program has been expanded to save investments of hundreds of millions of dollars and the homes of scores of thousands of farmers. The beneficial effects on cities and towns that rely upon the agriculture of these areas is apparent.

At the present time the Bureau of Reclamation is providing supplemental water for something like 1,500,000 acres—an area almost as large as that which is wholly dependent for its supply on Federal works.

Under the existing program of the Bureau, I am informed, the area that will ultimately receive supplemental water approximates the entire new acreage that will have been brought under cultivation—about 4,500,000 acres. Therefore, it is important to remember that Federal reclamation is not only building new communities but tends to stabilize existing agricultural and urban areas that have been the backbone of the Nation's last frontier.

Of personal knowledge, I can speak for the pressing need of expediting completion of the Central Valley project, to which I have already referred, in California. The future of a million persons and of vast property values is dependent upon a stabilized water supply for the San Joaquin Valley, where I was born—if you will pardon a personal allusion. That the cost of this project will be repaid by the water users and power consumers of central California is only half of the story. The rehabilitation of taxable values and the assurance of a continuance of communities of taxpayers are worth far more.

In practically every Western State there are similar situations that demand attention and illustrate the pressing need for advancement of Federal reclamation.

Another phase of reclamation operations is the demand for newly irrigated land. This comes from the normal expansion of the agricultural population of the West plus the influx of farm families from the Great Plains and other drought areas. Recurrence of critical droughts east of the Rocky Mountains have spurred migrations anew and, instead of receding, the waves give evidence of continuing unabated.

With experts of the Department of Agriculture estimating that in the last decade 150,000 migrant families have come into the three Pacific Coast States and Idaho, some idea of the magnitude of the problem may be obtained. As most of these families have a farm background, the place for them is on the soil. There has been some suggestion that since these estimates are based on reports from school children, the number of homeless farm families that have come west may greatly exceed the figures given.

But whatever the number, the acreage of irrigated land available for settlement has been sufficient for the placement of only a handful of the newcomers. As a matter of fact, if all the area the Federal reclamation program will bring into cultivation in the next 20 years were now available, it would be inadequate to provide a 40-acre tract for part of the 110,000 migrant families that are in California alone.

You may ask why the Federal Government should be concerned with getting these people settled where they may become self-supporting. To get one answer you have only to refer to tabulations of the former National Emergency Council and the Office of Government Reports. These show that the relief expenditures in the Mountain and Pacific States from the Federal Treasury during the 7 years ending June 30, 1939, totaled $1,341,000,000, or 25 percent more than the normal population would require. The excess has been due to the necessity of caring for homeless newcomers.

Compare this drain on the Federal Treasury with results that are obtainable from the construction of reclamation projects. First, there are few if any reclamation farmers on relief. Secondly, the relief expenditures in California alone of $597,000,000 in the 7-year period would have given employment for tens of thousands of persons in the construction of three projects the size of Central Valley and opportunities for settlement would have been provided for many thousands of homeless farm families.

In passing I will call attention to the absence from this appropriation bill of provision for continuing the Great Plains water-conservation program inaugurated last year. As a means of anchoring farm families in those areas most seriously affected by continuing droughts and thus alleviating pressure on the West from newly migrating families, no more constructive move has been made. Every friend of reclamation will welcome the opportunity of supporting this water-conservation program.

From the more or less sketchy review of conditions that are confronting the arid and semiarid States, I believe I have demonstrated that we are not yet providing for reclamation developments as rapidly as the pressing needs require. The solution is to provide adequate reimbursable construction funds that will offer opportunities for the settlement of homeless farm families, for the establishment and maintenance of taxable values, and for reducing, if not eliminating, the drain on the Federal Treasury for relief.

ELECTRIC POWER IN THE RECLAMATION PROGRAM

I will now turn to a brief discussion of the place hydroelectric power has in the Federal reclamation program.

Development of water power, where feasible, in connection with irrigation has been recognized from the outset as a means of furthering the national reclamation policy. The maximum conservation and utilization of the limited water resources of the West demand that, where feasible, advantage be taken of the power head created by storage dams.

The use of stored water obtained by passing it through the turbines en route to the land to be irrigated does not diminish its value for irrigation, but it greatly increases the over-all efficiency of a project. Power for pumping is also an important consideration in many projects.

No Federal reclamation project has been constructed solely for the production of power, although the anticipated receipts from this source are a vital factor in the financial set-up of the program. It is indicated that approximately half of the entire cost of the reclamation program as now laid out will be repaid from power revenues.

I have heard questions raised about the market for electric power in the West. I am pleased to advise you that the demand for power bids fair to exceed the existing capacity and planned installations by Federal agencies and private utilities.

Take the case of Boulder Dam, where the generation of power is combined with flood control and storage of water for irrigation and domestic water supply in southern California. The installation of generating equipment is far ahead of the schedule due to the requirements of private utilities, the city of Los Angeles, and other municipalities. The Bureau of Reclamation is being pressed to speed up additional installations to take care of the demand.

Although Boulder began operating only in 1936, the electric energy it produced during the calendar year 1939 exceeded the total energy generated in the three States of the Pacific coast in 1912.

In the quarter of a century from 1912 to 1937 the production of electric energy on the Pacific coast increased more than sixfold. Total electric capacity increased about fivefold.

As 90 percent of the power which will be produced on Federal reclamation projects will be utilized on the Pacific coast, a word as to the present and future markets may be informative. Based on the demands for Boulder Dam power in 3 years, there can be no doubt of a market for all of the energy that project can produce.

The growth in consumption of power in central California has kept pace with that in the southern part of the State and there is now some doubt if power from Shasta Dam on the Central Valley project will be available in time to meet an anticipated deficit in that section. It is my understanding that a private utility is prepared to take the entire output of Shasta Dam power plant not required for pumping purposes. Regardless of the method of distribution—whether by private or public agencies—there will be need for the new supply.

In the Pacific Northwest in the last 25 years the production of electric energy increased 700 percent and the installed capacity nearly 400 percent. The complete installations at Bonneville, on the Columbia River, constructed by the Army engineers, and at Grand Coulee, 250 miles farther up the stream, and a reclamation project, will increase the capacity in the area only 150 percent.

Based on the record of a quarter of a century, it would appear reasonable to forecast that the Pacific Northwest will absorb all of the additional power Bonneville and Grand Coulee will produce by the time the last installations of generating equipment are made at the latter project, as proposed in present installation programs, some 20 years hence. The rate of growth of the market need be only half of what it has been in the preceding two and a half decades to bring this result.

That reclamation projects themselves provide a market for power has long been recognized. A private-utility official in California in the twenties remarked that for every successful irrigated farm he could count two customers in the cities and towns nearby. Consequently a substantial contributor to the market in the Pacific Northwest will be some 30,000 farms to be brought into cultivation as the construction of Grand Coulee is advanced.

Another phase of the market in the Pacific Northwest lies in the prospective industrial development along the Columbia River. The Aluminum Co. of America recently contracted for 30,000 kilowatts of power from Bonneville, and the Sierra Iron Co. plans the installation of an iron and steel plant using electric furnaces that in 2 years is expected to absorb an additional 30,000 kilowatts. While these operations are relatively small, they presage a greatly enlarged industrial market for the entire Pacific coast.

Further, it has been estimated by metallurgical experts that there are, in the Pacific Northwest, minerals for the processing of which 40 percent of the firm power of Grand Coulee would be required for 30 years.

The prospective demand for electric power from reclamation projects is not confined to the Pacific coast, however. As soon as it was known that power would be available from Elephant Butte Dam on the Rio Grande River, there were immediate application from Texas and New Mexico for more than twice the prospective output.

Demands for power in the Colorado-Wyoming area will make possible prompt disposal of the production from the newly completed Kendrick project in Wyoming.

As the Bureau of Reclamation is the pioneer Federal agency in the development of multiple-purpose projects involving electric power, its record as a construction and operating agency is interesting. Before the Congress in 1928 entrusted it with the construction of Boulder Dam, it had served an apprenticeship in connection with the construction and operation of a score of small plants on a dozen projects in the West. While the total capacity of these projects, some of which are now operated by water-user organizations, was only 115,000 kilowatts, the success of the undertakings served as a foundation for the present broad developments of power in connection with reclamation projects.

When projects under construction are completed, the Bureau will have under its supervision some 4,200,000 kilowatts—a volume approximating the present installed capacity of all publicly and privately owned hydro and steam-generating plants on the Pacific coast. This figure compares with the total capacity on the Pacific coast of less than 900,000 kilowatts in 1912.

In the field of operation of hydroelectric plants in connection with projects now under construction, the Bureau of Reclamation is governed by the Reclamation Project Act of 1939. In the sale of electric power, preference must be given to municipalities and other public agencies as well as cooperatives. The preference is in the right to buy and not in price schedules. The principle of this provision was written into the law as far back as 1910, soon after power was first produced on projects.

Since the Bureau must return to the United States the cost of projects, it has a responsibility of obtaining a fair return in the sale of power and in securing the widest possible public benefits from the development. It acts as a wholesale agency. Of nearly 100 contracts for the sale of power from reclamation projects, approximately one-half are with nonpublic agencies and half with public agencies.

In the interest of brevity, I have not gone into all of the details of the place power has in the Federal reclamation program. Yet I feel the picture presented shows conclusively that the double use of water, where feasible, is in the interest of economy and efficiency.

As for the market for electric power, based on the record of the last quarter of a century and the continually increasing demands, a conservative observer may be pardoned for wondering if the Pacific coast will not be confronted with a power shortage before all the new generating equipment in reclamation projects will be producing electric energy. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I have sought time today for the same purpose as the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER], who just preceded me, to speak on the bill, and with special reference to the matter of reclamation. Reclamation is a great cause with us and deserves our unstinted support.

I want to be somewhat complimentary, too, in regard to the work of the subcommittee and certain others in connection with the reclamation part of the bill. Although I deplore the committee's reduction on the Parker project, I do very heartily approve the amount inserted for further construction at Boulder Dam. Last year I urged an appropriation to build a line from Parker Dam to Phoenix, as some members of the subcommittee will recall. That power needed in central Arizona must come either from Boulder Dam or from a power plant to be constructed at the Parker Dam. Both developments must be carried on.

We have complimented the chairmen of committees and clerks of committees. I want to say a word with respect to the Chief of the Bureau of Reclamation. I refer now to Commissioner John Page, a scientific man, a western man thoroughly acquainted with the significance of his important agency, a man of broad vision who takes in the entire scope of reclamation in a dozen States and makes his recommendations before the Bureau of the Budget and before the committee accordingly. It is regrettable that his recommendations could not be followed completely.

If I had my own way more money would be appropriated, but I am sure the committee has done a good job within the framework of the spirit of economy manifested in the Bureau of the Budget itself, noted in this House, and apparently demanded by the times. The great cause of reclamation has made possible the new West. The hydraulic engineer has made over the wild West of a former generation in somewhat the same way, modernizing it exactly as the construction engineer has modernized our great cities, and I would like to pay a compliment to them. What has already been done, of course, is but a beginning and we shall do much greater things.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I shall be glad to yield to my friend from southern California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Does the gentleman believe that this work of reclamation is of special importance right at this time as a means of making possible the settlement on good lands of at least some of the thousands of people who have come to his State and mine in recent years largely as a result of the exhaustion of soil fertility and changes in agricultural methods in other parts of the country?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The gentleman from California is exactly correct. For a number of years now thousands of families have been heading westward, especially into Arizona and California, seeking new homes, as he and I told the President in the spring of 1937. The gentleman will remember that in the conversation which he told the President of the many destitute farm families fleeing from the Dust Bowl and trying to get into southern California, I also pointed out that in their effort to do so they crossed southern Arizona and that many of them stopped in the warm agricultural valleys of my State.

That process is going on today about as it was when we spoke to the President in 1937 and the need of doing something for these migrants is as imperative now as it was then. Certainly, that is one phase of reclamation need which must not be overlooked. It is a phase of short-time program in contrast to our long-range program of reclamation. For the benefit of the people we have in mind, water must be put on the land as soon as possible.

Although I wish to compliment the committee on drafting this Interior appropriation bill, I am worried about the reductions and also omissions. Of course, I am assuming that the committee took into consideration an unexpended balance for the Gila project which the committee regarded as sufficient to carry on the work for the coming year. Such unexpended balance may be sufficient to continue the work on that project for 1 year at the same rate of construction which has prevailed thus far, or nearly at that rate, but I want to go on record as saying that the rate of progress on this highly important and internationally strategic project has not been fast enough.

Let it not be forgotten that in this project down in Yuma County we are doing more than working toward completion of just another irrigation project. We are in fact working against time and we are competing with an active neighbor on the south for the legal use of a portion of the waters of the Colorado River. If we do not establish our legal claim by appropriation and beneficial use of that water, the legal right will be lost forever to Mexico.

We ought also to consider those irrigation projects which are under the Indian Bureau, as they are about as important as the projects under the Reclamation Bureau. The Nation has cause to be proud of the Coolidge Dam and the great San Carlos Indian project watered by it. On March 4, 1930, when ex-President Calvin Coolidge dedicated the Coolidge Dam in a very appropriate manner, he had associated with him on the speaking program a full-blood Pima Indian, who made one of the best speeches I have ever heard. This spokesman for the Pimas had a complete grasp of the entire situation. He knew what his people had meant to the Government for nearly 100 years. He knew how much the Government was indebted to the friendly Pimas, and he expressed deep appreciation for the construction of the Coolidge Dam, which saved his people from starving out.

He did not ask that the Government take away from the farmers along the upper Gila in Graham County the water which they had diverted from the stream onto their farms, although by so doing the farmers had dried up the river and virtually left the Indian farmers to starve. However, the Pima spokesman did rejoice at the fulfillment of a long-deferred hope which he thought would be realized in the Coolidge Dam. It would catch the floodwaters and store them until needed on the farms of the Pimas below the dam. Nor did the Pima object to the fact that half of the stored water was to be put on land belonging to white settlers. Only a part of that hope was realized in the Coolidge Dam.

And now this uncompleted project is sorely in need of more storage capacity because of the prolonged drought in that region and for other reasons. If I had been writing this appropriation bill, I should have written in a suitable sum for the beginning of work on a storage dam on the Gila River below the Coolidge Dam and below the entrance of the San Pedro River. I cannot find either time or words to express myself adequately in regard to this imperative need. I appreciate the short time allotted me today to call it to your attention.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I desire, but I do not expect to use more than half an hour. It was stated a few moments ago that there were 400 Members in the House, but there were only 29, by actual count, and now there are less than 29. I think it would be most ridiculous to talk to the four walls, but I do want to say to those who remain—and it will be seen by the others in the RECORD—that so far as our work in the Appropriations subcommittee this year was concerned, there was more harmony and more of an effort on the part of the members of the subcommittee to work together and economize in spending Government funds. I really commend them to the House for the work they have done. We on that committee are all friends, yet we have our little spats and fights and differ quite a bit in the things we try to do. The majority of the members of that subcommittee are interested in things that pertain to the West, and most of this money is spent in the West, yet I come from the old eastern State of Pennsylvania, where we pay the bills for those who take the money out there, so you could not expect me to do other than object to a great deal of this expenditure when it goes mostly to the country west of the Mississippi River.

The bill carries something more than $119,000,000, but there is no reason under the sun why we could not cut another $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 from it without doing injustice to any of our people, yet it certainly would aid and assist the Treasury. As you all know it needs assistance, it is an empty barrel. Being in the minority, however, and being outvoted, I had to submit. I could not do any more.

We have taken from the Interior Department the Office of Education, the United States Housing Authority, and the National Park Service. We have added to the Interior Department the Bureau of Fisheries, the Bureau of Insular Affairs, the Bureau of Biological Survey, and the United States High Commissioner of the Philippine Islands. With these changes we find quite a good deal of difference in the bill itself as compared with last year, but I call particular attention to another fact which really is astounding so far as the Interior Department is concerned: In 1933 the Interior Department had 19,600 employees. Today it has 47,000, an increase of 135 percent in 7 years.

This was due to the fact that Congress a few years ago placed in the hands of the President of the United States $4,880,000,000. That was the start. Since then they have given him over $17,000,000,000 to spend, and with it he has increased the number of national parks, he has increased the Reclamation Service, he has built dams and other great structures, buildings, and incidental things which in the future will require large added expense. The employee population of the Interior Department will continue to grow unless we do something to stop the increase. As a matter of fact, increase will continue in every branch of the Government service.

It is not the function of government to do everything we think ought to be done by the people of this country. If the Government is to do everything, what is left for private initiative? Why should the States do anything? Why should the counties or municipal subdivisions do anything? Why should individual citizens do anything? We must reverse this trend; we must encourage the citizens to apply their initiative, their ingenuity, their brains, and their brawn to doing things for themselves. We must restore to people and to communities the pride of having done something for themselves so they will appreciate more what they receive. Anything worth having is worth working for.

Why do not the Western States do some things for themselves? Why do they come here to Washington, D. C., for all their wants and needs?

It is getting to be a racket, as I see it—both West and South. To prove it look at the table placed in the RECORD some time ago by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] showing the amount of taxes for each individual in each State per capita, and the amount each State received per capita, and it tells the story better than I can convince you.

I come now to the legal work of the Department of the Interior, and I find that there is quite a bit of duplication of services in the legal branch of the Department of the Interior. It was suggested by the head of the Department that this duplication should cease, but, in order to bring this about, it is going to be necessary to change some of the laws. I am hoping that, in view of the debate we had on that subject, new laws will be recommended in order to eliminate some of the duplication between the Attorney General's department and the Legal Division of the Department of the Interior, so that the latter Department may work for the best interests of the country and in the most economical fashion instead of such expensive duplication of legal talent.

We have in the Interior Department a Division of Information for which we appropriated $72,000. This is nothing but a propaganda organization. The Departments of Interior, Agriculture, and the other departments have these bureaus of information—have them for the purpose of putting out propaganda. This should cease and we ought to eliminate these appropriations if we cannot stop it in any other way.

Then there is the Division of Grazing which we are building and building. I can see some advantage, but we are getting to the point where all the Western States are becoming dependent on the Government, and I believe we should be careful not to extend that service so that it becomes too big and too unwieldy that it becomes overburdened with Government employees.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. Where are we going to get the money?

Mr. RICH. I have been unable to find that out myself and I do not think anyone in the Government service is able to tell where we are going to get the money to carry on the operations of our Government, in such expansion as has been going on, and I say that in all sincerity. Previous to the present administration no one ever starved and no administration has been derelict in its duty of taking care of the needy public, but we have gone on and on in the past 6 or 7 years to such an extent that if we do not curb ourselves in the expenditure of funds we will break down our financial structure, which means bankruptcy, and that in turn means dictatorship, as we are headed at present.

PUERTO RICO

Puerto Rico relief appropriation we cut to $15,000. Our object in doing this was owing to the fact for the last several years we have appropriated $25,000 a year to collect this relief money and have been only getting in seven, eight, and nine thousand dollars. Now to appropriate $30,000 seems to me is foolish, because I believe they can make the same effort with less clerks and receive as much money as they could from collections of the relief funds as they could by appropriating the larger amount.

BITUMINOUS COAL COMMISSION

The National Bituminous Coal Commission has been set up for the past 4 or 5 years and we have spent two to four million dollars a year on one of the greatest political set-ups I have seen since I have been in Washington. When they had the five commissiones they always were at loggerheads and working to a disadvantage. Ever since the Bituminous Coal Commission has been set up they have not accomplished one thing. Not even to this time have they established the price of coal. This they expect to do on April 1. Five years to determine the price of coal and in 1 week they may arbitrarily change it. There is no reason under the sun why this appropriation should not be cut down at least one million and a half dollars more than we have in the bill at the present time. It will do just as good work and accomplish just as much, so why spend that money for political propaganda? I claim it to be nothing but a racket ever since it was started.

Emergency relief items under the W. P. A. and P. W. A. that have been set up for the past 5 years have created so many new parks and additions thereto, new buildings, and new undertakings under this bill that the upkeep is going to be a burden on the taxpayers for years and years to come and we will only discover as the years go by how much this relief money that was placed in the hands of the President to expand is going to be a task for the taxpayers of this country to meet in order to keep things going. For the project itself, as that money still is to be raised, but also to the upkeep. Now projects have been started that will be more of a burden than they will be an asset. We have the National Power Policy Committee, which is set up in this bill. It was an executive order proposal and now because of the fact that the Interior Department had that power previous to conferring such great power on the President, the committee saw fit, over my protest, to set it up under the Secretary because I notified them it would be taken out on a point of order and the committee outwitted me and I am unable to knock it out on a point of order which I intended to do. Another new bureau of the President when he promised to eliminate them before he was elected President.

WAR MINERAL RELIEF

I want to congratulate the committee for eliminating the war mineral relief. That has been going on for over 20 years. We continued it last year with the distinct understanding to the Department and to those who had claims that it would only be for 1 year, and the year will be up on June 30, and, so far as this committee is concerned, I think they are justified in eliminating this item from the bill forever.

BONNEVILLE DAM PROPOSAL

Bonneville Dam proposal for the construction of new power lines has more than enough money, in my judgment, to construct lines enough to take care of all the power they will generate for the year 1941, and I would cut this appropriation a million more at least.

BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS

The Bureau of Insular Affairs was transferred to this Department of the Interior and as we are going to eliminate our responsibility in taking care of the Filipinos in 1946, it seems to me we ought to cut down rather than increase the expense we incurred for operation and looking after the Philippine Islands. Why not begin to make them more responsible and why not cut down our appropriations? We built a summer home and a city home for the Commissioner at a cost of $750,000—a terrible price to pay for an Embassy in the Philippines, and this bill instead of being a reduction of the amount over last year is an increase. It is not justifiable in my judgment and should be cut many thousands of dollars.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE

In the General Land Office we have increased the amount for surveying of public land from $750,000 to $900,000—an increase of $150,000. There is no reason under the sun why we should not cut down this appropriation by at least $400,000. Then we will survey lands as rapidly as will be necessary to survey the lands under public demand.

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Coming to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, let me call your attention to the fact that in 1931 the cost of this Bureau of the Interior Department was $20,523,379. Last year we appropriated $33,410,753. When we are trying to make the Indian Bureau self-sustaining, under the name of heaven why do we increase so rapidly the functions of the Indian Bureau? In my judgment, too much of this appropriation is a racket, and the appropriations should never be made as we are making them now. For instance, take the hospitalization, and I am as much interested in that as probably anyone could be. But when I think of the amount appropriated to operate the hospitals under the Indian Bureau, and then I make the comparison of the hospital on which I am on the board of trustees at Lock Haven, Pa., I find that the amount of money we appropriate for Indian hospitals cost per patient per day twice as much as it does for the people whom I represent back home.

Not only the Indian hospitals but over here across the river at St. Elizabeths Hospital and other Government hospitals can be put in this same category. Not only hospitalization but other branches of the Indian Service as well should be reduced in their regular routine appropriations. Now, for instance, the Tacoma Hospital Sanatorium at Tacoma, Wash. We have in this bill $400,000. Two hundred and twenty-two thousand dollars will be for the purchase of land which now belongs to the Indians, and then we permit the Department to make contractual obligations to the extent of $815,000 additional. When we get through taking over this land now serving the Indians the total hospital will cost $1,215,000. In the name of the heavens, under the present conditions of the Treasury, this is not justified. Keep the Government from taking over everything. Let us stop doing it for awhile at least.

RECLAMATION

Moving on to the Reclamation, in some ways a mighty fine thing for the inhabitants of certain territories of the West; and were not it being used in such extravagant manner I would be for it much more enthusiastically than I am now. Our annual appropriations are increasing so rapidly that the burden of maintenance on the General Treasury will tell in years to come. Grand Coulee, in Washington, will require many millions of dollars more to complete. Central Valley, Calif.—we have got $16,000,000 in this bill and for 7 years to come you will be asked to appropriate $20,000,000 a year before it can be completed. The Colorado River project in Texas was not passed on by the Bureau of the Budget until February 7, when the President sent down a supplemental estimate of $3,000,000 to complete this project, and the committee added it to the bill. The great expenditures that we have put into the Interior bills in the past 4 or 5 years, and with the amount that the President has granted under W. P. A., some of whose projects were later assumed by the Congress, shows with what care the Congress should view the spending of public funds and should not place in the hands of the President such great power. I hope that no other President, whether he be Republican or what he be, in the future will have the power which Franklin D. Roosevelt has had over the Congress of the last 7 years, and I hope no Congress will ever grant any President such power as they did Mr. Roosevelt. It is not right and it is not constitutional.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

In the Geological Survey we cut out work that was for the Army of $985,350. We were perfectly willing that the Geological Survey should do the work that the Army might need done, but we believed it should come out of the Army appropriation and not out of the Interior Department appropriation.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

I cannot help but repeat here what I have said in committee of the amount of money that has been expended by the President under Executive order for new parks, extension of parks, repairs to parks and monuments. Also the new ones that have been set up by the Congress themselves. That will be a heavy burden annually for increased cost on operation of the Government. I am glad to say that the Secretary and those connected with his office gave us the assurance that there was no money in this bill to be spent on the Jefferson Memorial at St. Louis, Mo. It is right and proper that the construction of that monument should cease and be a dead issue from now on. They have in St. Louis a Jefferson Memorial on a 1,200-acre plot of ground that cost over a million dollars, in memory of Thomas Jefferson. Why they need another no one can tell.

Then, we have the improvements that were suggested here in the Lincoln Memorial, of heating it and installing a $40,000 toilet. The committee was wise enough to eliminate this expenditure at this time, as well as the Jefferson Memorial now being constructed. The committee has seen fit to eliminate one-half of the sea wall, for which they have to spend $222,520 for changing the contour. We have agreed to permit them to fill in one-half of this change, but we refused to permit them to do away with one-half of the wall and dig out a great amount of earth in order to make it symmetrical. In our judgment, the sea wall will be just as beautiful if the part next to Fourteenth Street is left intact.

I could go on and speak of other items in this bill, but time will not permit, although I do want to say that we are treating very finely, it seems to me, the Territory of Alaska, with 60,000 people, and the amount of appropriations are more in proportion than they are to a great many of our States.

Then we have Puerto Rico, where we are looking after those people in pretty good shape. And in the Virgin Islands we still have the $2,600,000 sugar plantation and rum plant owned by all the people of America, and which was set up under W. P. A. by Executive order; and I am very sorry to say that it is not a very profitable organization for the American people to be in. They do not pay taxes; they do not pay interest on the money invested; and the report as given by the Virgin Islands Co., the rum plant owned by the taxpayers of America, showed a deficit of $23,002.67. Of course, they pay the tax on the rum, which every manufacturer of rum has to pay, but they do not pay taxes on their property nor do they pay any income tax, because they had no income, and would be exempt from that if they did since they are a Government corporation. That is the injustice of the Government in business, and I want to say that the quicker we get the Government out of all kinds of business—and especially the rum business—the better off our Nation will be. We have increased the amounts given to St. Thomas and St. Croix because they have deficits in their operation.

Again, in conclusion, I can truthfully say, so far as I am concerned, I could have cut down this bill ten to fifteen million dollars, and I am positive the Department would be better off; and I am sure the taxpayers of this country would be much better off if they were not compelled to do a lot of things this bill calls for. Here is hoping we can soon put the Government on a more sound financial basis by decreasing our appropriations by millions and millions of dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY], a distinguished member of the committee, who rendered a great service in the preparation of this bill.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I feel that I should, on behalf of the majority side of the committee, reciprocate the beautiful sentiment expressed by the gentleman who preceded me, the ranking member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]. For 6 weeks our subcommittee worked almost daily from 9:30 until 5 in the afternoon on this bill. We have turned out a transcript of 2,000 pages of hearings, and I am sure every member of the committee invites both the membership of the House and anyone interested to examine that record. The report contains some 55 pages and the bill itself covers 114 pages. The total amount allowed by the committee is slightly over $119,000,000.

It might be said that we just did all this work for the sake of building up a record to sustain the allowances in the bill.

Let me say concerning the Department of the Interior bill that there is no supply bill which comes before the American Congress that so completely touches every congressional district within the Nation as this supply bill. We were extremely careful to refrain from doing an injury to any item in the bill by arbitrarily cutting it, and we were likewise extremely anxious to save money, yet permit these essential governmental activities to proceed.

It is true that the West makes the greater demand for money in this bill and gets the greatest sum of money, but I am sure that any impartial observer, be he Democrat or Republican, irrespective of his political label, when he looks at this picture as it must be looked upon, will recognize that the West is entitled to a greater proportion by reason of the fact that there Uncle Sam still has his great domain and holds unquestioned title to many millions of acres, and the question is whether we want to look after it in the public interest or neglect it, or just give it away to a group of greedy, selfish exploiters.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. There is an additional reason why the West is entitled to these reclamation projects particularly and to help in preserving our water resources. That is because we have in recent years had coming to our States thousands and thousands of people from other parts of the country which we are under the obligation of attempting to absorb constructively into the life of our section.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman is correct. I placed in the RECORD under an extension of remarks an extended statement appearing in the Appendix of the RECORD page 1166, showing the new problem that has been forced upon the West by reason of the migrations from the Dust Bowl regions and the arid sections that have suffered so severely for some years from drought.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to congratulate the gentleman and every member of that subcommittee on the splendid job they have done. The committee has done a good job. As the gentleman stated, the committee has not cut any one drastically so that they could not function in the coming year, but, after all, it has cut approximately $3,000,000 under the Budget, so that the bill itself comes in under the Budget estimate. I want to congratulate the gentleman on the way his committee handled the bill.

Mr. LEAVY. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON]. I hope every Member will show the same intelligent appreciation of the work we have done.

Mr. Chairman, may I say, as a member of the subcommittee which prepared this bill, that I appreciate extremely the opportunity which for 6 weeks has been mine of associating with my colleagues on the subcommittee. The acting chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON], conducted the hearings in a splendid, impartial, and expeditious manner. At times the membership of the committee differed violently with one another, but never to that degree that we were not willing to listen to the reason of the other fellow. The able, distinguished, and beloved chairman of this subcommittee, who is likewise the chairman of the whole committee, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], due to temporary illness, he was unable to be with us at our hearings, but he was with us by being in constant contact, both through his own office and through the clerk of our committee, as well as through personal contact with members of the committee.

For 31 years this rare and brilliant chairman of our committee has been a Member of this House. He has seen Members come and go by the hundreds; he has seen Presidents of both political faiths take and hold the reins of leadership and advance their policies; but through it all he has consistently, faithfully, and perseveringly carried the banner of the great West, until today nearly every section of this great Nation understands and appreciates the West. I do not believe that in the glorious annals of this great body any Member has had a more distinguished career of public service, and we are happy to announce that our beloved chairman will shortly be back with us.

May I say that the suggestion, guidance, and aid of that splendid disciple of the West, a great man and a great Congressman, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], is demonstrated throughout this bill.

In conclusion, let me say that I should like to discuss reclamation at length because that is the big item in the bill. This bill calls for an aggregate appropriation of $119,000,000. Reclamation calls for $48,000,000 of that sum. I probably shall have opportunity later to discuss reclamation and the various projects within the reclamation appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, may I say also that this Interior supply bill has had transferred over to it the Biological Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, which agencies go into every congressional district in this country and are extremely important. This bill covers hundreds and hundreds of other activities. Why, there are 200 separate Indian reservations. There are 155 parks and monuments. There are approximately 55 reclamation projects, and there are about 100 separate fish-hatchery institutions. Then consider all the other agencies and divide them in the many activities. Each of these items was considered separately, and I could go on if time permitted to tell you more of them. You would then see why the long record, and the great care taken. But with all of these activities the aggregate total of this bill is only $119,000,000, just a little above the sum it costs to build one first-class 45,000-ton battleship. That is what we ask to take care of all of Uncle Sam's interests inside this great Nation of ours, which are not classed as a part of the Military Establishment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to my genial colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I want to congratulate the gentleman on that statement, because he is the first member of the Committee on Appropriations who has admitted that a 45,000-ton battleship costs over $100,000,000. The gentleman is right, because that was the figure that was given us. If the people of the country would make that comparison, there is no reason under the heavens why we could not have cut out at least two or three of these battleships.

Mr. LEAVY. I do not mean to imply that we should not necessarily build battleships, but what use are battleships to us if we neglect our domestic economy and our natural estate here? For that reason, I say that when you compare this bill with the Army and Navy bills, as it should be compared, it is a modest bill and a modest sum requested. In my judgment, actually if we doubled the amount for reclamation we could cut off many times as much for relief, as I tried to show in the remarks I placed in the RECORD yesterday. [Applause.]

The Clerk read the bill down to and including page 1, line 6.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN] having assumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1941 (H. R. 8745), had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Father, unto whom we come at this new dawn of opportunity for larger life and richer service, we thank Thee for the calm of yesternight, when sacred memories and thoughts of holiness inspired our evensong to Thee, and for the fair beauty of another day in which our morning prayer becomes our hymn of praise. Grant unto us now the abiding sense of unfading light, of spotless purity, of long-suffering love that issues from Thy presence till selfishness is done away; till our minds are pure from error and our wills lose all their weakness in union with Thine own; that when evening comes again it may find us fit for rest and unashamed, as we commit ourselves unto Thee and the keeping of Thy watchful care. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 685) to create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there is hereby established in the United States Public Health Service a Division of Water Pollution Control (hereinafter referred to as the Division). The Division shall be in charge of a Director, who shall be a commissioned engineer officer of the United States Public Health Service detailed for such duty by the Surgean General of the Public Health Service (hereinafter referred to as the Surgeon General). Such engineer officer, while serving as Director, shall have the rank of an Assistant Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, subject to the provisions of law applicable to Assistant Surgeons General in charge of administrative divisions in the District of Columbia of the Public Health Service.

SEC. 2. (a) The Division shall, after careful investigation, and in cooperation with the Chief of Engineers of the War Department, other Federal agencies, and the agencies of the several States authorized by law or duly designated to deal with water pollution, and in cooperation with the municipalities and industries involved, prepare comprehensive plans for eliminating or reducing the pollution and improving the sanitary condition of the navigable waters of the United States and streams tributary thereto. In the development of such comprehensive plans due regard shall be given to the improvements which are necessary to conserve such waters and promote their use for public water supplies, propagation of fish and aquatic life, recreational purposes, agricultural, industrial, and other legitimate uses, and for this purpose the Division is authorized to make joint investigations with the aforesaid agencies of the Federal Government and any State or States of the condition of any waters of the United States, either navigable or otherwise, and of the discharges of any sewage, industrial wastes, or substance which may deleteriously affect such waters.

(b) The Division shall encourage cooperative activities by the several States for the prevention and abatement of water pollution; encourage the enactment of uniform State laws relating to water pollution; encourage compacts between the several States for the prevention and abatement of water pollution; collect and disseminate information; make available to State agencies, municipalities, industries, and individuals the results of such surveys, studies, investigations, and experiments conducted by the Division and by other agences, public and private; and furnish such assistance to State agencies as may be authorized by law.

(c) The consent of the Congress is hereby given to two or more States to enter into agreements or compacts, not in conflict with any law of the United States, for cooperative effort and mutual assistance for the prevention and abatement of water pollution and the enforcement of their respective laws relating thereto, and to establish such agencies, joint or otherwise, as they may deem desirable for making effective such agreements and compacts.

(d) (1) After date of enactment of this act, no new sources of pollution, either by sewage or industrial waste, shall be permitted to be discharged into the navigable waters of the United States and streams tributary thereto until and unless approved by the Division; and,

(2) The discharge of new sources of water pollution without review and approval of the Division as required under the foregoing provisions is hereby declared to be against the public policy of the United States and to be a public and common nuisance. An action to prevent or abate any such nuisance may be brought in the name of the United States by any United States attorney, and it shall be the duty of such attorney to bring such an action when requested to do so by the Division, the Surgeon General, and any duly constituted inter-State agency dealing with control of water pollution, any State agency dealing with control of water pollution, any "State health authority", or any incorporated municipality. Such action shall be brought as an action in equity and may be brought in any court of the United States having jurisdiction to hear and determine equity cases.

(e) Provided, however, That any such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon the signatory States unless it has been approved by the legislatures of such States, and by the Congress of the United States, subsequent to the approval of the various State legislatures.

SEC. 3. (a) The Division, upon request of any State health authority and subject to the approval of the Surgeon General, shall conduct investigations and make surveys of any specific problem of water pollution confronting any State, drainage-basin authority, community, or municipality with a view to effecting a solution of such problem, and shall make definite recommendations for the correction and elimination of the deleterious conditions found to exist.

(b) The Division, upon the request of any municipality, shall make a periodic test of the water at any bathing beach within the limits of such municipality, and shall make a report to such municipality as promptly as possible with respect to the existence of water pollution at such bathing beach and shall make definite recommendations for the correction and elimination of any deleterious conditions which are found to exist: Provided, That only such sums as may be specifically appropriated for such purposes shall be expended in making such tests and recommendations.

SEC. 4. The Public Health Service shall prepare and publish, from time to time, reports of such surveys, studies, investigations, and experiments as shall be made under the authority of this act, together with appropriate recommendations with regard to the control of pollution of the waters of the United States.

SEC. 5. Every loan or purchase of securities by Reconstruction Finance Corporation to finance the construction of treatment works shall hereafter be made only upon the recommendation of the State health authority having jurisdiction and upon the recommendation of the Surgeon General and his certification that such construction is necessary to prevent the discharge of untreated or inadequately treated sewage or other waste which would substantially impair the quality of any waters of the United States.

SEC. 6. (a) There is hereby established in the Division, by detail from time to time, a board of five, four of whom shall be commissioned engineer officers of the Public Health Service, a majority of whom shall be experienced in sanitary engineering, and the fifth, the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, or a member of the Corps of Engineers designated by him, all said members to serve without additional compensation. The duties of said board shall be fixed by the Surgeon General, and to it shall be referred for consideration and recommendations, in addition to any other duties assigned, so far as in the opinion of the Surgeon General may be necessary, all reports of examinations, investigations, plans, studies, and surveys made pursuant to the provisions of this act or hereafter provided for by the Congress, and all applications for loans for the construction of necessary treatment works proposed to be made pursuant to section 5 of this act, and all other matters in connection therewith upon which report is desired by the Surgeon General. The board shall submit to the Surgeon General recommendations as to the desirability of commencing, continuing, or extending any and all projects for treatment works upon which reports are desired and for which loan applications have been made. In the consideration of such proposed treatment works and projects the board shall have in view the benefits to be derived by the construction thereof in accomplishing the purpose of this act, and the relation of the ultimate cost of such works, both as to the cost of construction and maintenance, to the public interests involved, the public necessity for such works and the adequacy of the provisions made or agreed upon by the applicant for the loan for assuring proper and efficient operation and maintenance of the works after completion of the construction thereof. The board shall, when it considers the same necessary, and with the approval and under orders from the Surgeon General, make as a board or through its members, personal examinations of localities where the proposed treatment works are to be located. All plans, costs estimates, information, and arguments which are presented to the board for its consideration in connection with any matter referred to it by the Surgeon General shall be reduced to and submitted in writing, and shall be made a part of the records of the office of the Surgeon General.

(b) As soon as practicable the board shall classify the navigable waters of the continental United States into districts to be known as sanitary water districts. The board shall fix and define the boundaries of each such district and may from time to time alter such boundaries. The areas of such districts shall, insofar as practicable, conform to the areas of watersheds not wholly contained within the boundaries of one State.

(c) All special reports ordered by the Congress pursuant to the provisions of this act shall, at the discretion of the Surgeon General, be reviewed in like manner by the said board; and the said board shall also, on request by resolution of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate or the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives submitted to the Surgeon General, examine and review the report of any examination, investigation, survey, or project for the elimination or reduction of water pollution or for the construction of treatment works made pursuant to any act or resolution of the Congress, and shall report through the Surgeon General, who shall submit its conclusions thereon through the Federal Security Administrator and the President as in other cases.

SEC. 7. S. C., 1934 ed., title 41, sec. 5); when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $100; (b) upon approval of the Surgeon General the necessary expenses of the board of engineer officers provided for in section 6 (a) of this act; (c) the pay and allowances, and travel expenses of reserve engineer officers while on active duty under section 8 (a) of this act; and (d) for the reimbursement of appropriations insofar as expended for pay and allowances of personnel detailed to the Division under section 8 (c) or 8 (d) of this act.

SEC. 8. (a) For the administration of this act the Federal Security Administrator may, upon recommendation of the Surgeon General, appoint such engineers, attorneys, experts, research assistants, examiners, and consultants as may be necessary, and fix their compensation, in the manner provided by law for the appointment and fixing of compensation of personnel of the Public Health Service; and the Surgeon General is authorized to transfer, assign, or detail to the Division, from any other division of the Public Health Service, such professional and scientific personnel as may be available. Not exceeding 10 engineer officers in the reserve of the Public Health Service may be ordered to active duty for such periods of time as may be desirable, extending not more than 5 years beyond the date of enactment of this act, to assist in carrying out the purpose thereof.

(b) Such clerks, stenographers, and other employees as may be necessary to discharge the duties of the Division and for the investigations in the field shall be appointed by the Federal Security Administrator in accordance with the civil-service laws, and their compensation shall be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and he shall prescribe such rules and regulations with respect to their duties as he may find necessary.

(c) The personnel of the Public Health Service paid from any appropriation not made pursuant to section 7 may be detailed to assist in carrying out the purpose of this act.

(d) The Federal Security Administrator, with the consent of the head of any other executive department of the Federal Government, may utilize such officers and employees of said department as may be found necessary to assist in carrying out the purposes of this act.

When used in this act, the term "State health authority" means the official State health department, State board of health, or such other official State or interstate agency as is empowered with the duties of enforcing State laws pertaining to public health or to the abatement of pollution of waters; the term "treatment works" means the various devices used in the treatment of sewage or industrial waste of a liquid nature, including the necessary intercepting sewers, outfall sewers, pumping, and power equipment and their appurtenances; the term "person" means an individual in the capacity of proprietor of an industrial enterprise, a partnership, a private corporation, an association, a joint-stock company, a trust, or an estate.

SEC. 10. No provision of this act shall be construed as superseding or limiting the functions, under any other act, of the Public Health Service relating to the prevention, control, and investigation of sewage and pollution either directly or indirectly of the navigable waters of the United States and streams tributary thereto.

SEC. 11. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 12. All provisions of this act applicable to the States shall also be applicable to the District of Columbia and the Territories, including Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

SEC. 13. This act may be cited as the Water Pollution Control Act.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the amendment in the form of a substitute offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] to the committee amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I was under the impression that the Senator from Illinois desired to speak on the pending amendment. I also desire to speak on it, but I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Illinois should go ahead.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am not going to speak upon the amendment so much as I am on another phase of the subject. I think, perhaps, what I have to say should be said at this particular time.

Mr. HATCH. I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Illinois should proceed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, at the time this bill was reported by the committee I confess that I had some misgivings about the failure of the committee to assume the responsibility of defining the term, "active part in political management or in political campaigns." I so expressed myself at that time to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico. Since then I have had an opportunity to give further study and consideration to that question, and I am now convinced that section 15 of the bill, as it now reads, constitutes an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power.

Mr. President, it may be presumptuous for any Senator in these days of social trend and economic change to venture an opinion upon the constitutionality of any measure which is before the Congress of the United States. However, the question of the delegation of power from the legislative branch of the Government to the Executive has been fairly well explored by the legal fraternity of this country, and the limitations upon that right have been pretty well fixed and determined by the United States Supreme Court during the last few years. It is pretty well agreed under those decisions that Congress has the right to delegate so-called legislative power if the standards for exercising that power are adequately set forth in the statute. If they are not, then the exercise of such power is unconstitutional and invalid.

Mr. President, I desire to cite just a few authorities which seem to me to substantiate beyond the shadow of doubt the position I am taking upon this question.

In the case of Hampton & Co. v. United States (276 U. S. 394), a case which, no doubt, has been cited many times before in the Senate in dealing with this very question, the Court, in dealing with the so-called flexible-tariff provision of the act of September 21, 1922, as well as the authority which it conferred upon the President, applied the same principle that permitted the Congress to exercise its rate-making power in interstate commerce, the result being that the Court found that similar provision was justified for fixing custom duties. They further said that if Congress shall lay down by legislative act an intelligible principle to which the person or body authorized to fix such rates is directed to conform, such legislative action is not a forbidden delegation of legislative power.

Following that decision, the Senate will remember the case of Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan ((1935) 293 U. S. 388), the "hot oil" case, which was argued by some of the best lawyers in the country before the Supreme Court. In that case the Court held invalid the Hot Oil Act, in which no standard was set up by the Congress of the United States. They said, among other things:

> Thus, in every case in which the question has been raised, the Court has recognized that there are limits of delegation which there is no constitutional authority to transcend. We think that section 9 (c) goes beyond those limits. As to the transportation of oil production in excess of State permission, the Congress has declared no policy, has established no standard, has laid down no rule. There is no requirement, no definition of circumstances and conditions in which the transportation is to be allowed or prohibited.

Again, in Schechter Poultry Corporation v. United States ((1935) 295 U. S. 495), which held the N. R. A. Act unconstitutional, the Court said:

> To summarize and conclude upon this point: Section 3 of the Recovery Act is without precedent. It supplies no standards for any trade, industry, or activity.

I submit that section 15 of this bill is without any precedent. It lays down no rules, no standards which the Civil Service Commission shall follow in defining what is or what is not political activity throughout the United States.

The Court further said, in the Schechter case:

> It does not undertake to prescribe rules of conduct to be applied to particular states of fact determined by appropriate administrative procedure. Instead of prescribing rules of conduct, it authorizes the making of codes to prescribe them. For that legislative undertaking, No. 3 sets up no standards, aside from the statement of the general aims of rehabilitation, correction, and expansion described in section 1.

And I submit that section 15 of this bill does not even go as far as section 3 of the N. R. A. went.

> In view of the scope of that broad declaration, and of the nature of the few restrictions that are imposed, the discretion of the President in approving or prescribing codes, and thus enacting laws for the government of trade and industry throughout the country, is virtually unfettered.

And so it is in this case, Mr. President, with respect to the Civil Service Commission. Their discretion in laying down what is political activity throughout the United States is absolutely unfettered.

The Court further said:

> We think that the code-making authority thus conferred is an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power.

That the doctrine stated in these two cases is still good law is seen in the case of Currin v. Wallace (1939) 306 U. S. 1), in which the Court, in upholding the Tobacco Inspection Act, reaffirmed its position and stated that in that case the constitutional requirements were met. In that case the Court was dealing with standards that were laid down by the legislative branch of the Government.

In view of this line of important decisions on the question of delegation of power, I take it there are few who will disagree with the statement that section 15 is extremely vulnerable from the standpoint of constitutionality when considered in the light of the decisions just read.

When one reads and closely considers section 15 of the bill, it seems hard to imagine a clearer delegation of legislative power than that of the power by regulation to fix in advance the situations to which an act of Congress shall apply. That is exactly the effect of the exercise by the Civil Service Commission of the power to define active part in political management or in political campaigns.

The delegation of power from the legislative branch of the Government to the Executive has been one of the most controversial issues during the past 7 years of government. There are those who constantly decry and condemn the encroachment of Federal power upon the rights of the people in the various States of the Union. There are those who are extremely fearful as to what the centralization of power in the Federal Government may ultimately do to the States and the rights of the people living therein.

On Monday last the able Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], in answering the distinguished majority leader [Mr. BARKLEY] said, among other things:

> If there is any one thing I have discovered in returning home, it is that the people of my State and those of other States which I have visited look with great fear upon the aggression which Washington has already made upon the government of the individual States.

And yesterday the eminent Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a speech made by the able Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], and in so doing he emphasized one particular section which seems to me to be more than apropos to the question now under consideration. I risk burdening the Senate by repeating what the Senator from Washington said. In that speech he said, among other things:

> No objective in mankind's progress has been more difficult of achievement or retention than political freedom. The common man has always desired political freedom for himself. He has, however, been slow to remember that his own freedom ultimately depends upon the equal freedom of all, even those whose views of government he may upon occasion dislike and even profoundly detest. It was only after centuries of struggle that the common man realized that political democracy was possible only if the right of all men, without regard to race or religion, to express their political opinions freely and publicly was scrupulously safeguarded.

So said the distinguished Senator from Washington.

Certainly no one can gainsay that this bill seeks to curb certain individuals, under certain conditions, from expressing their political opinions freely and publicly. Yes; the able addresses of the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Washington go to the very heart of the problem.

Mr. President, the question might be raised as to whether there is a distinction between a delegation of power which carries a penal regulation and one which does not. But I submit that the cases that have dealt with that subject make no such distinction. It is to be noted that in the comparable field where a satute is attacked on the ground of its being void for indefiniteness, the Supreme Court has reached the same result in a civil case, A. B. Small Co. v. American Sugar Refining Co. (1925, 267 U. S. 233), as in a criminal case, United States v. Cohen Grocery Co. (1921, 255 U. S. 81). These cases involved a civil suit on a contract and a criminal penalty under a statute which forbade charging more than a reasonable price for necessaries.

We find that the measure before us, which delegates power to the Civil Service Commission to control political activities throughout the Nation under certain conditions and circumstances, as well as to have a firm grip on the purse strings of the Government, wholly fails to attempt to define what is "active part in political management or in political campaigns," and neither do we lay down any standards in the bill which would be binding upon the Commission and make the law constitutional.

Mr. President, it is a strange coincidence that Members of the greatest legislative body in the world, who have been in the midst of political activities practically all of their lives, do not have the resourcefulness to assume the responsibility of defining the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns." If we who have been schooled in the science and art of government, if we who have made politics a lifelong career, if we who come from every section of this land and have the peculiar knowledge and understanding of political situations which exist in every community, I say that if we, with all of these qualifications, are unable to define "political management" or "political campaigns," and lay down the rules and regulations which the Civil Service Commission shall follow, then we are derelict in our duty, and it is an admission of weakness upon our part. We admit that we cannot define the term, but we are willing to leave it to some bureaucratic board which has absolutely no knowledge of political conditions and circumstances in any section of the country. As for my part, I cannot agree with that premise. I am willing to assume every responsibility in laying down a definition which will meet the constitutional requirements.

Mr. President, under this bill we are delegating to the Civil Service Commission a responsibility which deals with fundamental principles of government involving the Bill of Rights. Under this bill we are delegating to the Civil Service Commission the right to lay down rules and regulations in connection with political campaigns and political management that will curb political activities of citizens who fall within the designated classification of the bill. To tamper with that inherent and sacred right, I submit, is a most serious responsibility, and one which the United States Congress should assume. We should not under any circumstances advise the American people that we are unable to define or lay down any standards dealing with political management or political campaigns in the various States of the Union.

I think that no one will disagree that under the pending bill we are invading the right of an American citizen to participate freely and openly in the election of men to public office in the various States of the Union. This is a heritage which has been handed down through years of struggle by those who believed that this Republic in its present form is the best that has been devised by man. We have gone a long way in a century and a half under the present political system, and if that is to be disturbed, if any revolutionary changes are to be made, such as are contemplated in this bill, I submit that it should be done in a constitutional manner.

Mr. President, let me say that no other citizen is more interested in clean elections and the sanctity of the ballot than am I. No man is more interested in seeing every voter exercise his right of franchise according to the dictates of his own conscience. Yet no man is more interested in seeing that government does not encroach upon the rights of the people guaranteed by the Constitution of this country.

Mr. President, at this moment we look about us in the world and see military despots, dictators, and totalitarian governments who look with contempt upon the democratic forms of government. And especially are they envious of the most powerful democracy in the world. We know from congressional investigations the various movements which exist in this country which are in sympathy with the totalitarian doctrine. It is the duty of the Congress to see to it that no legislation is passed which will in any way disturb the political equilibrium of the average citizen of this country. He has been trained for 150 years in a certain school of free thought and a certain school of procedure affecting his life or his rights, which cannot be overturned by legislative action without bringing about serious national repercussions.

I point out that under paragraph (d) of section 12 the Commission is authorized to adopt—

> Such reasonable procedure and rules and regulations as it deems necessary to execute its functions under this section. Any determination made by the Commission under this section shall be final and conclusive upon all accounting and other officers of the United States and all other persons.

In other words, Mr. President, the citizen working on a highway who is charged with pernicious political activities would not only lose his job, under the proposed act, but would be denied the right of appeal from the ruling of the Civil Service Commission.

I submit this simple question: Does this type of Federal procedure, dealing with the right of an individual to participate and exercise his influence in a State election, create in the mind of the citizen and his friends affected by the legislation a better feeling and more faith in our form of government, or does it have a tendency to lessen his faith in our form of Government?

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Not only under this measure would the man lose his job on the judgment of the Civil Service Commission, from which the Senator says there is no appeal, but under the same bill, by the same action of the same Civil Service Commission, he could be blacklisted in his own State, and could not get a job for 18 months in his own State.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct; he could not get a job in his own State, or in any of its political subdivisions, for a period of 18 months.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. With respect to the prohibition against an employee who has been discharged being reemployed for a period of 18 months, I will ask the Senator whether or not a proper construction of the provision would preclude a discharged employee from being employed in any city, county, or State office, in any capacity, whether or not he would be precluded from being employed only in a department that is supported in part by Federal funds, or whether it would apply to all departments of the city, county, or State government?

Mr. LUCAS. I think it would apply directly to the municipality which is dealing with Federal funds.

Mr. STEWART. But could he be employed in any department in the city, county, or State, which would not be affected by the proposed act?

Mr. LUCAS. I seriously doubt that he could be, because, as I understand, when a public grant comes to Illinois, for instance, for highway purposes, say of a million dollars, that million dollars is placed with the entire highway fund of our State. In other words, if we are going to spend in Illinois $10,000,000 for roads next year, and the Bureau of Roads grants us a million dollars, it means that we have $11,000,000 to spend on highways in the State of Illinois. So every foot of highway construction in the State would be indirectly affected by the million dollars which comes from the Federal Government, and every individual who is participating or working in any way in connection with the highway department would be subject to the act, because of the million dollars that comes into the general fund from the Federal Government.

Mr. STEWART. Let me ask a further question, though it may repeat the former question in a way. The point I am trying to make is this: Suppose an employee in the highway department violates the Hatch Act; he is discharged and cannot be reemployed by the highway department for 18 months. Could the State employ him in its revenue department, for instance, or in some department which is not affected in anywise by a Federal grant?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield a moment, I apologize for invoking the very rule which perhaps I violated yesterday in colloquy with Senators about me during the debate, but I should like very much to hear what the Senators are saying and to know if possible what the colloquy is.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in response to the question propounded by the Senator from Tennessee, it is my understanding that if an individual working for a State should be discharged for a violation of the act, it would be impossible for him to be employed in any department of the State during the following 18-month period, whether or not he was thereafter affected by the provisions of the act.

Mr. STEWART. That would be true also with respect to any political subdivision within the State; he could not even be employed by a municipality as a truck driver or in any other capacity?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should say that what would be true with respect to State agencies would likewise hold true with respect to other agencies, including municipalities.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. If the Senator will look at page 6, beginning with line 7, he will find that the language is so perfectly clear that there can be no mistake about it. It reads as follows:

> If in any case the Commission finds that such officer or employee has not been removed from his office or employment within a reasonable time after such notification, or that he has been so removed and has subsequently (within a period of 18 months) been appointed to any office or employment in any State or local agency in such State, the Commission shall determine and certify to the appropriate Federal agency an additional amount to be similarly withheld from a loan or grant to a State or local agency within such State.

If it is found that such an employee is on the pay roll again anywhere in that State an additional amount may be withheld.

Mr. LUCAS. I doubt if there is much difference between us as to proper consideration of the provision.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to have the question made perfectly clear, and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. It has just been indicated by the colloquy between the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from Indiana, and the Senator from Tennessee, that if an employee were found guilty of violating the provisions of this measure, and the Commission certified that he was guilty of such violation, he could not then be employed by any State agency or county or municipal government, whether or not such agency or organization was receiving funds from the Federal Government. Is that the interpretation which the Senator from New Mexico places on the language?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as I stated yesterday, the present language of the committee amendment would have that effect.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is the Senator from New Mexico in favor of barring a man from all forms of governmental employment at all levels if he violates the provisions of this measure?

Mr. HATCH. I will say in answer to the Senator from Wisconsin that I already have worked out a modification of that particular provision, and shall present it later.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I understood, the entire theory of the bill was that it was to apply the principles of the Hatch Act to various State activities which were receiving financial support from the Federal Government.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It seems to me it is going a long way to say that if a man is guilty of some of the activities prohibited by the measure, he is thereafter debarred from any kind of public employment for the period of 18 months.

Mr. HATCH. The way that came into the bill, as I explained yesterday, was in an effort on the part of the draftsmen to plug up what appeared to be a loophole which would permit the shifting of employees from one department to another for the purpose of evading the terms of the measure. It may be that we went too far in trying to stop up that particular loophole. At any rate we are perfectly willing to modify the language.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to hear the language of the proposed amendment. It seems to me it would be of help to Senators in discussing the matter if the Senator from New Mexico were to send the proposed amendment to the desk and have it stated.

Mr. HATCH. It is in the course of preparation now.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I may add that, in my opinion, the provisions of this bill apply all the way down to towns.

Mr. President, I have concluded. I have only one more word to say. Believing, as I do, in the basic and fundamental principles which seem to me to go to the very roots of a well-established and orderly form of democratic government, I am constrained to say that I find it impossible to support this proposed legislation.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment in the nature of a perfecting amendment, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 4, line 20, after the word "election", it is proposed to insert the words "or the nomination of any candidate for any office mentioned in section 2."

Mr. DANAHER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Capper	Gerry	Holman

Ashurst	Chandler	Gillette	Hughes

Norris	Schwartz	Thomas, Okla.	Wheeler
Nye	Schwellenbach	Thomas, Utah	White
O'Mahoney	Shipstead	Tobey	Wiley

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I shall withdraw the amendment which I previously sent to the desk, and offer another amendment in the nature of a perfecting amendment. For the present, before it is stated by the clerk, I wish to read it. I invite the attention of Senators to page 6, line 7, where we find the word "determination." In order that the context may appear in continuity, I shall read the provision as it now stands:

> If the Commission determines that such violation warrants the removal of the officer or employee by whom it was committed from his office or employment, it shall notify the appropriate State or local agency of such determination.

My amendment is to strike out the period and insert a comma and the following language:

> Whereupon such officer or employee, or the appropriate State or local agency, or both, shall have the right to appeal from any such finding to the next term of the United States District Court for the district in which such officer or employee shall reside; and the United States district courts shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such appeal, and all proceedings therein shall be had in the same manner as is provided for appeals taken under section 39 c, Public, No. 696, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, approved June 22, 1938 (U. S. C. Supp., title 11, sec. 67 c). No such officer or employee shall be dismissed as a result of such determination by said Commission and no loan or grant shall be withheld until said appeal shall be finally determined.

Mr. President, much has been said on the floor about the evils of the lack of appeal, and they have been so thoroughly pointed out that the remedy suggests itself. My amendment is offered at this particular point, following, as it does, the language under which a determination of alleged guilt shall have been arrived at by the fact-finding Commission.

The proposed remedy by way of appeal will safeguard the rights of the employee whose guilt is allegedly determined. It will safeguard the rights of the State or local agency whose rights are allegedly interfered with by virtue of withholding the Federal grant, or any part thereof. Consequently, Mr. President, in order that there may be a method of appeal, it is obviously necessary that the Federal courts be given jurisdiction. The perfecting amendment will give the Federal courts jurisdiction.

It is necessary that the method of procedure of the courts taking consideration of the appeal be set forth. Happily, the Congress, in the Chandler Act, which is cited at length in the amendment now on the desk, has already defined and prescribed an ideal method of taking appeals to the United States district courts from a fact-finding officer. The amendment provides a ready means of taking appeal to the Federal court for the district in which the alleged violation is said to have occurred; that is to say, where the accused employee has residence. There is provision for protection of the individual, as well as the State or local subdivision thereof, and until there shall be a final determination of the appeal the provisions of the act shall not apply.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator's amendment were agreed to, would it not follow that anyone aggrieved by a decision of the district court could go up to the circuit court of appeals, and from there to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. DANAHER. I should hope so.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us look at the matter in a practical way. Suppose such a thing should happen on any project for which the Federal Government had furnished some of the funds—a project to which the law applies. The project would be finished before the Supreme Court finally passed upon the question. In the meantime, the offender, however guilty he might be, would hold his job. The job would be over because the project would be completed. Would not that follow as a practical matter?

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that I appreciate his interest and consideration. I answer him categorically, "No."

In the first place, while it is true that the individual employee would be retained pending an ultimate decision, it is ever so much preferable that he be retained, that his rights be determined, and that there be no penal restriction upon him limiting him, as the Senator from Wisconsin pointed out a while ago, to a state of blacklist—absolutely removed from Federal or State pay rolls of whatever kind for a period of 18 months.

Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that I can conceive of such a case as that of a professor in a land-grant university, let us say, who earns $4,000 a year. For 18 months he would be deprived of his position and salary and could not even work in a local subdivision of the very State in which he is engaged.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is pointing out an acknowledged defect which I do not think his amendment would cure—a defect which must be cured, and, I presume, will be cured by the proper amendment. I concede that such a person should not be penalized in the manner described.

As I see it, the effect of the Senator's amendment would be practically to nullify this section of the law. A political machine in a State might load up a project with political appointees. Perhaps they would be ordinary workmen or clerical workers. They could violate the law with impunity and boast of their violations. They might be tried by the Civil Service Commission, which would make a finding. The finding would be held up while the case went through all the courts, which might take 3 or 4 years. There would be no trouble about that, because the leaders of the political machine would furnish the lawyers and the money to take every case to the Supreme Court.

Does not the Senator see that such employees are akin to the employees in any of the Federal departments? Suppose some one in the War Department should violate a rule, or for any other reason should be discharged by his superior officer; should we not give to him the blessed right of appeal and let him go to the Supreme Court, and provide that in the meantime the War Department must permit him to continue to draw his salary? It seems to me that if we should apply the same theory to everything that is akin to this situation we should have more cases in the Supreme Court than a dozen Supreme Courts could take care of.

Mr. DANAHER. Has the Senator concluded?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me answer the Senator in this way: It seems to me that the fact that at present there is no machinery for appeal under the civil service is a very serious defect, and those of us who are interested in civil service have long regretted it. Under Federal law there is no right of appeal today for a civil servant who is wrongfully dismissed. I am perfectly willing that such employees be given the machinery within the civil-service structure to take appeals. I am perfectly willing that amendatory legislation to that effect be achieved. However, I have not undertaken to make my amendment applicable to all civil-service legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. Why not?

Mr. DANAHER. We are working on a particular bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Why not make the amendment applicable to all civil-service legislation?

Mr. DANAHER. I am willing that that be done.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us do that, and kill the bill.

Mr. DANAHER. We are working on a particular bill. We are not working on the Civil Service Act of 1882. Consequently, when we take this step, if it be a good precedent, if it affords a sound basis for appeal, and if it looks to the protection of the injured employee or officer who is removed from the rolls, it will do exactly what some of us, I am sure, want to see done in the interest of justice to the accused.

I believe it eminently more to be preferred that an individual be continued on the rolls than that he be deprived for 18 months by some administrative tribunal in Washington of the opportunity of employment. That, it seems to me, is a fair statement of the principle involved.

Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that there is force to one point he makes, and that is that such an accused individual, though he be, as the Senator puts it, ever so guilty, would be continued on the rolls. All we have to do to perfect this particular amendment is to say that he shall be suspended pending the determination of his appeal and shall draw no salary. That would meet the Senator's objection; would it not?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. DANAHER. Why not?

Mr. NORRIS. I should think, from the Senator's argument, that he would not want to modify his amendment in that way; would he?

Mr. DANAHER. I am perfectly willing to see that the right and proper thing be done, and I know that the Senator from Nebraska wants that done.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course I do, but if we are going to pass this bill at all, I do not want to hamstring it and nullify it, which I think the Senator's amendment would do. As I see it, it would make it unworkable. We will disagree as to whether we ought to have such a law at all, but if we put such protection around every political appointee, every man that any political machine puts into office by any means, we give them the power to keep such appointee in office until the entire project is finished, unless it takes more than 3 or 4 years to finish it.

If the Senator would modify his amendment and say that they shall have an appeal, but that the action of the Civil Service Commission shall take effect, it seems to me he would lessen a great deal the evil the amendment would otherwise contain.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me ask the Senator, first, Does he agree with me that an accused who has been found guilty should have the right of appeal?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I should say so, but from the practical standpoint if we apply that principle to every employee, as we ought to do if we do it in this case, so that every employee of the Government would have the right of appeal and to go to the Supreme Court, we would make it impossible for half our Government organizations to proceed any further.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me suggest, then, to the Senator from Nebraska another line of thought. I wish to say that there is no Member of this body of whom I am more fond and in whose judgment I am more willing to share, for the benefit of his viewpoint is of the greatest interest to me; but let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that if we add to this amendment these particular words we can, I think, meet the whole core of his present objection, namely, the words—

> Pending such final appeal any such employee who shall have been determined to be guilty of a violation of this act shall be suspended.

Did the Senator follow me as I stated that? Does that particular language meet the objection of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. I think those words would help the Senator's amendment but would not cure its evils, in my judgment.

Mr. DANAHER. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska what remaining evil there is?

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator wants me to express my opinion about that——

Mr. DANAHER. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the whole amendment is evil; I would strike it all out.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator, of course, generalizes and states a conclusion.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to impugn and do not impugn, as the Senator knows, in any way the Senator's motives, or ascribe any but the most honorable intentions on his part, but, as I look at it, this amendment is wholly wrong, wholly unnecessary, and wholly unworkable, and will be found impracticable in actual operation.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, taking up the objections in the order named, when the Senator says the amendment is wholly unnecessary he has already stated to me that he feels that the right of appeal should be granted; when he says to me that he feels that an individual once found guilty should not draw salary pending appeal, he would have us understand that it is unworkable because it would continue the man on the rolls. I was meeting that objection by suggesting that the amendment be modified so to say that, pending the ultimate determination the individual shall be suspended, not blacklisted, and to that extent we meet the definition of unworkable, as the Senator from Nebraska uses the term.

Mr. President, so far as he understands that when grants can be withheld and that a project cannot be completed, the Senator from New Mexico only yesterday pointed out that grants may be withheld from projects determined on the basis of the particular in which the least injury would flow to any given State in the event guilt is adjudged. Consequently, if a project be threatened, grants to some other project could be withheld. In other words, the degree of penalty following the use of the money does not by any means depend upon the ultimate determination of the case. But if this amendment be adopted, as stated, we will have achieved, it seems to me, the right of appeal to the accused, the right of protection to the State or the subdivisions thereof. That is no more nor less than fair, and is a part of our ingrained law. Far from this amendment being "evil," if I may use the word that was employed by my distinguished colleague from Nebraska, I think that it meets the objections we have heard voiced from so many angles—by the Senator from Wisconsin, by the Senator from Illinois, by the Senator from Kentucky, and yet others who have spoken on this subject on this floor. It seems to me that if this bill does not provide for the right of appeal, the whole bill is evil on that basis. I ask for the consideration of the amendment and its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HATCH obtained the floor.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. VAN NUYS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I shall support the amendments offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] to the so-called Hatch Act.

I supported the original measure as it applies to Federal employees and to those receiving Federal funds. I consider it only fair and just, and also greatly in the public interest, that the same restrictions against pernicious political activities should apply to State employees who are paid in part from Federal funds.

The original Hatch Act was a long step in the right direction. The pending amendments, in my judgment, constitute another necessary step.

Years ago the Federal Government decided, and wisely so, that the people would be better off if Federal civil-service employees were prohibited from certain types of political activity; also from exercising political coercion and from soliciting campaign funds. This principle has been well established for many years, and I believe it is generally admitted that it has worked in the public interest and in the interest of the civil-service employees as well.

Within the past few years the payment of subsidies and relief grants from the Public Treasury to individuals has created many new problems in government. Safeguarding the ballot is one of them.

When millions of persons are receiving funds from the Public Treasury and are dependent upon such funds for their livelihood, in whole or in part, the men and agencies handling the funds naturally are placed in position to influence, to intimidate, to coerce, and, in many instances, to control, the actions of the recipients of the funds.

It is public knowledge, thanks to the good work of the Sheppard committee, how this power of the purse was used to influence primaries and elections in the 1938 campaigns. It was that report which focused public attention on these evils and resulted at the last session in the enactment of the Hatch bill, which extended the restrictions upon pernicious political activity to Federal officials and employees outside the classified civil service as well as in the classified civil service.

But, while the Sheppard committee was investigating the misuse of relief funds to influence elections, the fact also was brought to public attention that State administrations, through the use of patronage incident to State agencies operating with Federal funds, also were being used to influence elections, which is another form of pernicious political activity.

It is common knowledge that State highway departments in some States have as many employees as all other State departments put together. In each State the highway department reaches into every community and has thousands of men on the pay rolls. These are technically State employees, although paid in part with Federal funds. They are capable of being welded into effective political machines. If appointments on them are controlled by county committees of political parties, as they sometimes are, there is the strong possibility—I might say probability—that the administration in power can and will work up a machine based on political patronage so powerful that it menaces the public welfare.

Mr. President, I say it is as wrong to countenance a patronage control of primaries and elections as it is to countenance such control through the use of relief funds. The pending amendments will extend the provisions of the Hatch Act prohibiting pernicious political activities to State and local public officers and employees paid in part from Federal funds. I agree with the Senator from New Mexico that Congress has the power to do this. I feel that it ought to be done, and I shall support the pending amendments.

I believe it is fundamental that popular government cannot succeed unless the electors are in position to exercise their free and independent judgment upon matters and candidates that come before them for action. Manifestly, that freedom of choice does not exist if a considerable body of the electorate are intimidated, coerced, or improperly influenced.

No man whose livelihood depends in whole or in considerable part upon grants from the Treasury is free to vote his own convictions, free to vote for the candidates of his choice, if those who control the payments can tell him, or even suggest to him, how he should vote. Nor can the man whose job is dependent upon the will of an administration exercise freedom of choice if that job is at the disposal of a political machine or a political boss. He, like the man on relief, can be compelled to vote as the machine dictates; he can be compelled to contribute to campaign funds; he can be compelled to influence the votes of his family, his friends, and his neighbors.

In practice, the use of patronage to control conventions, primaries, and elections was not so important in the days when only a small percentage of the voting population was on the public pay roll or relief rolls. But today, when perhaps one-fifth of the voters—in some communities a majority of the voters—are either on the public pay roll, the relief rolls, or are receiving Government payments in some form, the abuse of patronage and Government money is a serious threat to our form of government.

By the way, Mr. President, in this connection I wish to commend the attitude of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace in warning county and local committeemen under the Soil Conservation program to abstain from political activities. While these local committeemen are not under the Hatch Act, as I understand, I think they should not be used for political purposes; and I am glad Secretary Wallace feels the same way about the matter and is using his influence to prevent it.

I sincerely hope the amendments presented by the Senator from New Mexico will be adopted. I hope crippling amendments like that offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] will be voted down. I trust prompt action will be taken and that the measure will become law in time to be effective during the present campaign.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today not to speak directly on the pending amendment, offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], but to speak for a little while on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] and to mention a few features of the general philosophy of the legislation which both the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] attacked so vigorously yesterday.

I appreciated greatly the very fine analysis made by the Senator from Arkansas of the law passed at the last session of the Congress, and I appreciated greatly the very kind and highly approving words with which both he and the Senator from Indiana praised all the sections of that bill except one. I was glad indeed to welcome them, even at this late hour, on the side of that type of legislation. I was more than glad to hear them say that they approved heartily of sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, and that they would not intimidate or coerce any voter under the sun; that they would go as far as I or anyone else to prevent coercion and intimidation. I was very glad to hear those remarks yesterday. I would have been far more glad to hear those remarks when similar provisions in other measures were pending before the Senate of the United States, and voices were then raised, not in praise but in condemnation of the very principles of which there was approval yesterday.

Mr. President, perhaps my memory is too good, but I quite well remember when, as early as 1937, some of us were seeking to write into the law of the land some of those principles which the Senators praised so highly, and I heard not the voices of these able Senators in support of those high principles which they favored so strongly yesterday.

I quite well remember one hot summer night in the Senate of the United States when some of us sought to write into a relief appropriation bill an insignificant, weak, puny provision attempting to protect against the use for political purposes of funds appropriated by Congress for relief purposes, trying to keep them from being used for intimidation or coercion, and I heard not the voice of my distinguished friend from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Without any heat——

Mr. HATCH. The Senator spoke with a great deal of heat, and may I say with very little light, on yesterday. [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. I have not been blinded by the brilliance of the Senator's remarks up to now. The Senator said something about the Senator from Indiana on a certain memorable night. Who was in the chair when the Senator was recognized?

Mr. HATCH. On that night the Senator from Indiana was not, but I will digress here long enough to pay my respects to the Senator from Indiana, who refers to another occasion. When I say I pay my respects to him, I mean respects. I was trying on another occasion to get before the Senate a bill which provided merely that Federal employees should not go to conventions. That was all the bill provided. I had tried to tie it on to a post-office bill, as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], now seated before me, will remember, as an amendment, because my measure had been pending on the calendar for over a year, and I could not get any action on it. The late Senator Steiwer, of Oregon, and I had introduced the bill jointly.

I saw that the attempt to attach the bill as a rider to the other bill was bad strategy. I heard objections being raised to that form of legislation, and I realized that I probably would not succeed in having the bill passed if I attempted to tie it to the other bill as a rider, and I wanted results, I wanted the measure passed. So I announced that I would withdraw the amendment. But I gave notice that as soon as the bill then pending was disposed of I would seek recognition from the Chair in order to make my bill the pending order of business.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] was in the chair.

The consideration of the post-office bill was completed, and the moment the presiding officer announced that the bill had been passed, I rose to my feet quickly and said, "Mr. President." I said "Mr. President" before anyone else spoke, and there were others, perhaps, who would have liked to have the attention of the Chair to keep me from making my motion. My eternal gratitude and thanks go to the Senator from Indiana, because he presided on that occasion exactly as a presiding officer of the Senate should preside. He followed the rules of the United States Senate and said, "The Senator from New Mexico is recognized," and played just as fairly and squarely as a man ever played; and I thank the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Nevertheless, Mr. President, the voice of the Senator from Indiana was not raised that hot night in June, when we sought to protect relief appropriations. And where was the Senator from Arkansas on that occasion? Was he standing before the Senate and proclaiming with all his eloquence and might his desire to protect against intimidation and coercion, as he did yesterday? I heard not his voice on that occasion.

All this reminds me of my favorite editorial. I think I have heretofore read the editorial to the Senate, but I wish to read it again, because it so fully states exactly what I am thinking just now, and what I thought yesterday when these gentlemen were so lavish with their praise of various sections of the bill. I quote the editorial, from the Washington Daily News, which I think was written by Walker Stone:

> Harry Hopkins now says that he thinks the Senate made a bad mistake when it voted down the Hatch amendment forbidding politics in relief.

The editorial continues:

> Well do we remember that hot summer night of sweat and oratory when the Senate got down to the final vote on the Hatch amendment, when the "purge committee" was cracking the whip, and a majority of the Senators said "Me, too," to the proposition that W. P. A. should be left free to play politics.
> In the cool reflection of January Mr. Hopkins announces he was in favor of the Hatch amendment. But—
>
> Where, where was Roderick then!
> One blast upon his bugle horn
> Were worth a thousand men!

Where, oh where, Mr. President, when these issues were being fought for on the floor of the Senate, were the distinguished and honorable gentlemen who praised so highly on yesterday?

Mr. President, looking back at those scenes, and other scenes which have occurred in the Halls of Congress, I am a little dubious of the praise that is bestowed at this late day; and I cannot help doubt, when an amendment is offered to one section of the bill to kill it, if possible, that at the next opportunity other amendments will be offered to kill other sections of the bill.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas goes, as he says, to the very heart of this matter, and it goes to the heart of other things, about which I wish to speak. I wish to say something of the background and philosophy and democracy of this type of legislation, for the distinguished gentlemen who ask that section 9 of the measure we passed last summer be repealed are Democrats, members of my own party.

Mr. President, I presume every Senator knows that that section was offered for the purpose of keeping Federal employees from engaging in political activity, political management, and political campaigns. All it did was to apply to some 300,000 workers the same rule against political activity which is already applied to some 500,000 and more workers of the Government in the classified civil service.

Mr. President, when two clerks sit side by side at the same table, one in the classified civil service, the other not, I see no reason why one should be permitted to be active politically and the other forbidden to be politically active. I realize that certain types of officials, who are essentially policy-making officials, such as the President of the United States and members of his Cabinet, should be exempted from the general rule. A distinguished Senator yesterday said this rule should be applied to them, and that they should be removed from office if they played politics. The Senator said he could see no distinction between such officials and other Government employees.

Mr. President, there is a distinction between ordinary Government employees and officers who are charged with the high duty and responsibility of formulating programs and policies, because the latter must not only sell those policies—if I may use that expression—to the country, but they must be able to defend their policies against attack. Everyone knows that to be so. Such officers are distinctly political officers, and it is not difficult to distinguish between them and other governmental employees, the great mass of whom perform merely clerical duties, which are not political in any sense. But they are made political, and are used, as we all know, for the purpose of playing the old game of American politics. They are used to control and dominate conventions, and have been so used many times in our history.

The issue raised by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] is the old issue which has been presented almost since the formation of our Government. It is the issue between what we call the spoils system, the patronage and job system, and the one which relies upon merit and efficiency.

I know that Senators say this measure does not provide any merit and efficiency test, and that it only prohibits political activity on the part of employees. That is quite true. But I have on more than one occasion pointed out that it is my ultimate aim or purpose to include all types of employees I have mentioned under a real, genuine system of merit and efficiency, and the reason they have not been so included, and were not included long ago, is simply that the political masters wanted to use their services for political purposes. There is no use to disguise the fact.

We may talk about good politics, and bad politics, and pernicious politics, and the inherent right of citizens, and all those things which have been mentioned, but the question which confronts us by reason of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas is, Shall the Senate of the United States say that it took one short step last summer looking toward the removal from politics of those occupying these clerical positions, hoping eventually to establish a real merit system, to do away with some of the baneful and evil influences of the spoils system? We did that last summer. And shall the Senate further say that this year, in an election year, in fact, just before the nominating conventions, we will repeal that law and return to the old system? Is there any significance in the fact that it is now sought to repeal the law?

The Senator from Arkansas said yesterday, "We did not have a chance to debate this bill." Why did not the Senate have a chance to debate it?

Mr. MILLER. No; Mr. President, I said it was not debated.

Mr. HATCH. I misunderstood the Senator. If it was not debated, it was not my fault. It is true that it passed the Senate on the unanimous-consent calendar.

Mr. President, yesterday my attention was diverted for the moment, and I perhaps inadvertently addressed a remark to the Senator from Indiana when the Senator from Arkansas had the floor, without saying "Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?" But just now the Senator from Arkansas failed to give me the courtesy which yesterday he demanded that I give to him.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas wish the Senator from New Mexico to yield to him?

Mr. HATCH. I shall yield to the Senator if he wishes me to do so. What I said was simply a little side remark.

Mr. President, as I previously said, I wish to discuss today to some extent the general philosophy of the two types of systems, the merit system and the spoils system, to which we will return if the Miller amendment is adopted.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] said he does not see anything in politics which is bad. Those are not his exact words, of course.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. What I think I said was that I did not see anything pernicious in an American citizen voluntarily taking part in a political campaign and being for whomever he wants to be for.

Mr. HATCH. Of course not, Mr. President. An American citizen may take part in a political campaign and be for anyone he wants to be for. That would not be pernicious political activity, and there is nothing in the pending measure or the present law which would prohibit it.

Mr. MINTON. It would be under the original Hatch Act if he happened to hold a Federal office, and under the pending bill if he held a State office.

Mr. HATCH. I do not agree with the Senator at all. The bill does not have the effect of prohibiting an officeholder from being for whomever he wants to be for.

Mr. MINTON. And going out and campaigning for him?

Mr. HATCH. He is prohibited from going out and campaigning for him actively.

Mr. MINTON. That is what I objected to, and I said I thought the title did not properly set forth all the things the bill encompassed. If the bill encompasses that sort of action on the part of an American citizen, I think it is bad. I do not think such action is pernicious.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to give the Senate a picture of the system to which the Senator from Arkansas would return, the system to which the Senator from Indiana has referred. It is not a picture which I draw myself. It is not a picture drawn by any politician. I shall use the words of one of the foremost historians of the United States, who said:

Whenever a new political party came into power, all, or nearly all, the employees were turned out of office to make room for members of the victorious party.

Is not that exactly the system some Senators want to keep in effect?

Persons were appointed, not because they were competent, but because they were Republicans or Democrats, or partisans of some other kind. Competent officials and laborers were discharged after long and faithful service, and inexperienced politicians were put in their places.

Mr. President, that has happened time and time again throughout the history of our country.

Unnecessary positions were created to provide employment for party workers.

Is it being done today, Mr. President? Certainly it has been done. I am not accusing my own administration of something of which other administrations have not been guilty; but I do accuse both parties under this system, over a long period of years, of having created positions to reward party workers. That is the system to which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] would return.

Salaries were not closely related to the nature of the work but rather to the requirements of the political incumbent.

I ask Senators if that is not true, if their own experiences have not made them aware of many instances of salaries not being related to the work but rather to the need?

I am coming directly to the thing to which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] object, and their reason for wanting to strike out section 9.

Those who held offices were expected to devote a part of their time toward helping the party in elections, and often they gave more hours to partisan services than to public duties.

Is it a true charge? I make the charge today. It is true:

They made large contributions from their salaries to party campaign funds—

Is that a true charge? I make the charge today—and if they failed to contribute they were assessed by the party treasurers.

Here I add my own statement that if they paid not the little contributions assessed against them, no matter what their need or the need of their families might be, it was only a question of time until there was a vacancy in that office, and someone else who would pay—even pay through the nose—was given the job. That is the system to which the Senator from Arkansas wants to return, and that is the thing at which we are striking, even though feebly, by section 9.

In course of time, the public officers in each party and those who aspired to hold office, became closely organized as party workers. They made up the bulk of party committees and conventions.

Is not that true today, Mr. President?

They were directing captains in election campaigns. In short, the political party became, to a considerable extent, an office-getting machine.

From the deep, grave concern manifested yesterday on the floor of the Senate by my distinguished friends, I am inclined to think that in some places political parties today consist of job-getting machines.

The historian adds:

The ordinary citizen was elbowed aside by officeholders who had an abundance of time at public expense to do the active work of parties.

Am I going too far in suggesting the thought that perhaps those who are so outraged at the passage of that simple bill last summer might want to use officeholders in this very election to elbow aside ordinary citizens?

The historian concludes:

Thus administration was perverted from its true purposes of serving the public and made subordinate to the job-hunting interests.

Mr. President, I do not want to see administration perverted from its true purposes of serving the public and made subordinate to job-hunting interests. When I lay down that proposition, I stand in most respectable company. When I say that it is wrong for Federal employees actively to engage in politics and to be used to dominate and control elections, as a Democrat I stand with the greatest and best of Democrats; and I am not ashamed of my company. It was the first great Democrat—that great President of the United States, that great leader and great liberal, Thomas Jefferson—who issued the first executive order on this subject.

In 1801 Thomas Jefferson said:

The President of the United States has seen with dissatisfaction officers of the general government taking on various occasions active part in the elections of the public functionaries, whether of the general or of the State governments. Freedom of election being essential to the mutual independence of governments * * * so vitally cherished by our constitutions, it is deemed improper for officers depending on the Executive of the Union to attempt to control or influence the free exercise of the elective right.

That view was expressed by Thomas Jefferson in an Executive order. However, he did not stop there. He went on to say:

The right of any officer to give his vote at any elections as a qualified citizen is not meant to be restrained; nor, however given, shall it have any effect to his prejudice; but it is expected that he will not * * * take any part in the business of electioneering, that being deemed inconsistent with the spirit of the Constitution and his duties to it.

Later, Thomas Jefferson wrote a letter, in which he said:

The event of the election is still in dubio. A strong portion in the House of Representatives will prevent an election if they can. I rather believe they will not be able to do it, as there are six individuals of moderate character, any one of whom coming over to the Republican vote will make a ninth State. Till this is known it is too soon for me to say what should be done in such atrocious cases as those you mention of Federal officers obstructing the operation of the State governments.

Complaint had evidently been made that Federal officials were working in the States.

One thing I will say, that as to the future, interferences with elections, whether of the State or General Government, by officers of the latter, should be deemed cause of removal; because the constitutional remedy by the elective principle becomes nothing if it may be smothered by the enormous patronage of the General Government.

That is what Thomas Jefferson wrote; and that is true today, Mr. President. Think of the few officers and employees in Thomas Jefferson's time. And yet he was concerned about the smothering of freedom of the elective processes by the enormous patronage of the Federal Government. Today the patronage of the Federal Government in Washington runs into the thousands, and it extends to every State capital, every county seat, and every township in the Union.

No wonder, Mr. President, that some Senators want to use that terrific force to perpetuate themselves and their party in office. But, with Thomas Jefferson, I say, Mr. President, that when that is done we destroy the very processes of free government and smother them with the enormous patronage of the Federal Government. Last summer we tried to introduce one little check, one little weight in the balance, to protect against that danger by writing section 9 into the bill. That is all we tried to do. But the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] says, "You are interfering with the inherent, God-given rights of citizens, and we must repeal that section of the statute."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In connection with the assertion of the Senator from Arkansas that the Hatch bill was passed without any debate, while it is true that originally the bill was passed without objection upon the call of the calendar following a very brief explanation by the Senator from New Mexico, it is also true that on July 21, 1939, at page 9671, volume 84, part 9, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, when the bill came back from the House the Senator from New Mexico moved to concur in the House amendments, and that a somewhat extensive colloquy took place, participated in by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], at whose instance the matter had been held up when the Chair was putting the question, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], and myself.

I desire to ask the Senator from New Mexico if it is not a fact that what occurred with reference to this bill was that the bill passed the Senate on the call of the calendar; that there was subsequently developed a general impression that the bill was to be emasculated in the committee of the House of Representatives; that the bill was in fact emasculated in the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives; that subsequently, in a very hot fight in the House of Representatives itself, teeth were put back in the bill; that the motion of the Senator from New Mexico on that day to concur in the House amendments simply amounted to the passage of the bill, and it was on that occasion that a short and rather heated debate occurred in the Senate of the United States as appears on the pages of the RECORD to which I have referred?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Missouri is entirely correct in his recollection of the incident.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I think the Senator from Missouri has stated what happened at that particular time correctly, but in order further to keep the record straight, so far as I am particularly concerned, I believe I stated to my colleague at that particular time that if I had been in the Chamber at the time the original bill was passed I would have voted against it. I did not raise any point whatsoever as to concurrence in the House amendments.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There is no question about that. I simply mentioned the Senator from New Mexico because his name appears in the colloquy.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. With further reference to the matter brought up by the Senator from Missouri, I will state that the question before the Senate was the narrow one of concurring in the House amendment. I went to the desk while the Senator from New Mexico was speaking on his motion to concur in the House amendments and found that the House amendments had not materially changed the Senate bill. I came back and so told the Senator from New Mexico. I never made any further objection on that occasion. I will ask the Senator from New Mexico if that is not correct?

Mr. HATCH. I am always glad to bear witness to a statement of the Senator from Indiana.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] did correctly detail the situation, and what occurred on that occasion. As I recall, there was a little heat in the exchange of words between the Senator from Indiana and me, but I quite well recall on that occasion exactly how the Senator from Indiana concluded his remarks, and I will say to him that I am just as appreciative of his fine attitude in his concluding remarks on that occasion as I am for his action on the day he recognized me while he was in the chair. I wish I could say as much for his attitude in connection with the pending bill.

Mr. President, I was talking about the spoils system and what a danger it was to this Government. Only yesterday I think one of the most respected and honored Members of this body, talking with me, said, "There is no question, Senator, that when you strike at the patronage evil you strike at the greatest single evil in governmental affairs today." Those are not my words, but I know that the patronage evil has cursed this country for many years. I recall, from my reading and study of history, that after the passage of the 4-year law in 1820 the patronage evil grew and grew, and while during a long period of time there were some zealous souls trying to enact a merit system, no progress whatever against the evils of patronage was made until, Mr. President, what happened?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to his colleague?

Mr. HATCH. I will yield in a moment. What happened to awaken this country to the need of a merit system? It took the assassination of a President of the United States. I now yield to my colleague.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, no one can disagree with my colleague when he discusses the evil of patronage. I do not think there can be a Senator or anyone else who would disagree with my colleague in that respect and dare to call himself an American. But there are some Senators who are looking at this matter from a different point of view. Concurring fully in the statement as to the difficulties caused by and the evil of patronage, still I think that Americanism should be considered when we undertake to pass a bill to safeguard against the patronage evil.

Mr. HATCH. I thank my colleague. I think he said that he thought Americanism should be taken into consideration in passing the bill. Of course, I thoroughly agree with that sentiment and statement. I do not think there is anything un-American about protecting the electorate against the political activities of the ever-increasing number of Government employees.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] said he wanted to protect the average citizen of this country; that he wanted to repeal the law which forbids political activity on the part of employees of the Federal Government in order to protect the average man of America. What a conception of the average man of America the Senator must have. I do not know what he thinks about him, but I will tell him in what I think the average man of America is interested. He is not interested in the holding of a public job. The average man of America is not on the pay roll of any State or of the Federal Government. The average men and women of America are down on the farms and in the stores and in the shops and other places of work in this country, trying to make an honest living and pay to their Government the taxes with which to maintain and operate the affairs of government. That is what the average man is doing, and he is asking that the man in public office render the same sort of public service for his pay and compensation that the average man has to render in his private capacity.

The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] yesterday made a very happy and excellent statement of what the people of this country desire. I think it is no accident, Mr. President, that only last week in one of the Gallup polls on a question involving issues connected with this type of legislation 77 percent of those interviewed voted in favor of such legislation. The people of America—the average men and women—do not believe in a public employee taking time off from his duties to attempt to run the political affairs of the country. They are tired of it, as the Senator from Kentucky said.

Mr. President, I must hasten along; the subject is broad and there is so much which may be said about it that one could speak for hours and hours and yet not cover it. But I did say that I was not ashamed of the company I keep in sponsoring this type of legislation.

I am a Democrat, Mr. President; I have always been a Democrat. When I first began my experiences in politics as a young man and became more or less active in the Democratic party, it was the minority party, both in the State and in the Nation. We had no patronage to give out; we had no jobs. We went before the people basing our claims for recognition upon the principles enunciated by our party during the years; and what has our party said? I have before me the Democratic pronouncements since 1872 on this subject. I have the words of Grover Cleveland, of Woodrow Wilson, and of the other great Democrats on this subject. In 1872 our party said, among other things, and I shall quote only part of it:

> Honesty, capacity, and fidelity constitute the only valid claim to public employment; that the offices of the Government cease to be a matter of arbitrary favoritism and patronage; and that public station become again a post of honor.

In 1892—I am skipping several others, but in every year the same general declaration will be found—this declaration was made:

> Public office is a public trust.

How many Democrats have stood on the platform and proclaimed that doctrine—"public office is a public trust"?—

> We reaffirm the declaration of the Democratic National Convention of 1876 for the reform of the civil service, and we call for the honest enforcement of all laws regulating the same. The nomination of a President—

And this is what I want Democrats to listen to—

> as in the recent Republican convention, by delegations composed largely of his appointees, holding office at his pleasure, is a scandalous satire upon free, popular institutions, and a startling illustration of the methods by which a President may gratify his ambition. We denounce a policy under which Federal officeholders usurp control of party conventions in the State, and we pledge the Democratic Party to the reform of these and all other abuses which threaten individual liberty and local self-government.

In 1924—

> We pledge the Democratic Party faithfully to comply with the spirit as well as the regulation of civil service; to extend its provisions to internal-revenue offices and to other employees of the Government not in executive positions.

That is what we pledged in 1924.

Again, as late as 1936 our party made the same declaration, in which we pledged ourselves to place under the civil service all the employees of the Government except policy-making officials.

Our party has proclaimed over the years, in far more vigorous and more strenuous language than mine, the principles incorporated in the act which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] would repeal.

Mr. President, I could say many, many other things on this subject. I have said what I have, not discussing the bill itself at this time, but only discussing the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, giving something of my own philosophy of government, because I cannot believe that the Senate of the United States, having only last summer taken this short step, will now repeal that step and go backward to the spoils system.

Mr. President, I want to be perfectly plain and sincere. The Senator from Arkansas said something about being misled into voting for this bill. I want him to know exactly what the bill provides, as he does know what section 9 provides. I want every Senator to know what it provides. I want all Senators to know what is being done when they vote for or against the amendments offered by the Senator from Arkansas. It is not a personal matter with me. I want the Senate to speak out boldly and frankly this day, if you please, and, if it so determines, say to the people of America, "We are going back boldly to the spoils system and everything it portends. We are going to undo all that we tried to do last summer." If that be the will and judgment of Senators of the United States, it shall be my will and judgment until I can present another bill on the subject.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, while the able Senator from New Mexico is on his feet, I am wondering if he fully realizes the import of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

If the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas should prevail, of course, it would practically set aside the effective part of the law which has deservedly brought to the able Senator from New Mexico so much renown and so much fame. I am wondering if the able Senator from New Mexico, in fostering the pending bill, has not lost sight of his own great measure which he put through last summer, in that he is now about to extend it to a point where its very enemies are willing to accept it. That seems to be the program as I read it at this time. I am wondering if the Senator has given thought to that subject.

Mr. HATCH. I do not so understand the situation; and if the enemies of that for which I am working are willing to accept it, I certainly want to look at it most carefully.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think it would be well for the Senator to look over some interviews and statements made in the not-far-distant past by those who were not at all favorable to the Senator's bill last summer.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator for the suggestion.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I do not want to delay a vote on the amendment proposed by myself yesterday, and I shall not delay a vote; but, in view of the fact that I have sponsored the amendment, I desire to take 4 or 5 minutes to acknowledge again my appreciation of the honesty, fearlessness, and sincerity of purpose of the Senator from New Mexico; and I extend to him my sincere sympathy in his misunderstanding and misconception of what he has wrought.

The question was asked by the distinguished Senator, "Where was the Senator from Arkansas on the memorable night of June 2, 1938, when it was sought to protect the W. P. A. worker from the coercion of those above him?" I do not care to rehash all of the things that occurred on that night; but a mere perfunctory glance at the RECORD will show that the Senator from Arkansas was here and voted with the Senator from New Mexico to attain that very laudable objective.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator recall where he was when the real test came in the Senate on the motion to reconsider?

Mr. MILLER. To reconsider the amendment of June 2? I presume I was here.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator look at the RECORD and refresh his memory?

Mr. MILLER. I shall be very glad to look at it; but, be that as it may, I have no apology to make to anybody at any time, I hope, because of the attitude I may take here in the support of measures in accordance with the information I may possess at the time.

The Senator from New Mexico is in error if he has persuaded himself to think that any Senator or any Member of the House of Representatives or any other American citizen wants to coerce any man who is on W. P. A., or any other laborer. That is entirely beside the question. I do not want the Senate to be carried away by an argument that is not germane to the issue. The only issue at this time on the amendment proposed by myself is whether or not we will prevent certain employees—and I say little employees, I say certain men—from exercising the rights of citizenship, and then at the same time give to the very men who were inveighed against by Thomas Jefferson the right to go to the party conventions and dictate to them, dictate the policies of the Democratic Party, and write the platform of the Democratic Party.

Who ever heard of an insignificant Government employee writing a platform of the Democratic Party? Who was the man to whom Thomas Jefferson referred in the document read by the Senator? It was not the man for whom I am speaking; it was the man the Senator has excluded from the bill. It was the man who is dictating the policies of the Government; and dictating, if you please, the policies of the political parties.

What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If we are to make this law applicable, let us make it applicable to the heads and to the assistant heads of the departments. They are the ones who have been causing the trouble.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. In line with the Senator's present thought, if that was his purpose, why did he not present an amendment to strike out that portion of the act making the exemption?

Mr. MILLER. There is a very good reason why I did not present it. It was because I was dealing with one particular subject; and section 2 of the law, which is not interfered with by my amendment, takes care of that as well as it might be done.

We hear talk about Thomas Jefferson and about the significance of the time when this amendment is offered. If there is any significance in the time when the amendment is offered I am responsible for it. I gave no thought to the time when the bill should come up. I do not guide the policies of the Senate. I am not consulted by the leadership of this body as to when a bill shall come up or when it shall not come up. I have not served here long enough, and I am not a man of sufficient ability and experience to justify consultation along those lines. So I had no other chance to bring the amendment before the Senate until this opportunity presented itself.

Mr. President, I stated awhile ago that I did not intend to discuss the bill further. I appreciate the hearing the Senate gave me yesterday afternoon when I undertook, in my way, to analyze the Hatch Act. I analyzed it then, and there has been no change in my view about the Hatch Act. The Senator from New Mexico was evidently satisfied with the analysis I gave of the Hatch Act.

The only thing this amendment will do—and I hope the Senate may vote on it now, unless other Senators desire to discuss it—will be to repeal section 9 of the original Hatch Act and substitute the repealing clause for the part of section 3 of the pending bill printed in italics. That is the question squarely put, and I accept the challenge of the Senator from New Mexico when he says that he would like to have the issue met squarely. I would, too, because I believe the Senate knows the issue. I believe the Senate is advised as to what the provisions of the original Hatch Act are. I know that the motives of Senators are pure, and those who may disagree with the Senator from New Mexico nevertheless are motivated by the same sincerity of purpose and the same patriotism and the same love for this Government and its democratic processes which animate the able Senator from New Mexico. There can be no dispute about that. There should not be any argument. There should not be any heat, as the saying is. We should look at the matter dispassionately.

Mr. President, I again wish to propound a question to the Senate, and again refer to the document of Thomas Jefferson and the historical statement which was read by the Senator, which inveighed against the control of Democratic conventions. I am trying to prevent that very thing. But if section 9 remains in the act it will not be prevented, and the Democratic convention and all other conventions will be controlled by heads of departments and assistant heads of departments, by Cabinet officers, and by others who are under no restriction at all. Yet the man who pushes a wheelbarrow, the engineer, the janitor, the clerk, the stenographer, and others, can only vote; they must not open their mouths; they must not exercise their right of citizenship. All I am asking by this amendment is that their rights be secured. That is why I want the issue presented squarely to the Senate, and I hope that the Senate will vote to adopt the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to the committee amendment.

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understand that we are to vote on what is known as the Miller amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the pending amendment is an amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], which is an amendment to perfect section 3.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have been debating in my mind whether I ought to express my views with regard to the Miller amendment and the measure to which it is offered. I wish to announce at the outset that I have no expectation that anything I say here will influence a single vote, and I do not care whether it influences a single vote or not; but I entertain certain views upon the subject of this legislation, and I do not think my position here proscribes my expression of those views when I entertain them.

The history of this legislation is familiar to nearly every Member of the Senate. It grew very largely out of accusations made and denied 2 or 3 years ago with respect to relief appropriations. The first time it was projected into the Senate was when the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] offered an amendment to a relief appropriation denying the right of persons who worked under W. P. A. and other relief projects to participate in the exercise of political rights. I opposed that amendment at the time, as the Senator from New Mexico will recall, and as the Senate knows, not because I desired that coercion should be exercised, not because I desired that those working on projects promulgated by the Government should be coerced or intimidated, not because I believed that those employed on such projects ought to be compelled or even requested to take part in or to donate toward the election of anyone, or the defeat of anyone who was a candidate for office; but I opposed that amendment then because it set up a special class among those who work for the Federal Government, and denied to them the rights exercised by every employee of every other form of government. Because I did not believe that a special class should be made of Federal employees, I voted against the amendment.

The Hatch bill became law. If it became law without proper discussion on the floor of the Senate, it was the fault of no one but the Senate itself. It is no excuse now for Senators to say that it was passed without debate, because they could have debated it had they wanted to. The bill was passed, as I recall, on the call of the calendar, and without debate. Any Senator could have objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Many Senators were present. They knew full well what the bill was, because the Senator from Nebraska rose and mentioned the bill and asked me to explain it briefly, which I did. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] also made a similar request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Am I not correct in stating it was passed on the call of the calendar?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; and no one objected.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was not taken up as a special order, and no Senator objected to its consideration.

Mr. HATCH. And it was passed with full knowledge of what was being done.

Mr. BARKLEY. There was no yea-and-nay vote on it, but that still was the fault of the Senate, because such a vote could have been had if a Senator had demanded it, and had received sufficient seconds to obtain it.

So the bill passed the Senate in the ordinary procedure in which Senate bills are frequently passed.

When the relief appropriation bill was under consideration a year or so ago, the Senator from New Mexico, I believe, offered an amendment to the bill practically embodying the principles involved in the Hatch bill, but his amendment then, as I recall, applied only to Federal employees, and on the floor of the Senate I offered an amendment to that amendment, placing the same restrictions on the employees of States when their compensation was in whole or in part paid out of the Treasury in Washington, and the Senator from New Mexico agreed to that amendment. It was adopted, but was stricken out later in conference.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the amendment which I offered to the relief bill was presented to the committee. The committee first adopted it as a committee amendment and then, as I recall, when it reached the floor the Senator from Kentucky offered it. I know that the Senator from Kentucky at all times was consistent in his contention that the law should apply to employees in the States.

Mr. BARKLEY. The only objection I had to the legislation in any form was that it was too narrow in its application and that it should extend to all Government employees, by whomsoever appointed, when their compensation was drawn from the Treasury of the United States.

The purpose of the pending bill is to accomplish that result. As I said yesterday, one or two provisions of the amendment of the Senate committee have disturbed me and still disturb me, but they have no relationship to the points I am now undertaking to make.

Mr. President, from the very beginning of the effort in this country to take appointments of Federal employees out of the spoils system and base such appointments on merit, there has been opposition. I know how natural it is that such opposition should exist. I do not proclaim myself better or worse than other men, and I am subject to the same inclinations, the same desires, and the same reactions.

I came into Congress as a new Member of the House under the Wilson administration. My term as a Member of the House of Representatives began on the 4th of March 1913. The Republicans had been in power ever since Cleveland's second term. All the offices were held by Republicans. Every postmaster in my congressional district was a Republican. Immediately clamor arose to discharge those Republicans and to put Democrats in their places, and with that I was in sympathy. Every time a vacancy occurred in a post office in my district, while I could recommend the appointment of only 1 person, there were anywhere from 15 to 20 applicants for the position.

Mr. President, I do not agree with the statements made some years ago by a distinguished Senator, whose name I do not now recall—it has been attributed to a number of Senators—that every time you appoint 1 man to office you make 14 enemies and 1 ingrate. I do not subscribe to that theory.

I wish to say that the men and women whom I have recommended and for whom I have secured appointments in my State, and in my congressional district, were loyal friends of mine, and have remained so, and I appreciate their loyalty and their friendship.

I do not believe that patronage is altogether a burden. It is a burden, but I do not think one makes an ingrate every time he has a man or woman appointed to office. The statement to which I referred was undoubtedly a wisecrack made by someone who was probably sore because the question of Federal patronage had to be submitted to him in any case.

Mr. President, during the first years of the Wilson administration, when I had only postmasterships to settle in my district, I was so bombarded and bedeviled when working on the problem of deciding among my friends, that I was almost completely disqualified for the duties for which my district sent me here, which was to legislate wisely for the benefit of its people. After all, when we sit down and think these things over in our own minds we are bound to admit that the people of our States do not send us here primarily to appoint men to jobs.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator think we had better attack this problem then from the proper standpoint, and take Senators out of the patronage business, instead of punishing people for taking part in politics?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have not seen any serious effort made on the part of anyone to take Senators out of the patronage business, and whenever such an attempt is made it may have my serious cooperation.

What I wish to emphasize is that, however much we may long for the power of appointment, however much we may seek to grasp it, however much we may oppose having it taken away from us, it is in effect a method by which our time and our attention is so consumed that we are almost disqualified for the performance of the real duties for which the people sent us to the Senate.

So far as I am concerned, I would welcome any legitimate, fundamental, and sound program which would make it possible for Senators to devote their time unreservedly to the legislation which comes before them and to the study and research that is necessary in order that they may understand the problems of government, rather than give so much of their attention necessarily, and without any power of escape, to the consideration of men for office within their own States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator can easily accomplish what he desires in this bill. The bill especially exempts from its terms Representatives and Senators. All the Senator has to do is to move to strike out the language with respect to Senators and Representatives. Then he would be amenable to the law, and if Senators were amenable to the law we would not appoint anyone to office. I think this is the best place in the world to make that provision.

Mr. BARKLEY. That would not relieve Senators. We could pass a law, I suppose, which would take away from Senators the right to recommend to any department the appointment of anyone, but we could not pass a law which would relieve us of our obligation to confirm or reject any nomination sent to the Senate by the President.

As I stated yesterday, I do not believe that a Senator, a Governor, a Representative, or any other elective officer ought to be denied the right, or ought to escape the obligation, of going before the people and giving an account of his stewardship, in order that they may pass upon his qualifications for reelection. I would not vote for any measure which denied to me, or to the Senator from Maryland, or to the Senator from Nevada, or to any other Senator, either the right or the obligation to lay his record before the people who have chosen him, in order that they may determine whether or not they desire to reelect him.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator recognizes that the thing about which he is now talking is the very reason for the exemption of Senators, Representatives, and policy-making officials, because there is a necessity for doing that which the Senator mentions.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think we underestimate the feeling of the rank and file of the people, who are not interested in office, but who are interested in good government. We sometimes overestimate the power and influence, the merits, and the rights of those whom we have been fortunate enough to put into office. They have no more rights than anyone else; and in order to hold a Government position it may be necessary now and then to surrender some rights which nonofficeholders enjoy.

Mr. President, I am for this bill. I am for it because it undertakes to place on the same footing all employees who draw their salaries from the Government of the United States. I do not think it is fair to tie every Federal employee to a tree and allow every State employee who draws his pay from Washington to roam at large over the wood lot, play politics, exercise his influence, and bring about intimidation or coercion in State highway departments, among old-age pensioners, or among those who are unemployed and who are looking to Washington and their State capitals for relief from unemployment.

We have a program of highway construction in which we require the States to match, dollar for dollar, all that we put up out of the Federal Treasury. Many of the employees appointed by State highway commissions draw half their pay out of the Treasury in Washington, and under the law as it now exists they are free, without restriction. They may not do a lick of work in any month or in any 6 months prior to a primary election or general election. They may devote all their time to political propaganda for someone who happens to have appointed them, and under the law as it now exists nothing can be done about it. They are free to do as they please, and yet every employee of the Federal Government is hog-tied—if I may use such an expression—so far as his political activities are concerned.

I am not one of those who is advocating the restoration of such activities and powers to Federal employees; but I believe the same restrictions, the same rules and regulations, and the same standards should be applied to State employees who draw any part of their pay from Washington.

We have passed an old-age pension law. One dollar is put up by the Federal Government for every dollar put up by the States, not only for pensions but for the expenses of administering the old-age pension law. Every old-age pension agent in every county in every State in the United States receives half of his or her compensation from the Treasury of the United States. If, under the Hatch Act, a deputy internal-revenue collector, a deputy United States marshal, a foreman on a W. P. A. program, or a foreman in a civilian conservation camp may not indulge in politics, may not engage in campaigns, may not accept any political or partisan appointment or responsibility, why should an old-age pension agent drawing 50 percent of his or her compensation out of the Treasury at Washington be permitted to roam at large under the direction of some power within a State which has brought about his or her appointment, and do the very things which our employees are not permitted to do? In my judgment, there is no reason for a separate standard for Federal employees and State employees.

That brings me to the amendment offered by my good friend from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER]. I exceedingly regret to find myself in disagreement with my friend from Arkansas, and I exceedingly regret to find myself in disagreement with my colleagues on the Democratic side, some of whom have asked me not to say a word in behalf of my position and the things in which I believe.

Mr. President, I try to be as diplomatic in the performance of my duties as any other Member of the Senate, but whenever the time comes when I must stifle my voice and not express my honest convictions because I happen to be majority leader of the Senate, I will call a conference of the Democratic Members of the Senate and tender my resignation as majority leader. I still entertain a few individual views which I have the right to express. I shall express them whenever I think it my duty to do so. I think it my duty to do so now.

This brings me to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator refers to persons receiving old-age assistance from the Federal Government, which provokes this question in my mind: Under the provisions of the pending measure, would a person receiving a pension be barred from participating in or holding office in any pension movement such as the Townsend movement?

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to have the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] answer that question.

Mr. HATCH. He certainly would not be. Such a person would not be barred from such activity. The bill applies only to officials and employees. Under no circumstances could it apply to the persons mentioned by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It would not apply to one receiving a pension?

Mr. HATCH. No. I am quite certain about that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that that is also my opinion. The bill would not apply to the beneficiaries of any pension law. They are entitled to those things as a matter of right and not because they have been appointed to office by someone in a higher office.

I was about to say that there is no Member of the Senate for whom I have more affectionate regard than for the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER]. As he knows, I have grown very fond of him personally since he has been in the Senate. He has grown on me as a legislator and as a statesman. I hope the people of Arkansas will have the good judgment to keep the Senator from Arkansas in the Senate as long as he wishes to remain and carry out what I believe to be his intentions with respect to making the people of Arkansas an acceptable legislator.

I address this remark to my colleagues on this side of the Chamber: The Hatch Act was enacted very largely by the votes and the attitude of Members on this side of the Chamber, although I do not mean by that remark to say that Members on the other side were not in sympathy with it and did not vote for it. They certainly did not object to it. However, the measure was sponsored on this side of the Chamber. I think it may be truthfully said that it was enacted very largely because of its sponsorship on this side of the Chamber and because of the votes which it received on this side of the Chamber.

The Hatch Act is now the law. It has been accepted by the people of the United States. I grant that there has been some grumbling among officeholders. Some of those who have been appointed in Kentucky on my own recommendation have grumbled at the restrictions placed on them by the Hatch Act. However, it is the law. It was enacted by Congress and signed by the President. It is one of the acts of this administration. If, on the eve of a Presidential election—and I ask my colleagues to ponder this—we are willing to weaken this law, the entire country will regard such action as an effort on our part to make it possible to do in our behalf in the coming election the very things which the Hatch law denounces and prohibits. No matter what our individual views may have been as to the wisdom of the act in the beginning, such action would be so interpreted by the country at large.

So far as I am concerned, I am not willing that the country shall interpret our action here in any such fashion. I am not willing that any vote of mine, or even my silence on the question, shall give excuse for the great body of independent voters in the United States—who are not interested in any appointments, and who care nothing about anything except honest, fair, and good government, in which their welfare is paramount to anybody's job—to be told, or to have any excuse for saying, that the Democratic Party, which put this law on the statute books, is now willing to retrace its steps, and march back down the hill in order that it may receive some advantage in the coming election.

I want my party to win in November, no matter who may be nominated to head the ticket. I want it to go before the country on its merits. I want it to go before the country on its record and its history, and on its proposals to relieve the conditions of the American people and solve their economic and social problems. I am not willing for my party to go before the country under the suspicion that it is trying to use the power of intimidation and coercion so as to compel some of its appointees to be a little more active than they otherwise might be, in order that we may gain a victory in the coming election. I doubt whether we could obtain one by such methods, but, if we could, it would be an unworthy victory on the part of a great political party that has had an unbroken history since the days of Thomas Jefferson.

For these reasons, and not intending to influence a single vote here, not being egotistical enough to believe that I can influence a single vote here, I felt it my duty to express these views as my reasons why I intend to vote against the Miller amendment and support the bill reported by the committee.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to the committee amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut has not been discussed. We have been discussing the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. I should like very much to have a vote first on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to proceed with the vote now on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. Would the Senator from Connecticut object to that?

Mr. DANAHER. I have no objection to following that procedure. I understand, however, and ask if I am not correct as a matter of parliamentary inquiry, that the next order of business would be on the pending amendment which was offered by me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that to be the situation.

Mr. DANAHER. I am perfectly willing to agree that the vote be taken on the so-called Miller amendment.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. McNARY, Mr. DAVIS, and other Senators asked for the yea and nays.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I desire to submit a question to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. What was the decision of the Chair in regard to the request for the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I should like to propound a question to the author of the amendment. Would the Senator give consideration to a division of the question involved in his amendment? I ask that question for the reason that I am desirous of voting to eliminate section 12 from the pending Hatch bill, but I am not desirous of voting to repeal section 9 of the present Hatch law. Under those circumstances, I do not see how I can do anything but vote "nay" on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. I believe the Senator would obtain greater support for the proposition which is about to be submitted to the Senate if such a division of the question were made. I therefore ask the Senator if he is not willing that a division be made so that we may vote separately on the proposition of repealing section 9 of the Hatch law and of eliminating section 12 of the pending bill?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I appreciate fully the desire of the Senator from Michigan, and, personally, I should like to accommodate him, but I cannot see that it would be advisable to divide the question in the amendment proposed by me, because if section 9 of the original law should be repealed, obviously there would be no necessity for section 12 of the pending bill. Therefore I do not see how I could agree to a division of the question.

SEVERAL SENATORS Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment, page 4, beginning in line 15, and extending to line 18 on page 7. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am not advised how he would vote, if present. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McNARY. The junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] is absent because of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. RUSSELL. I announce that my colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is unavoidably absent. I understand that if he were present and voting he would vote "nay."

Mr. TYDINGS. My colleague [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is unavoidably absent today. I am not advised how he would vote on this amendment.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] are detained on important public business.

I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Texas would vote "nay."

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] is detained in one of the Government departments.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 44, as follows:

So Mr. MILLER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], as modified, to the committee amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Does the parliamentary status now revert so that the pending question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask that the amendment, as modified, may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, as modified, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 6, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the period after the word "determination", and to insert the following, as modified:

Whereupon such officer or employee, or the appropriate State or local agency, or both, shall have the right to appeal from any such finding to the next term of the United States district court for the district in which such officer or employee shall reside; and the United States district courts shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such appeal, and all proceedings therein shall be had in the same manner as is provided for appeals taken under section 39 C, Public, No. 696, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, approved June 22, 1938 (U. S. C. Supp., title 11, sec. 67 C). No such officer or employee shall be dismissed as a result of such determination by said Commission and no loan or grant shall be withheld until said appeal shall be finally determined. Pending final determination of any such appeal, any such officer or employee previously found guilty of a violation of this section shall stand suspended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, as modified, to the committee amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am not at all averse to the idea of providing some method of appeal; but we have not had any opportunity to study the amendment the Senator from Connecticut has offered. To my mind, it complicates the situation to a great extent, and perhaps might seriously and injuriously affect the administration of the law, if the bill should become a law.

At this time I hope the amendment will be defeated. Possibly I can confer with the Senator and work out something over the evening recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, as modified, to the committee amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. MINTON. I ask for a division.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. I was on my feet asking for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All in favor of the amendment will rise and be counted. [A pause.] All opposed will rise. [A pause.] The amendment is rejected.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, what was the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask what was the count?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. May I ask what was the count?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it is not the practice to announce the count on a division.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am satisfied that the count was erroneous. The decision certainly was not in accordance with the will of the Senate. If we are to adjourn or recess now, I shall insist that we have a yea-and-nay vote tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to the yeas and nays on the amendment. I think many Senators do not really understand what the amendment is. It has been my purpose to move a recess because of other matters in which many Senators are interested, and they cannot be on the floor for the remainder of the afternoon.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before I waive any rights I may have I think we ought to have a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, if there be any doubt about the result.

I did not, from one reading, entirely catch the purport of the amendment. But, Mr. President, while having every confidence in the ability, integrity, and fairness of the particular Commission—the Civil Service Commission—anything constitutional or reasonable that will curb the arbitrary action of some Federal commissions, I desire to support. I want to see the day when lex shall be rex, and rex shall not be lex; in other words, when the law shall be the king, and not the king the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in order that Senators may study this amendment overnight—we shall have to take a recess in a few minutes, anyway—I suggest that the yeas and nays now be ordered on the amendment, if it is desired, and then I hope the Senate may take a recess until tomorrow.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If an agreement should be made in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky, would that preclude debate upon the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I may say that the reason why I voted against the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut on the division was that I had not had an opportunity to read the amendment or to hear any explanation of it, and I did not want to be put in the position of voting for such an amendment without knowing what it was. I think any matter of such importance should be debatable.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it is entirely possible that a conference would result in perfecting an amendment that would be entirely satisfactory all around.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest to the able leader that he obtain unanimous consent to vacate the decision of the Chair. Then the matter will stand open, and debate may continue on the amendment tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, some of us in the rear of the Chamber are unable to hear what is going on; but I should like to know if we back here correctly caught one expression—that there has been some sort of an agreement? Is an agreement pending?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the situation is this: The Chair declared the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut rejected. Upon that announcement the yeas and nays were asked for. I have suggested that in order that Senators may study the amendment between now and tomorrow the yeas and nays be ordered on it, which will not interfere with debate, and then that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow, and let Senators study the amendment. It is an important amendment, and I think many Senators really did not understand its scope. I have no objection to vacating the announcement of the Chair that the amendment was rejected, so that the matter may be open.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has asked unanimous consent that the decision of the Chair be vacated. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. I object.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object to vacating the decision of the Chair.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not see why the decision of the Chair has anything to do with the matter. We are now asking for the yeas and nays. The request for the yeas and nays properly came after the Chair decided, on a viva voce vote, that the amendment had been rejected. The next thing was the demand for the yeas and nays, which was made. Let us vote on that demand, and order the yeas and nays. That will not interfere with debate. We may debate the amendment all the rest of the week, if we want to. Then, I understand from the expression of the majority leader, a motion is to be made to adjourn or to recess until tomorrow; and that will leave the matter parliamentarily exactly where it belongs. We do not need to vacate any order of the Chair.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that it is too late to ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the rules, a demand for the yeas and nays must be made before the Chair announces the result of a vote; so, as a matter of fact, in this case the demand for the yeas and nays did come too late. In order that that may not operate to prejudice anybody, I ask unanimous consent that the decision of the Chair be vacated, so that Senators may study the amendment and we may have the yeas and nays on it tomorrow. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that there was no other purpose.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I must object to that request. I shall have no objection if the Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to have the yeas and nays, but I do object to vacating the decision of the Chair as to the division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon asked unanimous consent that the decision of the Chair be vacated, and the Chair started to put that question. That is the question now before the Senate; and some Senator wished to be heard on it.

Mr. BARKLEY. That request has been objected to by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. I repeated the request, and it was objected to by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. I think we may be able to work the matter out by tomorrow. I therefore move——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Before the Senator from Kentucky makes a motion to adjourn or recess, I ask unanimous consent to send to the desk an amendment and have it read and printed in the RECORD for consideration tomorrow.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama?

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed and to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amend section 9 of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, by striking out the words "take any active part" and insert in lieu thereof the following words: "shall engage in any offensive or pernicious activity."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation? If I understand correctly, the pending question is whether or not the decision of the Chair is to stand.

Mr. BARKLEY. The decision does stand, because the request that it be vacated was objected to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not like to do the discourteous thing, and I do not mean it discourteously, but may I be advised parliamentarily as to whether or not an appeal from the decision of the Chair is proper at this time?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. May I have a reply from the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; an appeal does not lie, because other business has intervened.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Chair rules that I cannot appeal from the decision of the Chair on the standing vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; it is too late.

Mr. BARKLEY and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am about to move that the Senate take a recess.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. In the hope that I might aid in this situation, I wish to make a motion to reconsider the vote. That motion is in order. I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, and I have a right, under the rules, to make a motion to reconsider.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Under his own statement the Senator is disqualified from making a motion to reconsider. I voted the other way, and I am trying to get recognition to make the same motion.

Mr. ASHURST. This is another demonstration that I do not know it all. [Laughter.]

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I move that the vote be reconsidered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, has anyone yet made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Chair declared the amendment lost?

Mr. NORRIS. I have tried to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there was so much commotion that the Chair has not been able to decide whether such a motion has been made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Nothing will be lost by the Senate's recessing until tomorrow, and therefore I move——

Mr. BANKHEAD. One moment; I desire recognition so that I may have leave to have my amendment presented.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was presented.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not hear the request put by the Chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator wants the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Notwithstanding all the confusion, is there objection to having the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama read?

Mr. McCARRAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for order. First, I want to know whether the Senator from Alabama got into the RECORD what he was trying to get in.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Chair stated that my request was granted.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. I send an amendment to the desk which I ask to have printed, to be available tomorrow morning when this matter is reconsidered. I might say that the amendment has been submitted to the Senator from New Mexico and is acceptable to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, March 7, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We have heard with our ears, O God, and our fathers have told us, what work Thou didst in their days in times of old. Turn us again, O God of Hosts, and cause Thy face to shine, and we shall be saved. Comfort the oppressed, feed the poor, and send the laboring conscience peace. For the glory of Thy name purge away our sins and deliver us; cause us to hear Thy loving kindness in the morning, and show us the way wherein we should walk. We pray that we may see in Calvary the wondrous light that makes men free, without which a fairer world cannot be built. We entreat Thee to help us so to live and labor that we shall leave the earth forever brighter. While the years come and go, may our memory stimulate faith, devotion, and goodness in the channels of public and private life. May we bequeath to the world the grand legacy of pure, useful living which age cannot wither, nor this priceless heirloom be destroyed. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the American people do not believe that any one man in America has been anointed by God to rule over them indefinitely. [Applause.]

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial by Mr. Raymond Clapper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, in recent days our attention has been called to criticisms made against the Federal Bureau of Investigation and in particular its Chief, Mr. J. Edgar Hoover. I trust we will have confidence in the Federal Bureau of Investigation until we see facts proved which would lead us to another conclusion. I feel that when the F. B. I. returns almost $8 for every dollar it spends, through collection of fines and the restoration of property, we, as Members of Congress, should think carefully before we hastily criticize such a great law-enforcement agency of the Federal Government.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. GARRETT] be excused for today and the remainder of the week on account of important business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the committees.

MOUNT M'KINLEY NATIONAL PARK, ALASKA

The Committee on the Territories was called.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Territories I call up the bill (H. R. 4868) to amend the act authorizing the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida calls up the bill H. R. 4868, and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] will kindly take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4868, with Mr. ROBERTSON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] for 1 hour, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES] for 1 hour.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes. The purpose of this bill is to permit the Department of the Interior to take over, develop, and operate or lease the tourist concessions in the Mount McKinley National Park. It is a good bill, and I trust that there will be no serious opposition to it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I was in Alaska in 1923, and I was told that the number of tourists who had gone into Mount McKinley National Park increased 50 percent in 1922 over the number who went there in 1921. We asked how many went in 1922 and were told that the number was six. Four went in in 1921.

Mr. GREEN. Yes; and the purpose of this bill is to give them facilities so that more can come in and enjoy this great place, which is a part of the United States. This park had some 2,000 visitors last season.

I yield 10 minutes to the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, the Mount McKinley National Park is unquestionably one of the greatest and one of the most majestic parks of the United States. Large in area, it is situated in the interior of Alaska. It can be reached—and this is an important point—in only one of two ways: First, by the Alaska Railroad; and, second, by air. Although Alaskan people travel extensively by air, the tourists who come to Alaska and who are principally the ones to visit the park, travel almost exclusively by the Alaska Railroad. So the park may be said, in a sense, to be an adjunct of the Alaska Railroad.

Many years ago, in accordance with the present custom of handling the national parks of the United States, a private concessionaire, called the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co., secured from the Department of the Interior a concession to operate the transportation and hotel facilities in Mount McKinley National Park, and that company has operated the facilities from the beginning of the term of the concession until the present time. The concession, however, expired about a year ago and was renewed for a period of only 1 year. At the same time the principal stockholder of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co., Mr. James L. Galen, died, and there is no one in the company who has the same energy and the same desire to carry on the business.

This is not my bill. It is proposed by the Secretary of the Interior. At the expiration of the concession of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co., and after the death of Mr. Galen, and in view of the fact that the concessionaire, or whoever operates the park, ought now to erect a hotel or lodge in the interior of the park near the base of Mount McKinley, which, as you know, is the highest mountain on the North American Continent, the Secretary of the Interior and the park officials, considering the fact that, as a practical matter, the park can only be reached by travel on the Alaska Railroad, decided that it would be to the advantage of everybody, particularly for the benefit of the tourists who visit the park, to have the Department of the Interior, through the Alaska Railroad, take over the transportation facilities in Mount McKinley National Park, and buy out the property and equities of the present company which has operated up until the present time.

Now, that is all there is to the bill. I do not know, and nobody can tell until an appraisal has been made, just what the property and equities of the present concessionaire will amount to. I think it was estimated in the hearings that it would be about $30,000. I do not know what the amount is. I do know, however, because I have a general familiarity with many of the things that go on there, that the concessionaire company lost money year after year for a great many years until the last 3 or 4 years. Beginning 4 years ago, as I recall, the concessionaire showed a balance on the right side of the ledger, and since then the concessionaire has made money every year out of operating the transportation facilities in the park.

At the present time that operation is a profitable venture and I have no doubt—and I state this seriously, because I know the Members of the House are concerned to know whether the Government is going to take over a business that will lose money—I have not the slightest doubt in the world that from this time on the operation of the facilities in the Mount McKinley National Park will show a profit every year. Therefore, it seems to me it is a good buy for the Government. It is a good deal for the Government to take over and operate these facilities. It is not a question of somebody unloading on the Government, to use the ordinary term. The concessionaire has not asked and does not ask for the passage of this bill. I believe they would prefer to go on if they could have their concession extended, and do the best they can to furnish facilities in the future, and I believe they would find the operation profitable.

This bill is submitted by the Department of the Interior with the idea of taking over the business because, in the first place, it will be a profitable business, and in the second place, because it really fits in with the operation of the Alaska Railroad. A considerable part of the revenues of the Alaska Railroad are obtained from passenger traffic, from the transportation of tourists. Tourists can get into the park and out of the park, as a practical matter, only by the railroad. Therefore, it would seem to be good business for the Government to take over the operation of the facilities in the park and thus operate those facilities in conjunction with the operation of the Alaska Railroad.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. Is there any limitation in the bill on the factors that would enter into the amount to be fixed by the Government in payment? Is the fact that it is making a profit to be taken into consideration? Are past losses to be taken into consideration?

Mr. DIMOND. I shall read the language of the bill:

> The President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, through such agency or agencies as he may designate, to construct, reconstruct, maintain, and operate hotels, lodges, and other structures and appurtenances incident thereto—

Now we come to the language concerning which the gentleman from Virginia inquired—> to purchase, upon such terms as he may deem proper, the personal property, structures, and buildings of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. that are operated and used in said park under contract authorization by the Department of the Interior, and the equities of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. in the business developed and conducted in connection therewith.

The word "equities," in my judgment, ought to entitle the operators to something more than the bare value of the property that they have now. I am told by one of the stockholders of the company at the present time that the company has invested in this business, over and above all of the profits that have been made in the last 3 or 4 years, a sum in excess of $100,000.

I know that the bare physical value of the Alaska property will not nearly approach $100,000. I am sure in my own mind that the concessionaires are the ones who are going to take a loss out of this measure and that the Government is the one who is going to gain if the bill is passed. It was for that reason that I did not introduce the bill and would not introduce it; but I do say that it is good legislation for the Government.

There is not the slightest danger that the Alaska Railroad or the Government of the United States can suffer any loss by the passage of this measure. There is, in my judgment, real danger that the stockholders of the company which has the present concession for furnishing transportation facilities in the park will not receive what they are justly entitled to have. They are the ones who are running all of the risk involved in the passage of this bill. Through their enterprise and spirit of business adventure they have built up what is now a profitable business. But the term of their concession has expired, and the agency of the Government with which they deal has decided that the Government ought to take over the business. There is nothing for the concessionaires to do but acquiesce in whatever terms are offered by the Government even if those terms should be unjust.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman inform the House as to whether the Government has any similar projects in any other national park?

Mr. DIMOND. So far as I am aware, the Government has no similar project in any of the other national parks; and, insofar as I know, the Government does not intend to take over the operation of the facilities in any other national park. I have not, of course, full knowledge upon the latter question. Like many other people, I do not believe in the Government's going into business indiscriminately. The only reason I feel that this is a proper activity for the Government to engage in is because the Government owns the Alaska Railroad, which furnishes the only ready access to the park, and it would certainly be to the advantage of everybody, particularly the public, if the Government operated the facilities in the park in connection with the operation of the Alaska Railroad.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman such additional time as he may need.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I wish to ask the Delegate from Alaska about the hotel already constructed in Mount McKinley National Park. It is contemplated that the hotel will be rebuilt farther up the mountain. How much money is going to be asked to build another hotel?

Mr. DIMOND. Answering the inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding, from the letter of the Secretary of the Interior commenting on the bill, that no money will be asked out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of constructing a hotel or any other facility in Mount McKinley National Park. In this connection I invite the gentleman's attention to the last paragraph of the Secretary's letter, which appears on page 20 of the report on the bill:

> I have been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there would be no objection by that Bureau to the presentation of this report to the Congress "with the understanding that the enactment of the proposed legislation would not contemplate an appropriation in any amount from the general fund of the Treasury."

That answers the gentleman's question, I believe, that the enactment of the proposed legislation does not contemplate the appropriation of any amount of money from the Treasury.

Mr. RICH. Where are they going to get the money with which to build the hotel?

Mr. DIMOND. The only source from which any money can be obtained for any construction in the park is from the Alaska Railroad.

Mr. RICH. We make annual appropriations for the Alaska Railroad. Are they going to take funds they should use for the operation of the railroad for the purpose of building a hotel? We pour money into the railroad and then the railroad will use its earnings to build the hotel; is that it?

Mr. DIMOND. I invite the gentleman's attention to the fact that for the last 2 years Congress has made no appropriation out of the Treasury for the Alaska Railroad for any purpose.

Mr. RICH. But we are asked in the current Interior Department bill to make an appropriation to build new bridges, buy new equipment, new rolling stock, to build new terminals. We have not appropriated that money. Does the gentleman think it proper that the railroad should use its income for the purpose of building a hotel rather than to pay for these things the Government is asked to furnish? If we are going to put the Government into a business venture, it certainly is going to take money out of the Treasury.

Mr. DIMOND. From my reading of this report, Mr. Chairman, I think that no money can come out of the Treasury for that purpose.

Mr. RICH. It is my observation that when we get reports that the sponsors of certain projects do not want any money out of the Treasury they always find some way to go around Robin Hood's barn and finally get money out of the Treasury. It is coming eventually. The gentleman knows and I know that that is going to be the case with this hotel.

Mr. DIMOND. So far as I know, Mr. Chairman, that is not the case here.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. CROWE. Can the gentleman advise us the extent of the tourist trade to this hotel? Does the Delegate from Alaska have in mind the number of tourists who visited the park last year?

Mr. DIMOND. I have not the exact figures at this time, but I know that the number of tourists in the park last year, and also year before last, was well above a thousand.

Mr. CROWE. Can the gentleman be a little more definite?

Mr. DIMOND. It was above 1,000. I will try to supply the exact figures for the RECORD. To the best of my recollection it was around 1,400 for 1938. For 1939 I understand that more than 2,200 people visited the park.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DIMOND. Certainly.

Mr. CROWE. Concerning money that has been asked for the improvement of the Alaska Railroad, is it not a fact that the roadbed was not completed when originally built, that some of the bridges were put in of timber which has decayed to a great extent and caused continuous costly repairs year after year? The amount of money that has now been asked is to make these bridges permanent, as they should have been made in the first place. Am I right or wrong?

Mr. DIMOND. The gentleman is entirely right. When Congress ceased appropriating money for the construction of the Alaska Railroad, I am informed by competent engineers that the construction was really only about 75 percent completed. For many years it was necessary for Congress to appropriate additional sums upon the theory they were used for the operation of the railroad, but these funds really went into capital investment. This construction has not been completed up to the present time. Therefore, I have been obliged to go before the Appropriations Committee every year since I became a Member of this body and ask the committee to appropriate enough money to complete the construction of the Alaska Railroad, because I am satisfied when that is done we will never be obliged to appeal to anybody for money to operate that railroad. I feel confident it can be operated at a profit from that time on.

Mr. CROWE. Is not the matter of the hotel and facilities of the company operating in Mount McKinley National Park entirely different from what we find in any park in the United States or on the mainland, in that the Government owns this railroad, it owns the transportation facilities to and from the park, and is it not reasonable for the Federal Government to rightly own the hotels and the transportation facilities to and from the park and secure what profit, if any, there is to be derived from those operations?

Mr. DIMOND. The gentleman is entirely right; besides, I invite the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the period of pioneering has passed, so far as the operation of these facilities are concerned. The losses of such operation have been pocketed during the pioneer days by a private company and the Government can now look forward to a profitable operation. This is a unique situation, as the gentleman has indicated, because the Government owns the Alaska Railroad. The park, of course, is Government owned, and it seems absurd that the Government should not operate the park facilities, particularly when it can do so at a profit.

Mr. CROWE. I think the gentleman from Alaska has made a fine statement. He is in touch with the situation better than any other Member of the House; therefore, his word should have great weight in this body. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON].

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to add a great deal to what the distinguished Delegate from Alaska said in reference to this bill. I introduced it. I want to answer the gentleman from Minnesota when he asked whether or not this authority has been requested for any other national park in the United States. It has not, and under no conceivable circumstances will such authorization be made. As has been pointed out, there is a unique situation existing in Alaska. Tourists that come to Alaska go up there, get on the Government railroad, and end up at Mount McKinley Park. When they reach there they are taken care of at a hotel. We already have invested about $350,000 in facilities in this park, and when I say "we" I mean the Government. After they get there, if they want to go around the park and see some of the beauties of that region, this private concessionaire takes them around, but the cost has been excessive. I think Members of Congress who were up there last summer complained to me when they got back to Seattle about the cost. It runs to around $30 or $35. The tourists are taken up to a camp at the foot of the mountain, and there they live in tents.

All we are trying to do is allow the Alaska Railroad, which brings people there and houses them at the entrance to the park, the right to take these tourists in busses around the park, erect some cabins or a shelter over there so that the tourists may be comfortable when they get up to the upper reaches of the park, where at this time there are only some tents. The situation is unique. It does not put the Government in business any more than the Government is in business now in Mount McKinley National Park.

It adds only to the existing facilities. This year we expect double or triple the number of tourists that have been going there for the past few years. On account of the situation abroad people are traveling in America. From January to May the park is closed and it is necessary that this bill be passed now so that they may get supplies and materials up there to run this operation. It is a rather unusual bill, but when you look at the circumstances involved you will see there is nothing wrong with it and that this is the only possible solution we have to the problem now existing in Mount McKinley National Park. The Government has invested this money, the facilities are there, and we bring our citizens up there, show them the Government investment, take them on a Government railroad, house them in Government hotels, and when we take them around to see this grand, glorious park and its beauties, we charge them excessive rates. We take them up to some tents in the upper reaches of the park. I think this is the only way to solve the problem.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I note this bill authorizes the Government to purchase the personal property, structures, and buildings of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. I would like to find out what the approximate cost of this private property will be?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I do not know the approximate cost, but I think it will run around $30,000 or $40,000. The personal property of the concessionaire consists really of some busses and I think a little station at the railroad and some tents up there where they take the people. That is all it amounts to.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I am rather reluctant to oppose any measure in which the Delegate from Alaska, our good friend the gentleman from Alaska [ANTHONY DIMOND], professes a deep and abiding interest. He is a grand person; he is a splendid Representative, and he has done an extremely good job for the people of Alaska. But I feel somehow that our personal feelings for him must be transcended by considerations of legislative integrity and procedure, so I shall find it necessary to oppose the pending bill.

The purpose, of course, is obvious. We take over the property now owned by a concessionaire, who has a concession which has been granted by the National Park Service, and put the Government into the business of operating a hotel and incidental structures, fixtures, busses, automobiles, and so forth.

Let me call your attention to a very ingenious provision in this bill. It is definitely subject to a point of order, and as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I shall have to make that point. There is a proviso starting on the bottom of page 2 which states:

That out of the revenues from and the appropriations for the Alaska Railroad, there is authorized to be used such amount thereof as may be necessary for the purchase of the property of the Mount McKinley Tourist and Transportation Co.

There is not the slightest indication as to how much that amount will be.

Secondly, you are taking this amount out of the Treasury of the Alaska Railroad, owned and operated by the Government, which is operating at a deficit today. Colonel Ohlson, who is the Government director for the Alaska Railroad, appeared before the Committee on Interior Appropriations and indicated that the railroad had a deficit in 1937 of $185,000, that in 1938 they had a deficit of $58,206, and in 1940 they anticipate a very modest profit, but that is rather speculative. But now you would authorize by a provision in this bill which is definitely subject to a point of order that they can reach into the treasury of the Alaska Railroad, now operating at a deficit, for the purpose of purchasing these facilities and operating them. I say that that simply is not good business.

The joker is that it is a back-door approach to the Federal Treasury, because this provision states—

That out of the revenues from and the appropriations for the Alaska Railroad—

If there is an additional deficit, it merely means that it will be laid on the doorstep of Congress and they will submit to us that they need additional funds, and we will be paying for it in an indirect way. This is definitely the import and the meaning of this language in the bill, and no other construction can be placed on it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. A few years ago a similar bill was brought in to buy an old tram road out north of Nome, Alaska. I stayed here during the Christmas holidays and held hearings on it and found that it would have cost the Government $600,000. Nobody lived out there. There were not a dozen families within reach of it.

We found out that it was just to gratify a few fellows, down in California, who owned an old, dead gold mine out there.

My distinguished friend who passed away a short time ago, Hon. Cassius Dowell, was with me in 1923 when we went into the McKinley National Park. They told us the traffic in that park had increased in 1922 50 percent over what it was in 1921. Someone asked them how many people were in the park in 1922 and they said six. There were only four persons went in in 1921.

I believe before making appropriations for a purpose such as this we ought to have it in black and white just what you are doing.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me supplement what the gentleman from Mississippi has said by stating that we now have invested in the Alaska Railroad $73,000,000. I recognize that there must be transportation facilities up there, but is that any reason why we should go into the business of operating a hotel and busses and other items at the expense of the taxpayer and for the enjoyment of a few people who may go up to visit McKinley National Park?

That is not the whole story. Look on page 2 of this bill and you will find there ingenious language. I do not know who drew this bill, but they are permanently putting us in the business of operating busses without regard for the restrictions in law. Let me read you this language on page 2:

To purchase or otherwise acquire motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and all necessary fixtures and equipment, and to operate, repair, recondition, and maintain the same in order to carry out the purpose of this act, notwithstanding the restrictions now or hereafter imposed by law with regard to the purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles.

In other words, once you put them in business they can acquire, they can sell, and they can trade, along with the incidental facilities, and under this language they may do so without any restriction that may have been imposed by existing law or any law passed hereafter. It is a kind of an imposition on the Congress to tie its hands in that fashion. Certainly I am not going along with a proposal of that kind.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. The committee adopted an amendment, inserting after the word "operate," the words "to sell." They may sell, if desired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; but you are projecting them into business with the word "hereafter" included in the bill which you present to the Committee today, in order to make it a permanent operating affair, without giving the Congress a chance to look into it properly from time to time.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, the gentleman realizes that it is the purpose to have them operate these busses permanently. The gentleman is talking about three old busses that they run around the park. They have to be able to trade them in and maintain them and repair them.

The gentleman from Mississippi spoke about 4 or 6 people visiting the park. We had over 1,400 visitors last year, and I expect that this year there will be 1,500, 1,600, or perhaps 2,000 visitors.

This is an operation involving $25,000 or $30,000. The way it is run now it is run badly. The concessionaires are not going to make any money. Of course, we want to put the Government in. That is the purpose. It is the only thing you can do.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Why did not the gentleman say so in his bill? All the gentleman says in his bill is that from the appropriations and revenues of the Alaska Railroad they can use whatever may be necessary, and it is not limited to three old busses. It will be whatever some gentleman who runs this show will determine to be necessary, both as to new busses and incidental equipment, hotels, lodging houses, and so forth.

The only person who shall determine what is necessary is the agency or person designated under the authority in this bill by the President of the United States, and the sky is the limit. You reach into the deficit of a railroad and get a back-door approach to the Treasury and then later on come and say, "Now, gentlemen of the Congress, here is what we need in order to reimburse this deficiency in the Alaska Railroad treasury because we have reached in and taken out money for the operation of the facilities in McKinley National Park." This is the only construction you can place on the language in the bill and it is terribly poor legislation.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I will answer his question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, this is to be part of the Alaska Railroad transportation system, and we want the funds that are to be used for operating these busses, or, if they build a couple of cabins up there, to be a part of the Alaska Railroad system.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am reluctant to project this Government into the hotel business. The Interior appropriation bill, which will be coming on directly for reading under the 5-minute rule, contains an item of expense for the operation of Government House down in the Virgin Islands. Rex Tugwell and others went down there in order to attract the tourist trade, but we are running at a loss, and so we pay for ice and janitor service and electricity out of Federal funds to operate a hotel in the Virgin Islands.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The Alaska Railroad is already running in the red, with a deficit, I would say, of at least $2,000,000 a year—more than that if you allow for interest and depreciation. We spent $57,000,000 building that road in the beginning. It is 467 miles long. There are not 10,000 people of all kinds, color, size, and varieties living within 500 miles of it in every direction. It has been a dead loss ever since it was built. It ought to be taken up and there ought to be a motor line in its place. To go out and buy a lot of old, dead property that we know is a dead loss, merely to gratify somebody who has some vested investment, I say that Congress ought to be very careful before it goes any further in that direction.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that if this bill passes I am going to suggest we call this hotel "Hotel Deficit"—that will end it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, we have already spent $350,000 building a hotel at this spot or in this Territory, and the hotel revenues last year amounted to something like $56,000, and the expenses, as near as I can figure them from the hearings on the Interior Department bill, amounted to $146,000. Now, that is good business. You know we have some folks in the House who run hotels. I wonder how long they would run their hotels in that way.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. Can the gentleman from New York inform hotel owners why we go to Alaska for the Government to buy a hotel? There are plenty of good hotels in the big, broad United States of America that are not paying their way, and they are better than this one up there. Why should not the Government go into the hotel business nearer home than Alaska if it is going into the business at all?

Mr. TABER. The gentleman means that he thinks we ought to bail out the fellows who are already in rather than put the Government into the business of operating new hotels?

Mr. TREADWAY. I should be inclined to follow that course. There are gentlemen here from the great vacation State of Maine, and I happened to be in Maine a year or so ago and saw a very beautiful hotel being torn down on Mount Kineo, on Moosehead Lake, because it could not operate to financial advantage. Now, Kineo and Moosehead Lake are very much more accessible to the tourist people of the United States of America than Mount McKinley Park, and it seems to me that we would better begin nearer home before investing our Government money in Alaska. Of course, as a last resort, if eventually every hotel is bought up by the United States that is not profitable in the United States, then it might be all right to go to Alaska, but until we reach that situation I do not approve of it.

Mr. TABER. It appears that we had six visitors to this park who might be available as customers at this hotel. Does not the gentleman think that for six visitors we ought to build a hotel that will cost three or four hundred thousand dollars? Think of it! Six visitors!

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman has asked me a serious question, I would say that he is too much of a Yankee, as I am, to approve of that sort of financial operation on the part of the United States Government.

Mr. TABER. Then ought there not to be at least one hotel for each visitor?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, the gentleman is not really stating the facts.

Mr. TABER. Oh, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] just told us about the facts, and I am sure the gentleman knew what he was talking about.

Mr. MAGNUSON. But he was talking about 1921. Further, this bill does not provide for building a hotel.

Mr. TABER. But it does.

Mr. MAGNUSON. We want to buy a few tents. They have been housing the people up there in tents and we want to put up a shelter over their heads; that is all.

Mr. TABER. So that I may inform the gentleman about his own bill, I shall read a couple of lines from the bill:

> That in order to provide for the adequate housing, feeding, and transportation of the visiting public and residents of Mount McKinley National Park in Alaska, the President of the United State be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered * * * to construct, reconstruct, maintain, and operate hotels, lodges, and other structures.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The New Deal at a cost of about $60,000 per family, to our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury, has sent several hundred strawberry growers into the Matanuska Valley in Alaska.

Mr. TABER. I do not know. I may not be correctly informed, but I had heard that those folks had all graduated to the relief rolls. Is not that correct?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. These strawberry farmers will be in a position to tour this national park and perhaps will need hotel facilities which are provided at the expense of the taxpayers under this bill. That is sound New Deal doctrine.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida, chairman of the committee.

Mr. GREEN. It would be better business for the Government to cause the investment we now have there to pay greater dividends, or at least help to get out of the red. If the gentleman had an automobile and had lost one wheel off the car, would he not be willing to acquire an additional wheel in order to run the automobile?

It seems to me that about this whole thing we are going somewhat far afield. The Government owns the railroad, and the Government can better make the railroad pay if it can control this bit of property.

Mr. TABER. I think I can answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. GREEN. It is only a matter of business prudence that we make this business pay there in order to help the railroad.

Mr. TABER. I think I can answer that question. Here we have a fellow who has been running this business at a loss and he wants us to bail him out.

Mr. GREEN. Oh, no; it is a paying business.

Mr. TABER. One of these station wagons is plenty good enough for that sort of service. The problem is to buy out or to bail out this fellow who has been operating a bus line, and it is probably going to cost $30,000 or $40,000. They would not need any authorization if they were going to do things on a moderate scale.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am astonished that the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN], chairman of the Committee on the Territories, should appear here advocating the purchase of a hotel in Alaska, because I have toured his fine State and enjoy going down there and would like to be there now; and I can call the gentleman's attention to numerous hotels in his State standing idle, with windows out of them in many instances. People who have sunk their money in these booms would be only too glad to have the properties bought by the Federal Government under the leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Florida without his going up to Alaska and spending Federal money there to buy a hotel.

Mr. TABER. Then the gentleman thinks we ought to bail out those people in Florida?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the gentleman ought to bail out his own people first instead of going up to Alaska.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. It seems to me that we bailed out the reindeer people in Alaska for around $1,000,000 last year. That was a private-business project that was started and did not pay.

Now, the Alaskan Railroad has not been paying. We have $57,000,000 of the taxpayers' money in it. It never would have been constructed, and everybody knows it, if the Congress had sent a committee up there to investigate before we built it. We have the Richardson Highway, running right alongside it, which could do the work. My colleague on the other side [Mr. RANKIN] said there were few people within 200 miles. There are not 10,000 people within 200 miles of the entire Alaskan railroad and McKinley Park project. I do not blame the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], who hopes they will get some more tourists in Seattle. I do not blame the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND], who would like to have the Government go up there and develop Alaska, regardless of what it costs the taxpayers, but Congress is charged with a responsibility. I congratulate the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] on his courage in getting up here and making a fight. It is so easy to vote for these small projects, but remember how they grow.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to say to the membership of the House the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] was with me on that trip to Alaska and we made a thorough investigation of Alaska. The gentleman will bear me out in what I say about the tourist trade. In the first place, there is nothing in Mount McKinley Park except Mount McKinley. You can see it just as well from the train as if you were in the park. It looks just as well 50 miles away as if you were up close to it. The gentleman from Michigan was with me on that trip, and I will leave it to him if I am not giving you the facts.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The New Deal brethren spent $1,000,000 of the taxpayers' money to purchase reindeer in Alaska. They might want to establish a housing project for Santa Claus in Alaska under this bill. Should not an amendment be incorporated so that Uncle Sam can purchase a few sleighs and use these reindeer and sleighs to take the taxpayers for their sleigh ride? This would be a more economical transportation than that provided under this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. I understand since the Department of the Interior began monkeying with this reindeer business last year that the reindeer are dying off. I do not know whether it is because of their operations or not, but it seems to be the effect of their operations—a complete failure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. I do not see why we should object to the Government going into the hotel business. It has gone into practically all other kinds of business. Of course, one of the best planks in the splendid platform adopted by the Democratic Party in 1932 was:

> We pledge immediately to take the Government out of competition with private enterprise.

Instead, this administration has put the Federal Government into competition with all kinds of private enterprises. The Federal Government today is in the loan business, in the mortgage business. In fact, Uncle Sam at this hour is the biggest holder of bad mortgages of anyone on earth. We are in the building business; we are in the power business. If the administration has its way, we will soon get into the health business, because of the medicine men in the New Deal. We are in the insurance business. State socialism is here. Why not have Government ownership of everything?

Mr. TABER. Would the gentleman answer a question for me?

Mr. SHORT. I doubt if I could.

Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman think we ought to bail out everybody who goes into a business that is not profitable?

Mr. SHORT. Why, of course. Many of the best citizens in my district who used to be self-supporting and self-sustaining, today, before they will paint a barn or put a hinge on the gate or even build a chicken coop, sit down and write to me to see if they cannot get an appropriation or a grant from the Federal Government. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. One of the businesses the Federal Government went into was the cooperative tractor business at Battle Creek, Mich. It took $375,000 of the taxpayers' money and moved this plant to Arthurdale, W. Va., one of their resettlement projects. They threw out of work 360 men in doing that job. The plant was under production in Battle Creek, but after the New Dealers moved it to Arthurdale they never assembled a tractor, they never sold a tractor, and a few days ago the administration announced that the project had been abandoned. This venture in business cost a loss to the taxpayers of this country of at least $500,000.

Mr. TABER. Yes; and this would probably give them a chance to lose another $500,000. Of course, I suppose that the committee which brought out this bill would like to have the Government lose another $500,000.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] to this fact: I think the gentleman from Missouri is mistaken when he says that the party in power is violating its pledge that it intended to take the Government out of competition with private industry. The fact is that it has carried out that pledge, or is well on its way to carrying it out. It has destroyed all private industry, so, of course, there will be no competition by the Government with private industry. [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. If the Members of the House will refer to the hearings on the Interior Department appropriation bill, at page 976, they will see the interrogation by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] of Colonel Ohlson, who operates the Alaska Railroad. This is a question by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK]:

> You have received funds sufficient to take care of the Railroad this year?
> Colonel OHLSON. The past year we sustained a deficit of $58,206.35. However, if transportation for investment, for capital investment, in the amount of $40,115 was deducted, the deficit from operations would have been only $19,830.
> Mr. SCRUGHAM. How will the deficit be made up, if you are not asking the Treasury for any appropriation?
> Colonel OHLSON. From appropriated funds available last year.

So you can see the Alaska Railroad has been running in the red right along. They come here and ask the Federal Government to make appropriations to carry on the operation of the Railroad. That is where they are going to get the money to build this hotel.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I believe I should call attention to one or two other things. They told us that their deficit was only about $50,000, but if you study the figures on pages 981 to 983 of the Interior Department appropriation hearing, you will find that the deficit of the Alaska Railroad is $200,000, or only 4 times the amount the colonel told us.

It is perfectly apparent that this outfit wants to go ahead and build another hotel on top of the $350,000 outfit. Instead of being satisfied with ordinary Ford station wagons for transportation, something that would cost around $1,000 a vehicle, they want to spend $35,000 or $40,000. There is absolutely no limit to the amount of money they could spend, almost no limit to the amount of things that could be done. It is absolutely impossible for us to tell anything about them. The only way we can get any satisfaction out of it and protect the Treasury is to defeat the bill completely, get rid of it, and not load the Treasury up with a lot of other liabilities. I hope that when this bill comes up for consideration by the House that it will be thrown out. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK].

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the bill, H. R. 4868, offered by the gentleman from the State of Washington, as I believe Alaska is entitled to some consideration from our Government. We have taken out of Alaska millions and millions of dollars in gold, copper, furs, fish, and other things, but have put very little back insofar as improving Alaska, with the exception of building a railroad which, up to 1939, was not self-supporting. However, the manager of the Alaska Railroad, Colonel Ohlson, when he testified before the Interior Subcommittee on Appropriations, stated that they expected to have a profit for 1939.

I was up in Alaska last summer and visited Mount McKinley National Park. The Government owns the hotel close to the railroad station, which is operated by the Alaska Railroad. The Mount McKinley Transportation Co. operates the busses running into the park. It is about 65 miles from the hotel to camp 66, where you can get a good view of Mount McKinley if it is a clear day. The bus fare is $25. If one should go to Wander Lake, which is about 18 miles farther, it would cost $35. The Mount McKinley Transportation Co. went into business many years ago. In fact, they were the people that put McKinley Park on the map. They had a franchise which expired last year and are now operating on a temporary permit. It seems this company put quite a sum of money into the bus corporation and the building of lodges. Up to 2 or 3 years ago they received no return on their money. I understand that the last several years they have been making money, and it is now a good paying business. My understanding is that they do not want the Government to take over the operating of the busses as they feel they have a chance to get back some of the money they have invested in this undertaking.

I feel, however, that the hotel and transportation should be under one management, whether it is operated by the Government or a private concern. However, I feel that if the Government should take it over that they should pay the present corporation for their equipment and cabins, but not for their goodwill. The hotel which is near the entrance to the park cost around $300,000. It is nicely furnished and well managed. I understand they will have a profit for the year 1939. At the same time I feel that if they took over the Mount McKinley Transportation Co. they would have a greater profit and it would be good business to do so. Mount McKinley is a beautiful place to visit. It is a little different from the rest of our national parks. In our other national parks the animals are quite tame. Not so in Mount McKinley Park. You see real wildlife. You see wild bears, wolves, moose, and other wild animals as you drive through the park—also beautiful Alaskan wild flowers.

While at the hotel there were many tourists there. Many of them did not make the trip out to where they could see Mount McKinley because of the cost of the bus. I believe operating the busses with the hotel and railroad will improve the financial returns for our investment.

One of the previous speakers referred to the Matanuska Valley and said the people that went up there to develop it are now on relief. On my visit to Alaska last summer I visited the Matanuska Valley and called on a number of farmers. I was informed that about 30 percent of the people who first went up there were misfits and it was necessary to get rid of them, while about 70 percent remained and are making good. The farmers that I called on were very enthusiastic, very happy, and felt they would be able to pay back the Government for the farms that they had taken over. Many of those farmers were from Michigan, Minnesota, and Wisconsin, but not one of them was on relief. I found a very fine hospital, good schools, three churches, a cooperative market, and a fine canning industry. As I stated before, the people seemed very happy and satisfied. In fact, I met a couple of farmers who had at first been allotted 40 acres each and had taken over 40 additional acres, which gave them a total of 80 acres in all.

They are up there and are making good. They are good American citizens and are working hard to make a success of the opportunities being given them by the Government. They are pioneers. So, too, those people who started the bus line up at Mount McKinley Park are pioneers, but there is a chance now for them to make a little money after many years of losses. If the Government is to take it over, they should take it at a reasonable price.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, as far as our investment in Alaska is concerned, I feel that we should protect it by doing something to help Alaska. We have taken millions and millions of dollars out of there, but we do not want to put anything back. I am in favor of the passage of this bill not alone because of the people in Alaska but for the American people and the American taxpayers so they can save some of the investment that they have in the Alaska Railroad and the hotel. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, why this bill to build a Government hotel in Alaska? May I ask the gentleman who just spoke, the gentleman from New York, is there an Army post up there?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They are going to have an Army post and a Navy field up there.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is there an Army post and barracks up there now?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes. There are some men stationed at Fairbanks.

Mr. HOFFMAN. They are going to build a barracks?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not know. They are going to build a naval base. I want to say to the gentleman, I do not know why they built the hotel, but it is there, the same as in other of our national parks.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The point is this: If the Government has an Army barracks up there, that would be one thing to be considered.

Mr. GREEN. Yes; it has an Army barracks up there, and we are building a large air base there also.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then there is no reason why the Government should have a hotel in Alaska. It goes without saying that if you have an Army barracks up there you can take care of all these people, if the precedent set by the administration is followed. We have established the precedent already. You will recall that on the 10th day of February, when the American Youth Congress was down here with its communistic allies, the President's wife sat on a table in the Labor Department there and used the telephone, calling the President and calling the Army authorities, and straightaway she got accommodations at Fort Myer for 150 of these people, with the Government providing trucks to haul them back and forth. It would be a waste of money to duplicate this service, which was extended here in Washington by the War Department, at the expense of the hotels, by building hotels in Alaska.

If the wife of the Commander in Chief of the Army can get accommodations and transportation at Government expense, think how nice it would be for San Francisco if the American Youth Congress met there. And, by the way, I understand they cheered Harry Bridges heartily when introduced last night down at the meeting held in the auditorium of the National Press Club.

Mr. GROSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSS. If we have no hotel up there, those fellows who are sent up there to count the reindeer will have no place to stay while in Alaska.

Mr. HOFFMAN. They can be taken care of at the Army base. So if they can furnish transportation from the city of Washington to Fort Myer, the situation would not be different in principle if they went a little further and furnished transportation for the American Youth Congress from San Francisco to Alaska. True, the distance would be greater but the idea, the principle, is the same.

If we are going to have the President for another term, a continuation of the same man in that Executive office, why not let the wife of the Chief Executive arrange for these accommodations in Alaska, as she did here in Washington, if taxpayers are no longer to have control of the expenditure of their funds. The fact that such a course might interfere with private business, as her acts did here in Washington, does not make much difference to the New Dealers. Their theory is that the end justifies the means.

There are two hotels here in Washington, the Ebbitt and the Grafton. You will find the phone numbers in the book, and if you doubt what I am going to tell you, just call up the managers and learn about it.

When these American Youth Congress delegates came to town the manager told me their representative arranged for accommodations for 500 of the American Youth Congress members. They went to the hotels, as expected, the first night, but after the Executive's wife called up and made arrangements for their entertainment at the Industrial Home and at the barracks at Fort Myer, and at more expensive hotels, those people did not go to the accommodations which had been arranged for them at these 2 hotels. The manager of those 2 hotels lost that business, and he did not seem very enthusiastic about it. They might well have said, "What am I going to do with the help I employed here? What about those who make their living working here if I am to have my prospective guests taken from me? All these people are working and I have to pay their wages. How can I do business in competition with the First Lady, who offers free accommodations? I counted on the money that these folks were going to pay, $1 a night." After the First Lady of the Land arranged for these other accommodations, some at Fort Myer, he did not get the business.

I know the administration has been attacking business in various ways, but this is the first time that I know of that members of the family in the Executive Mansion have directly taken guests, who expected to pay, from hotels which give employment to those who work in the hotels and upon which they depend for their jobs and livelihood. The volume of the business of which the hotels were deprived may not amount to a great deal but the principle involved is an important one. If one Federal official can furnish shelter for his guests at Government expense, may not others do likewise, and where will it end?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If, under existing law, the First Lady has the legal authority to issue an order and have the taxpayers furnish transportation to and from Fort Myer, and housing at Fort Myer for "pinks" and "reds" who attended the Youth Congress, then under the same provisions of law she would have authority to furnish transportation and housing for tourists in Alaska. If that be so, then we would not have to pass this bill to provide transportation and housing facilities for economic-royalist tourists in Alaska. We could solve the problem by providing free telephone service from Alaska to the First Lady of the Land so that she can get her authorizations for free transportation and housing through, as she did for tourists who attended the Youth Congress.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced a resolution, House Resolution 402, asking the War Department by virtue of what authority these accommodations were furnished. When we have the answer I trust you will read it. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention first to the Department of the Interior hearings for this year. On page 700 you will find the number of visitors to Mount McKinley National Park. In 1936 there were 1,073 visitors, and in 1937, 1,378 visitors. The Interior Department keeps a record of everyone who goes into these parks. You do not know where the visitors come from. They may be from Alaska. That is all the people who went into the park in 1937. In 1938 there were 1,478 visitors. Now we come down to 1939, last year, and that figure was estimated; and let me say to the Members of Congress that I have not seen the Interior Department make an estimate on anything in which they are interested unless they made the estimate sky high. What is the estimate of the number of people who visited Mount McKinley last year? Their estimate states 2,262 people visited the park in 1939. How many of them came from Alaska? How many of them were visitors from the United States? We do not have that information.

It seems to me that we are now getting the Government into the hotel business on a large scale, when the Alaska Railroad already owns one hotel. Let me read from the hearings on the Interior Department appropriation bill. I asked Governor Gruening this question about the Mount McKinley Hotel.

> Is not that a Government-owned hotel?
> Governor GRUENING. Oh, yes. That is under the railroad.
> Mr. FITZPATRICK. And it is beautifully equipped. They have the very finest there. It is well kept, well taken care of, well managed—

And so forth. What are we doing in this bill? We are giving the President of the United States the power through any agency or agencies he may designate to construct, reconstruct, maintain, and operate hotels, lodges, and other structures and appurtenances incident thereto, and to purchase, upon such terms as he may deem proper, the personal property, structures, and buildings of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. We are not only going to build new hotels but we are giving the President the power to buy what is already there, that someone else owns.

You ought to have some experience from the legislation we have passed in the last year or two about going up there to take over the reindeer industry. We pass laws on someone's assurance that it will not cost any money. I have been here 9 years, and I have seen more camouflage, I have seen more deception, and I have seen more downright dishonesty in the statements that are made about bills being passed that will not cost any money than in any place I have ever been in all my life. I do not say that with the idea that I want to say the Members of Congress are crooked; but what do you mean from such construction when you say we are going to pass a bill and it will not cost any money, when those who make the statement know the bill is no good without ultimately asking the Government for money?

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. I want to know just what the gentleman means when he says he has seen more dishonesty here than any other place he has ever been?

Mr. RICH. I have seen more bills passed with the statement being made that they would not cost any money, but eventually they do cost money.

Mr. PATRICK. That is what the gentleman means by dishonesty? Does the gentleman mean that the committees who bring in these bills are dishonest?

Mr. RICH. No; I do not say that. I say they bring the bills in here with the statement that the passage of the bill will not cost any money. They are not dishonest in that statement about the bills, but they know they are going to come in later and ask for money. The inference is they will never cost money.

Mr. PATRICK. Then where does the dishonesty lie?

Mr. RICH. In making the statement that it will not cost any money when they know in their own minds and hearts that eventually it will cost money.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I am not going to yield until I finish my statement.

We have built a hotel in the Virgin Islands that has cost the Government a lot of money. We rent that hotel to a private individual, and this individual pays less than 3 percent on the money invested. The Government owns and takes care of the property, and, according to the statement by Governor Cramer, this individual pays less than 3 percent on the money invested—some investment.

We have hotels down in Panama. The Government owns a lot of hotels in this country. We built one at Arthurdale, W. Va., on Government-owned property. They are not getting enough people over there to pay 3 percent on the money invested. We have set the Government up in business enterprises for two reasons, it seems. One is to get the Government into business, and the other is to get the Government to take over some property that someone cannot operate at a profit and wants to be relieved of.

It was said by the gentleman from New York a while ago that we have taken millions of dollars of wealth out of Alaska and are not putting anything into it. The gentleman from New York knows that our appropriations for Alaska every year are increasing. Every year we put more money into Alaska than we did the year before. When we put that money into Alaska we are trying to take care of those people, and we are doing a pretty good job.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield because I mentioned the gentleman.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman is very honest, very efficient, and very capable.

Mr. RICH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that the money we put into Alaska is a small percentage of the money we take out?

Mr. RICH. If you figured that everything—all the fish that are caught, and all the gold that is mined in Alaska and buried down here in Kentucky at a cost of $35 an ounce, all the wealth we get out of Alaska, every dollar of it, went back into the Treasury, Alaska would pay its way. The only trouble is that it does not, and we get a very, very small percentage of that amount, and we only furnish fishing to our own people who go up there to fish in Alaskan waters.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that the people who take millions of dollars out of there pay it back in taxes to the Government?

Mr. RICH. No; we do not get near the amount of taxes back that we pay out, and I might show right in that connection how much we pay out per capita in Alaska and how much they pay. The Alaskan people pay into the Government 39 cents per capita, while we pay back to the Alaskan people $2.60 per capita—over 900 percent we pay to them per capita.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But they do not take the wealth out of Alaska. The American citizens take the wealth out of that country and not the natives of Alaska. If you take that away from those people, you do not leave them anything.

Mr. RICH. When we give them $2.60 for every 39 cents they pay in, do you not think that is pretty good?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The figures with respect to visitors to the McKinley National Park are very surprising to me. Can the gentleman tell us what deterrents in the form of high transportation costs and high hotel costs operate up there, what has been the travel under the private concession, and what is likely to be the travel under railroad ownership?

Mr. RICH. Well, the railroad ownership will operate the hotel at a loss in order to get them to travel on the railroad so that we can say that the railroad is making a profit. That is what they are doing up there. Do not let anybody fool you about that. We have had the man who operates the Alaska Railroad before us and we had given us the amount of revenue and the amount the Government put up, with the improvements they are asking each year to build a bridge or to build new shops or to build more boxcars or to get more supplies. We furnish the money out of the Treasury for this and then they take the money they get from operating the railroad and say they are making a profit. There just is not any sense to it.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. By the way, may I ask my friend from Pennsylvania, speaking of the hotel business, does he happen to know anything about the hotel business that the Government is in at Key West? I believe, perhaps, the only committee of this House that has an opportunity to get any information whatsoever about the activities engaged in by the Government of the United States at Key West is the Committee on Appropriations, and may I commend to the gentleman, as a member of that committee, a thorough investigation of that situation the next time the proper department of the Government comes before his committee.

Mr. RICH. I may not be on the subcommittee that handles that matter, but I may say that I do not know of a hotel that the Government operates that is not going in the red and going in the red fast. This is just another dead horse. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with very great interest to the remarks made by the various gentlemen on this particular bill. They have made rather long speeches but have given very few pertinent facts. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], who is a most efficient and grand person, has pointed out that the Congress authorized the purchase of reindeer in Alaska and, due to the fact that the Interior Department is now operating or in control of the reindeer industry, the reindeer are dying very rapidly. As a matter of fact, the reindeer are, and have been for several years, dying rapidly. When that was pointed out to the Members of Congress as one of the reasons why these animals should be acquired, they ridiculed the proposition. Up to this time, however, the Interior Department has not taken over a single reindeer, which, I think, is one of the reasons why the mortality rate is still high.

This bill does not contemplate the building or the purchase of a hotel. The railroad exists, the hotel exists, and the bill contemplates the purchase of certain equipment in the way of busses to augment the transportation facilities that now exist. The transportation system, in the way of busses, I understand to be a very splendid paying proposition.

The gentleman from Mississippi has called attention to the fact that in 1921 or 1922 or 1923, either two, four, or six people visited McKinley National Park. I assume this is true, but the reason there were so few visitors was due to the fact there were no facilities and no place for them to stay.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I heard the gentleman's comment with respect to the reindeer. Does the gentleman know that the Finns have used those animals to very great advantage in their conflict with Russia and that they may be of use to us sometime when Alaska develops?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman is right, but to ridicule a bill as important as this is wrong. I think the gentlemen should confine themselves to the facts. Everybody who travels at all at some time will have a desire to see Mount McKinley, but to go there and not have facilities to stay comfortably would certainly cause anyone to refrain from going.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman has stated that there is no authority in this bill to build hotels.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, I made no such statement. I said it is not contemplated to build any hotels or to purchase any hotels.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. But we are passing a bill authorizing the construction of hotels. Is it contemplated that we should go outside of what is contained in the act or deal with the act itself?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would be specifically concerned with the act itself, but members of the Committee on the Territories who came before the Committee on Rules, of which I happen to be a member, say, as does the Department, with which I have talked, and Mr. Gruening, who is in charge in Alaska, that they contemplate the expenditure of about $30,000. The Government has spent tremendous sums of money up there, and I think this will do a lot to assist people in going there and adding to the proper facilities for their comfort and convenience. I think the bill should pass.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman would be willing, then, to strike out the part relating to the construction of hotels?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Of course, I am not a member of the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I will answer that the construction of hotels simply means building a shelter, so that when people go there they will have a place to stay. They have only tents now. That is the best language we could use, for them to stay there overnight. If the gentleman wants to call it a shelter, we are willing to call it a shelter.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Let me point out the tremendous increase in visitors at McKinley National Park. From the two or four or six in 1921 or 1922, it has risen up to nearly fifteen hundred in 1938, and they estimate two thousand in 1939. That seems to me to be a splendid increase.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute. Something has been said about bailing out hotels. There is no desire to bail out anybody or anything. The purpose of this bill is to take over the concession, which is now paying, and to help the Government-owned Alaska Railroad by this process. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] spoke something about bailing out hotels in Florida. There has been constructed in the last 12 months more than 50 new hotels in Florida, and they were all filled this winter. None of them needs to be bailed out.

I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], a member of the committee.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, one of the greatest philosophers in this Congress is the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. He says that on all public questions that come before the Congress there are three stages. There is first the stage of ridicule; second, the stage of argument; and, third, the stage of enactment.

I doubt whether we will get beyond the first stage in this particular bill. The man who made the greatest effort in the way of sarcasm and ridicule ever made in Congress was J. Proctor Knott, of Kentucky. A bill was before the Congress to appropriate money to build a bridge across the St. Croix River to open up the commerce of the interior with Duluth. What Mr. Knott said at that time has become a great national classic in the way of ridicule, but all that he said in the way of ridicule came true as a matter of fact. I think that J. Proctor Knott came very nearly losing the distinction of being a leader in that sort of argument by the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] this afternoon, who said that there were only six people annually who visit this park. Let me say to you that the Government has $70,000,000 invested in that railroad, and if the taking over of this little facility at the end of the railroad will help the railroad, then all you people here who have been talking about economy and at the same time spend $72,000,000 for one battleship should stop and think what you are doing. You are appropriating in this bill not to exceed one-fifteenth of 1 percent of the cost of that railroad, and if the income from that little business at the terminal will help pay that loss, I cannot understand why the gentleman from New York can be against it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I will tell him.

Mr. BURDICK. I do not have time. I asked the gentleman for time.

Mr. TABER. I did not think the gentleman would have time.

Mr. BURDICK. I asked you for time to speak on this bill and I did not get it.

Mr. TABER. I did not have any.

Mr. BURDICK. Now you want to get it from me when I have only 4 minutes. That is another instance of your great economy. [Laughter.]

I want to say to you that no one has spoken about the national defense of this country. I dare say everyone who has spoken against this bill has voted one, two, three, on every bill to appropriate money for the Army and Navy, no matter how many billions of dollars were involved.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I did not vote for those national-defense funds that the gentleman indicated.

Mr. BURDICK. Good for you. There are a great many good points about the gentleman from Wisconsin. [Laughter.]

I want to say to you that no one has emphasized the fact that this is a part of our national defense. You know how countries are beaten down by invasion. If there ever was any chance to invade this country it would be through Alaska or Mexico. What position would you be in in that event, without a railroad to move your troops or to move the people? It seems to me as a matter of national defense that railroad should be kept there and kept operating. If we can contribute anything to the earnings of that railroad by taking over these facilities at the end of the line, we should do it. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I certainly think we ought to be clear on the matter of the language of this bill. This bill specifically calls for the construction of hotels. I do not know exactly what the definition of a hotel is, as given in the dictionary. I am unwilling to take the definition of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], who describes it by motions with his arms, indicating it is going to be something with a roof or a covering overhead. This bill specifically provides for the construction of hotels. I certainly would not leave it to politicians or bureaucrats to define what that means, especially where an indefinite amount of money is involved, as is the case here. It seems to me that there is unlimited latitude on the part of those in authority to say what these hotels shall consist of. On the ground of that language alone, this sort of thing should be turned down.

For the life of me, I cannot understand, when our national finances today are threatening the well-being of our whole Nation, how men can stand in this House and defend an appropriation of this kind. I think it is a crime, and I am willing to leave it to history to say whether or not this is true.

The argument is made that if these hotels are built, perhaps we can make this railroad a paying proposition. What an idea that is! Spend fifty or sixty or seventy million dollars to build a railroad that is not paying. Now, if we build a few hotels, we can make that railroad project pay. Is that not a proposition for Congress to put up to this country? If the railroad is not paying and needs something like this, there is only one thing to do with it, and that is to abandon the railroad. I understand it is not needed there anyway. I understand there is a public highway that is capable of taking care of all the traffic in that Territory. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, in your case, just as in mine, this bill may be passed or defeated, and it is not going to affect us personally. But it may affect the people of Alaska. My sympathies are with them for anything within reason that we may do. In my opinion, this will impose very little, if any, charge upon the Treasury.

I was a member of the Fisheries Committee making an investigation of the subject of fisheries in Alaska this last summer. We learned then more about the resources, possibilities, and needs of Alaska than we could have learned in any other way. Those people are our wards. Reason, not ridicule, should govern us in all of our study of their problems. Gentlemen, in legislating for these people duty, not dollars, should control. I hope you agree with me that it is our duty to the people in that Territory to help build up and maintain and make that Territory which we have taken over by purchase from Russia. We did not ask them to come into the United States. We bought the Territory, and yet no people could be more loyal and more patriotic than they have been and are. I do not know whether the property purchased under this bill will pay or not, but there is not a businessman who has addressed this body today who would not advocate a business investment that in the end would mean success rather than loss. That is the case here. The concessionaire must make high rates. The Government—owning, as it does, the railroad, the hotel, and the park—may charge less. There is considerable talk about hotels. The Government owns the hotel now. What is needed are inexpensive lodges to attract and house tourists to this area.

I wonder how many on this floor realize the area of Alaska? It is an empire. That Territory is more than two times the size of Texas. Place Point Barrow, the northernmost cape in Alaska, on the boundary between the United States and Canada and the farthest point of the Aleutian Islands would rest upon Los Angeles and the southeasternmost point of Alaska would rest upon either Charleston, S. C., or Savannah, Ga. Alaska is a magnificent Territory, ready to be developed. I hope we may encourage those people, and help them. By all means let us not ridicule to death a little investment that may mean much in the end.

You need the Alaska Railroad. You need it for the defense of the United States. You need it for communication with Fairbanks, where I understand there is to be located a large Army airport shortly. Do you realize that an airplane route from Seattle by way of the Great Circle and the Aleutian Islands is 1,700 miles nearer to Japan than by way of the Hawaiian Islands? Do you recall that at the westernmost point of Alaska we are only 54 miles or thereabouts from Asia? We owe it to ourselves to help develop Alaska. We owe it to the people of Alaska to help them.

Something was said about the money that has been taken out of Alaska. Yes; vast resources from the fisheries have gone to the people of the Pacific coast, while the men who are engaged in the fisheries themselves have gotten but a small return. I would like to see this Congress wake up to its responsibility to Alaska with the result that one of the finest commissions that could be found, men conservative and yet farseeing, would go to Alaska and study and plan for its future, working in cooperation with a similar commission or committee representing the Territory.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I will have to yield to my friend from Wisconsin; I could not resist, although I had intended not to yield to anyone.

Mr. KEEFE. Will my friend the gentleman from Virginia explain to me what the authorization under this bill amounts to in money?

Mr. BLAND. I could not tell the gentleman. I understand it will be less than $100,000. I know, however, that it does not make any difference what we may put in this bill, how we tie it up, what restrictions we get in it, when it comes to the Committee on Appropriations, of which the gentleman from Wisconsin is a most distinguished member—and I was mighty sorry to lose him from my committee—the Committee on Appropriations will see to it that the limitations are imposed. I have found that it does not make any difference, when it comes to the Appropriations Committee, they are going to take care of that. [Applause.]

Under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to quote from a report made August 9, 1939, by Under Secretary of the Interior to Secretary Ickes on the problem of Alaskan development. Every word of that report deserves consideration. I am inserting in my remarks an extract from that report so that Members may see what Alaska means to the United States:

ADVANTAGES TO THE UNITED STATES

Rapidly constricting foreign markets make an expansion of the Alaska market vitally important to the United States, particularly for the west coast.

With a population of 60,000, Alaska purchased $42,676,441 worth of American products in 1938; this figure was, for the same period, larger than our trade with Czechoslovakia ($26,492,796), Denmark ($24,810,760), Hungary ($2,408,055), Ireland ($26,947,071), Norway, ($22,566,800), Switzerland ($10,584,766), Poland ($24,695,903), Finland ($11,991,287), Portugal ($10,947,144), or Spain ($12,225,913). Our total export trade with Brazil, to whom we have made special and costly trade concessions, was but $61,955,062, and with Russia whose market has been assiduously cultivated, totaled but $69,691,498. These are the actualities of the present. Potentially, Alaska offers a market larger than our present export market in all of South America. With a substantial increase in population, necessitating, as it would, heavy purchases of capital and consumer goods (many of which obviously cannot ever be produced in Alaska), the United States would have a ready and exceedingly friendly market for exports totaling many times its present figures.

Again, it must be recognized that Alaska itself may become a great center in our future trade with Asia and with South America. The title of Anne Morrow Lindbergh's book North to the Orient came as a great shock to people who assume that the shortest route to Asia from the United States is a western route. The fact of the matter is that the air-route course from San Francisco to Japan via the Aleutian Islands (the Great Circle route) is over 1,700 miles shorter than the route via the Hawaiian Islands. Alaskan resources will assume increasing importance in the industrial development of Asiatic countries in the years to come. South America too is likely to provide an increasing market for such products of Alaska as furs, canned fish, and various metals.

The great importance of Alaska to the United States lies in its potential role in increasing the consumer market that supports American industry. Aside from this complementary part in the national economy Alaska may serve the United States as a strategic source of raw materials. The United States is notably deficient in supplies of tin, antimony, tungsten, chromite, manganese, and nickel, all of which are found in Alaska. The development of these resources cannot be left to future moments of emergency. The course of prospecting, of mining, and of constructing mills and smelteries involves years, if not decades. An intelligent concern for our future suggests that that process be inaugurated at the earliest possible moment.

Finally, the increase in trade with Alaska that will come with an increased Alaskan population will prove not only a substantial advantage to our present shipping industry but a vital link in our national defense. The commercial and military angles of harbor development and road building can be separated. As the National Resources Committee declared:

"If it be granted that control over lines of communication is the deciding factor insofar as greater security in time of war is concerned, then one clue is provided for the development of a sound national policy with regard to Alaska. Peace or war, the advancement of adequate communication with and within Alaska, would seem to be a responsibility of the Federal Government."

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SEGER].

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, ever since I have been in the House Alaska has been a stepchild, and it has not a very strong father and mother yet. Certain statements that have been made here this afternoon ought to be cleared up. The gentleman from Mississippi said there were six people in Alaska in 1923. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said there were 6,700 in 1939. That is a fairly good increase in 18 years.

When I went to Alaska last summer I thought I was going to a place where people lived in igloos, but I found some very fine hotels. In Ketchikan, a city of 3,000 or 4,000 people, I found good hotels; I found them in Juneau, a city of 8,000 people; and I have been told there are 60,000 white people in Alaska today. We have been all over the map. We have been to Florida and we have been to Pennsylvania and to Maine comparing hotels. I think the great mistake made by the sponsors of this bill was their use of the word "hotel." What is wanted up there, as I understand, is shelters, tents, something of that kind, 6,000 feet up on the mountain. This mountain is 23,000 feet high. The scenery is beautiful, but, as has been said, you cannot see it from the railroad except on a very clear day; not until you get up there to the 6,000-foot elevation does its summit appear through the clouds. Transportation to that point costs $25 or $30 per person. While we were there the Duke of Sutherland and 21 of his retinue refused to pay this price to see it, and I do not blame them. If the fare were reasonable—say, $10 or $15—they would have made $200 or $300 from that one party. The greatest thing holding back Alaska is cost and expense of transportation. I believe in my own mind that it does not pay to charge too high rates for transportation. Even our post office is run at a loss. If the first-class postage rate in this country generally were 5 cents for the average letter instead of the present 3 cents, people would send probably only one-third as many letters, but with the rate at 3 cents they send three times as many. The Government does not make any profit on the post office, and it is not intended that it should. So with this railroad; unless transportation in Alaska is made reasonable, people will not go there to live.

Let me say in answer to the gentleman from New York that the people who went to Matanuska are not going to the poorhouse, are not going on relief. They are producing some of the finest crops I have ever seen. Those people are farmers. The man, of course, who went out there a shoemaker from New York did not make a success of farming, but the farmers from Minnesota and Michigan who went to Matanuska have succeeded in growing large crops of fine quality, and they are disposing of every bit they raise, selling it to the people of Alaska. They are not going to the poorhouse. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 14 minutes.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides in the first place for the purchase of the goodwill and the equipment of the Mount McKinley Transportation Co.—the goodwill, if you please, of a company whose franchise has expired. As to the equipment we would buy under this bill, as well as the busses which have been mentioned a good deal up to this time, there is other equipment; for instance, 20 horses, motorbusses with glass tops, bedding, tents, camps, chairs, and beds, and various other things that go with this kind of place. Even if this kind of purchase were a wise one for the Government—and I am sorry that I have to go against the wishes of the distinguished chairman of the committee on this bill and oppose it—but even if it were a wise purchase for the Government, this kind of legislation should not be brought here in this type of bill.

Dr. Gruening testified before the committee in regard to this bill. He proposes to buy four busses—and this bill would allow him to do it—he proposes to buy four busses, which, he says, will cost in the neighborhood of $16,000, $18,000, or $20,000. Do you mean to say that this Congress is to go on record authorizing a bureaucrat to purchase busses and equipment when his testimony before the committee indicates that he does not know anything about the value of the equipment? This proposition should not be brought before Congress in this type of bill. Rather, the subject should be referred to a bureau to investigate as to feasibility and as to advantage to the Government in owning this kind of equipment. I make that statement even if we should resolve to buy this kind of private business.

Mr. Chairman, let us look at the record of earnings of this company. The Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. was owned by a man who is now deceased. I had the Interior Department give me a record of the earnings of the Government since 1929, so far as this contract was concerned. In 1929 it earned $218; in 1930, $296; 1931, $133; 1932, $25; 1933, $25; 1934, $83; 1935, $103; 1936, $215; and in 1937, $330. The figures for 1938 are not available as yet.

The Government let this contract on a percentage basis. The Government has drawn in the past a percentage of the earnings of the Mount McKinley Transportation Co. It has been brought out here that the cost of traveling from the railroad terminal up to Mount McKinley is $35, and it is stated that that amount is too high, yet we would have the Government operate these transportation facilities at less than $35. The only conclusion we can draw is that if the price is lowered the Government will lose money, and it will result in additional appropriations every year in order to make up the difference.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. Does the gentleman mean to say that simply by reducing the price of going on a trip of one kind or another that will reduce the amount to be received in the total?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. There are only so many tourists go up there. There are only a very small number of people who want to go to the camp.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman would not tell us that those who do go there will all go up anyhow? As a matter of fact, has it not been shown that when we charge too much nobody takes the trip, just the same as if we should fix the fares on the streetcars in Washington at 25 cents instead of 10, you will not get any passengers.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. There is the difference between the $35 and $10. If you want the Government to pay the differential, if you want the Government to pay a subsidy to the transportation company, that is all well and good. That is the only thing that can happen. The Government will have to pay the difference if we lower the price substantially.

Mr. KELLER. Maybe we ought to raise the price.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. The Mount McKinley National Park is, of course, a national park, and the purpose of a national park is to give the public the use of it. Has the gentleman any objection to the Government owning facilities in national parks and operating hotels, transportation facilities, and so forth?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I may say to the gentleman that this is an innovation. The Government does not own this kind of equipment in other parks. At this time, when millions of people are out of work, at this time when millions of people are dependent on relief, why should we spend money in this manner in order to buy a pony express in a national park that is not available to the general public? [Applause.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield? I can tell him something about the statement he just made there.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I decline to yield. I want to continue with my statement.

Mr. Chairman, the significant thing in this bill is that it provides for the purchase of the equipment of the Mount McKinley Transportation Co. I wonder how much support there would be for the bill if we were to strike out the Mount McKinley Transportation Co.? What equipment do we need up there? The only equipment needed would be a little station wagon or a little Ford bus, yet they talk about spending $20,000 for glass-top busses that cannot be used any place else. All that would be necessary would be a few hundred dollars at the most, even if we intended to go into this private business. This bill is appalling; it is foolish and foolhardy.

It is doubtful whether Mount McKinley Park will ever become a beaten path so far as the tourists of this country are concerned. This is only a big hope that the venture may become profitable to the Government.

It was represented in the committee by Colonel Ohlsen that the railroad in Alaska was making money. Yet we find that after the Government has expended an original $73,000,000 to construct the railroad, last year it was $200,000 short in its operating cost alone. Now we want to attach to that kind of a losing game bus, pony express, and hotel to make it run in the red further.

The gentleman from New York points out that we have a hotel up there at the terminal. The hotel that it is proposed to build or construct will be up in the park. But we have a hotel now at the entrance to the park at the railroad terminal on which we have already expended $300,000. As the gentleman from New York states, it does not look very good. That is a sample of the way the Government handles business when it does go into private enterprise. It does not take care of the property, just as it has not taken care of this hotel at the entrance to Mount McKinley Park. We certainly ought to learn by the record made by the concessionaire during the last 10 years and by experience that this is an unprofitable venture. We should learn by experience that even the Alaska Railroad is an unprofitable venture. All it can possibly haul is a few canned goods from the port to Fairbanks, Alaska. The whole railroad is only 300 miles long. Anyone wanting to travel the whole length of the railroad would not carry any more than a suitcase and a few nuggets.

This bill should not be passed, because it allows wide discretion to a bureaucrat to determine the price that shall be paid for this kind of equipment. No one knows the value of it. No testimony has come before the committee as to the value of each one of these articles. Certainly this Congress cannot go on record and will not go on record as voting a blank check or blanket authority for some person to go way up into Alaska and with no limit on his power to pay for this white elephant. It is not good business.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How much would be involved in this purely discretionary feature?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. $35,000 is an initial possibility, and that is not all. It leaves the way open for additional purchases, purchases of additional tents, additional cots, and additional horses. This authority extends just as far as a bureaucrat wants to run rampant.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That will be yearly?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. That will be annually. There is no end to it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This bill provides that the bureaucrat may construct, reconstruct, maintain, and operate hotels, lodges, and so forth?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Then in connection with this authority we have the last sentence, providing for the unlimited use of the revenues from and appropriations for the Alaska Railroad. So that under this bill the Committee on Appropriations would not have a check on the expenditures, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] indicated. The bureaucrat has authority to expend any money, received as revenue or heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the Alaska Railroad, to construct and operate hotels, lodges, and so forth. Under this bill a bureaucrat could erect a hotel the size of the Willard Hotel or the Mayflower Hotel with the revenue from the Alaska Railroad or from any appropriation heretofore or hereafter made for such railroad. The amount of the revenue and appropriations is the only limitation.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I just wish to disabuse the mind of the gentleman from Wisconsin. It has been said here time and time again that we have no intention of constructing hotels. If we take out the word "hotels" and use instead "lodges" or "shelters," or a similar word, would the gentleman be for the bill?

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Do I correctly understand that this railroad is 70 miles long and that a charge of $35 is made for traveling that distance?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. No. This is a bus service up into the park. I am not sure about the exact length of the park. Can the gentleman from Alaska tell me the length of the park?

Mr. DIMOND. As I recall, the present road from the railroad to the far end of the park is 66 miles long.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. As a final word, let me say that from the standpoint of the people who hold the concession, the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co., why should they not want this bill passed? What businessman who has a losing or an unprofitable venture on his hands would not want to unload it on the Government? What businessman would not want to have the Government come along and pick him up off the flat of his back? I know people in my district who have been dispossessed through no fault of their own, and my heart goes out to them, but we cannot run our business as a government and be profligate in our expenditures in that way.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I yield for a question.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand this company made a profit last year on its bus transportation of nearly $9,000, and they do not want to give up the concession.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. No such figure as that was testified to before our committee, and that is a far cry from the profit made in 1937 of $336. Further, even considering that a private company could make a small profit, it does not necessarily follow that the Government, performing the same service and hauling the same number of passengers, could make a profit out of it. The Government always loses money when it injects itself into private business. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 12 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, there has been quite a bit said here today about the bill. I believe some of my colleagues have impressions which are very fantastic as to the general plan of this legislation. Much has been said about hotels, among other things. I have no objection whatever to having an amendment placed in the bill eliminating the word "hotels." I do not really believe there is a need at this time for hotels.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Of course, this entire bill is subject to a point of order, there is no question about it, because of the proviso, inasmuch as the entire bill is one paragraph, so I presume someone who is opposed to the bill will make that point of order. Then the gentleman can offer an amendment, which will be germane, of all of the bill down to the proviso.

May I make this suggestion to the gentleman from Florida: The bill contains the language—

> To construct, reconstruct, maintain, and operate hotels, lodges, and other structures.

I have not heard anyone who does not seem to believe there should be some lodges in the park, and I am wondering if the gentleman would consider leaving out of the amendment he intends to offer the word "hotels."

Further, in line 16, there is some very peculiar language that I believe ought to be left out. It is—

Notwithstanding the restrictions now or hereafter imposed by law with regard to the purchase—

And so forth. Would the gentleman have any objection to leaving out of his proposed amendment the words "now or hereafter"? This language is going pretty far. It appears to me that if the gentleman would offer an amendment of that kind, it might be accepted by the House. As it is drawn now, this bill is certainly subject to a point of order in its entirety.

Mr. GREEN. I appreciate the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas. Of course, I am not authorized by the committee to accept any amendments, but if an amendment of this nature, having for its purpose the elimination of the word "hotels" and the other words "now or hereafter" mentioned by the gentleman from Texas, is offered, I shall vote for it, because I do not believe the words mentioned are necessary. I do not believe it is necessary to construct any hotels there. I do know that in the development of the hearings before the committee it was apparent that at the very outside not more than $30,000 would be expended from Alaska Railroad funds to carry out the purposes of this bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. On page 2, line 19, the words "or sell" appear to be inserted by way of a committee amendment. Does that mean you are going to buy and sell automobiles up there? That is what the language would indicate.

Mr. GREEN. I do not yield any further. The gentleman did not yield to me, although I was trying to offer some helpful suggestions. The committee has adopted an amendment to offer to the bill including the words "or sell," so that the Government can resell this property if it so desires.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is not that language necessary with respect to obsolete equipment, so that the Government may have authority to sell in order to salvage something out of such equipment?

Mr. GREEN. The committee has such an amendment and will offer it.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is any disposition on the part of even the minority Members of the House to hobble the development of the Territory of Alaska. I have viewed with much alarm the votes of some of my colleagues on the floor here with respect to huge appropriations for buildings in the District of Columbia and at other places in the country. I recall under the administration of President Hoover there was an authorization of some $17,000,000 for one building in the District of Columbia. Since that time other buildings have been constructed here and funds have been appropriated for T. V. A., for Federal buildings of all kinds, for flood control, for battleships, and for Army and Navy expansion in general, as well as for agriculture and other various and sundry causes. I have voted for them as you gentlemen have. Now, do you not owe an obligation to your ward which is the Territory of Alaska, and do you owe it any less business prudence than the mother government simply because it happens to be over there by the Orient? Did you vote against the appropriation to put a naval air base there? Have you voted against the development of its rivers and harbors and against its other public constructions? Would you be willing now to vote to abolish the railway in Alaska and not have one there or to withhold from them the funds that are needed from the mother government?

I am quite surprised that some of you would refuse $30,000 when this money will enable a Federal facility there to help pay some of the deficit which that Federal facility is now inflicting on the Government. I do not understand your philosophy, gentlemen. I do not understand why some of you are not willing to have a comfortable little shack in Mount McKinley where a tourist may sleep, if he desires, rather than to pay a large sum to some private individual to sleep under a little tent. Would you want the American citizens from continental United States to go to Alaska and ride in a bus which is not roadworthy? Would it not be better business for them to ride in a bus owned by the Government, if necessary, in order to have adequate service?

I cannot quite understand the attack which some of my colleagues are launching against this bill. I have no personal interest in this bill. The committee has made careful study and has reported it favorably.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. Can the gentleman as chairman of the committee advise us what he believes or understands the authorization in terms of money means?

Mr. GREEN. Approximately, $30,000—not more than that. I would have no objection individually, not as chairman of the committee, to the amount to be expended being limited to $30,000.

Mr. KEEFE. For all purposes?

Mr. GREEN. There is no bugaboo or anything of that sort involved in this bill, as some of my colleagues have heretofore mentioned.

Now, I was surprised when the New Deal was brought into this matter and to see the third term brought in, and, believe it or not, the gentleman from Michigan, Brother HOFFMAN, is going to have the same President for 4 years and 10 months more, whether he wants him or not. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK and Mr. HOFFMAN rose.

Mr. GREEN. I yield, first, to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. What I was going to suggest was in line with the suggestion made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] with respect to the words "or hereafter" in the proviso. If a point of order would lie—and of course no one can tell how the Chair would rule—it seems to me there would be considerable logic behind such a point of order, and why would it not be advisable for the gentleman, under the circumstances, to tell the Committee that he himself will offer an amendment striking out the words "or hereafter"? I think that might tend to clarify the situation, and then let someone else offer an amendment relating to the hotel and then, if someone else wants to offer an amendment limiting the amount to $30,000, which the gentleman states he will personally support, let him do that. I can see the position of the gentleman on the last two amendments, but with respect to the other amendment, if a point of order is made, that provision will almost certainly be stricken out, and it would seem to me advisable for the gentleman, as Chairman of the Committee, or in his individual capacity as a Member, to offer an amendment to strike out the words "or hereafter," and to advise the Committee that he intends to do that.

Mr. GREEN. I shall, if recognized by the Chair, as an individual Member, offer such an amendment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. All right, although the gentleman did not yield to me.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Maybe I did not see you, I am sorry—I yield now.

Mr. GREEN. Proceed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I understood the gentleman to say that we are going to have a third term whether we like it or not. Now will the gentleman tell me this? These two terms having cost us a deficit of $25,000,000,000, how much is this third one going to cost us?

Mr. GREEN. It is obvious that the present occupant of the White House will be called to serve our Nation during this critical period. You can call it a third time, if you desire, or you can call it 4 years more.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What is it going to cost?

Mr. GREEN. The income of the American people has increased from the Republican figure in 1932 of about $38,000,000,000 or $40,000,000,000 to the Democratic management income of seventy-odd-billion dollars annually now. This has strengthened America economically. The people are as strong as the Government and the Government is as strong as the people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, approved March 12, 1914 (38 Stat. 305), as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"That in order to provide for the adequate housing, feeding, and transportation of the visiting public and residents of Mount McKinley National Park in Alaska, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, through such agency or agencies as he may designate, to construct, reconstruct, maintain, and operate hotels, lodges, and other structures and appurtenances incident thereto; to purchase, upon such terms as he may deem proper, the personal property, structures, and buildings of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. that are operated and used in said park under contract authorization by the Department of the Interior, and the equities of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. in the business developed and conducted in connection therewith; to purchase or otherwise acquire motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and all necessary fixtures and equipment, and to operate, repair, recondition, and maintain the same in order to carry out the purpose of this act, notwithstanding the restrictions now or hereafter imposed by law with regard to the purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles; and to operate the equipment and facilities herein authorized, directly or by contract or contracts with any individual, company, firm, or corporation, under such schedule of rates, terms, and conditions, as he may deem proper: Provided further, That out of the revenues from and the appropriations for the Alaska Railroad, there is authorized to be used such amount thereof as may be necessary for the purchase of the property of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. and the purchase, construction, operation, and maintenance of the facilities for the public as herein authorized."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I make the point of order against the entire bill on the ground that the provisions beginning in line 23, on page 2, are in contravention of the rule prohibiting appropriations in a bill for legislative purposes.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order and desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. TABER. But, Mr. Chairman, under the point of order the bill goes out.

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, no; it does not go out. The enacting clause is still there, and anyone has authority to offer any amendment that he desires under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

This provision comes under clause 4 of rule XXI, which, in effect, prohibits appropriations being made by committees not having jurisdiction over appropriations. Beginning with line 23 on page 2 of the bill provision is made for an appropriation. Therefore, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN: Insert after the enacting clause the following:

"That section 1 of the act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, approved March 12, 1914 (38 Stat. 305), as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

" 'That in order to provide for the adequate housing, feeding, and transportation of the visiting public and residents of Mount McKinley National Park in Alaska, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, through such agency or agencies as he may designate, to construct, reconstruct, maintain, and operate lodges, and other structures and appurtenances incident thereto; to purchase, upon such terms as he may deem proper, the personal property, structures, and buildings of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. that are operated and used in said park under contract authorization by the Department of the Interior, and the equities of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co. in the business developed and conducted in connection therewith; to purchase or otherwise acquire motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and all necessary fixtures and equipment, and to operate, repair, recondition, and maintain the same in order to carry out the purpose of this act, notwithstanding the restrictions imposed by law with regard to the purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles; and to operate or sell the equipment and facilities herein authorized, directly or by contract or contracts with any individual, company, firm, or corporation, under such schedule of rates, terms, and conditions, as he may deem proper.' "

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. TABER. It constitutes an appropriation of the funds necessary to carry on that activity. There is nothing to say that the funds are authorized to be appropriated, but the President is authorized to go ahead and construct and reconstruct structures, and to purchase, on such terms as he may deem proper, personal property. There is no requirement that an appropriation be first made, nor is an authorization required. In effect, it constitutes an appropriation to cover the whole proposition, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is clearly in error. This is an authorization because it says that the President is authorized to do these things. He cannot do these things unless the Congress appropriates the money to do it. Clearly, when the bill provides that the President is authorized to do these things, when he has no money with which to do them, it contemplates that an appropriation must be made before the authorization can be carried out.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be very glad to have full light on the subject.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment provides that the President is authorized and empowered, through such agencies as he may designate, to construct, and so forth. The bill does not say that there is an authorization to appropriate sums for that purpose, but he is authorized to go ahead and do the job, and that necessarily carries with it an appropriation of the funds with which to do the job, and it is not limited in any way. It is not an authorization, but it is a direction to do certain things.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, further replying to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] rarely is a bill passed through the Congress that does not authorize the President, some board, some commission, or some administrator to do some thing; authorize them to make rules and regulations; authorize them to put into effect a certain law; authorize them to employ experts; authorize them to employ attorneys; and authorize them to employ stenographers, typists, and so forth; but there is no appropriation in it, and it is contemplated that the Congress intends to make an appropriation or it would not have passed the law. The whole bill, as suggested to me by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] is an authorization, pure and simple.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ROBERTSON). The Chair is prepared to rule. As the Chair understood this bill, it could have been divided into two parts, and clearly that was the intention of the patron of the bill. The first part outlined the scope of the measure. The second part, beginning with line 22, carried an appropriation to carry out the purposes of the first part of the bill.

The Chair has sustained a point of order against the appropriation. We now have in effect in the pending amendment what was left of the bill without the appropriation. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is merely an authorization, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin to the amendment offered by Mr. GREEN: Page 2, lines 12 and 18, after the words "motor-propelled", insert "and reindeer-pulled."

After the word "proper", in line 22, page 2, insert "and also to use the reindeer, heretofore acquired by the United States Government, to provide transportation, steaks, milk, and sleigh-pullers for visitors to the park."

[Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The amendment is not germane. The bill has nothing to do with reindeer. The amendment is not germane.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

My amendment is germane to the pending Green amendment, which provides for a raid on our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury of an unlimited sum, which can amount to several million dollars to build hotels and other structures. Under the authorization our Federal Government bureaucrats can build hotels costing many million dollars, such as the Mayflower and the Willard. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] also provides that the Government shall purchase vehicles, and I respectfully suggest that a reindeer-pulled vehicle is a vehicle just the same as a motor-propelled vehicle, and my amendment is germane under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ROBERTSON). The Chair is prepared to rule.

The Chair overrules the point of order. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, this is a perfecting amendment which should be incorporated if this bill is to be passed. I believe, however, that this bill which provides for an unwarranted and unlimited raid on the Public Treasury should not pass.

Mr. Chairman, our national debt has now passed the staggering and stupendous sum of $42,000,000,000, in addition to about $8,000,000,000 of obligations which our Federal Government has guaranteed. For many years our Federal Government has been operating with a huge annual deficit of several billion dollars. The history of the governments of the world reveals that no government can continue a loose fiscal policy, such as has been followed by the New Deal for 7 long years, without soon being plunged into bankruptcy, with resulting devastating inflation, and misery, suffering, distress, and despair, second only to the results of a major war of invasion.

I am surprised to find none of our New Deal economy spokesmen raising their voices against this unlimited raid on the Public Treasury to put the Government into the hotel, lodge, resort, and transportation business in Alaska.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], in citing statistics the other day, clearly demonstrated that local municipalities can develop electrical energy at a much lower cost than Uncle Sam can under his extensive and expensive T. V. A. power authority. Uncle Sam should stay out of all fields of legitimate private business. I am, therefore, opposed to this bill, which will raid our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury for an unlimited amount in order to put Uncle Sam in the hotel, resort, and transportation business in Alaska. Mr. Chairman, although we now have more than 10,000,000 of our people who are out of a job, who want a job, and who cannot find a job, we find our New Deal brethren reducing W. P. A. expenditures, in the name of economy, and cutting down expenditures for our distressed farmers in the name of economy. How will you explain to the distressed American people that you were willing to use the economy ax on them while voting unlimited funds for a New Deal bureaucrat to erect hotels, lodges, and resorts and provide transportation for the economic royalists who are able to pay as high as $25 for a sightseeing trip in a park in Alaska?

Mr. Chairman, this bill and the $1,000,000 Alaska reindeer raid on the Public Treasury which was made in the first session of this Congress certainly take the American people for a sleigh ride. If this bill is to pass, it is therefore fitting to adopt my amendment so that Uncle Sam can utilize the reindeer which he has purchased for a million dollars, and purchase a few sleighs for them to pull instead of spending many thousand dollars for motor-propelled vehicles.

Mr. Chairman, the New Deal has established a reputation for being a Santa Claus administration. The New Deal has used about a million dollars of the American taxpayers' money to purchase reindeer in Alaska. This bill proposes to spend more millions to build and operate hotels and carry on other resort activities in Alaska. My amendment merely proposes to permit the purchase of a few sleighs and the use of the reindeer. The New Deal apparently wants to play Santa Claus in a big way in Alaska. Adopt my amendment and you will have a hotel, sleigh, and reindeer for Santa Claus in Alaska as an everlasting monument to our New Deal Santa Claus brethren.

Mr. Chairman, we read in Holy Writ, "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." When the roll is called on the final passage of this bill the distressed and overburdened taxpayers of America will know all of those who want Uncle Sam to play Santa Claus in a big way in Alaska at their expense. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment to the amendment close in 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I object. I would like about 2 minutes.

Mr. GREEN. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment to the amendment close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Which amendment is the gentleman referring to?

Mr. TABER. There are other amendments to the amendment to be offered later.

Mr. GREEN. I am referring only to this amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The word "hotel," was stricken from the bill, Mr. Chairman, by the original amendment, but there still remain the words "structures or lodges," and I think with that language carried in the bill there still would be authority for the use of money to erect permanent structures. That is all I have to say.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida desire to be recognized?

Mr. GREEN. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois has properly said that by the amendment I offered the word "hotel" was stricken from the bill.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin is altogether unnecessary and was offered, I think, by way of ridicule. I do not see any good purpose it would serve if adopted. I therefore ask that the amendment to the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin and Mr. MAGNUSON) there were—ayes 54, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Ohio to the amendment offered by Mr. GREEN: On page 2, line 3, after the words "to construct", strike out all down to and including the word "thereto" in line 5.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this will do precisely what I think the majority leader said he wanted done; that was to cut out of the bill the provision that would empower the Interior Department to construct, maintain, or operate hotels, lodges, other structures, and appurtenances incident thereto.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. The majority leader did not say that at all.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. If I misunderstood or misinterpreted what the gentleman said I apologize.

Mr. RAYBURN. What I said was that an amendment ought to be offered striking out the word "hotel" so as not to authorize the construction of hotels. But lodges and other structures I think are necessary.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I thank the majority leader. I am sorry I misunderstood him.

Certainly this Congress does not want to go on record as authorizing the Department of the Interior to construct or reconstruct buildings and lodges that do not now exist and for which there is no present demand.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. RICH. What difference does it make whether a building that houses people who come to the park is called a hotel or a lodge?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I am sure I cannot see any difference between the two.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted what would the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to do under the bill?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. It would leave in the bill authorization to purchase equipment.

Mr. MOTT. Including lodges?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Whatever present equipment is there.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. If the bill were amended limiting the authorization thereunder to $30,000 or $35,000, would that meet some of the objection that is based on the ground of unlimited authorization?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. It would be an improvement over the present bill. It would still be a bad bill and ought to be defeated.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to the bill close in 10 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, we ought to have at least 20 minutes, for there are several amendments to be offered. I have one amendment which I think will take some time, and I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin has an amendment.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request to make the time 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that all debate on amendments to the bill close in 25 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES of Ohio) there were—ayes 59, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEEFE to the amendment offered by Mr. GREEN: Page 1, line 10, after the word "Alaska", insert "There is authorized to be appropriated out of the general funds of the Treasury a sum not to exceed the sum of $30,000 and."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, it will be recalled that on two occasions I asked the proponents of this bill, including the chairman, what authorization was expected to be provided for if this bill was passed. I was told by the chairman of the committee that it was expected there would not be over $30,000 involved in the bill. Therefore I have offered an amendment to cure the suspicions of Members of this House that perhaps there may be an unlimited authority if the amendment is not included.

I have offered an amendment very clearly in line with the suggestion made by the chairman of the committee, that he himself would have no objection if the authorization provided in this bill were limited to $30,000. It seems to me if the authorization is so limited a great many of the fears and apprehensions of Members of Congress will be done away with, because under the bill and under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] there appears to be no limitation at all, and we simply have to accept the word of the gentlemen of the committee that it is not contemplated the Government shall build lodges and maintain and operate other structures and appurtenances up there which may cost a very much larger sum than the gentleman indicated was involved in this bill.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. I stated on the floor earlier in the afternoon I would not oppose an amendment of this kind, but I have talked with some of the Members and I do not know whether $30,000 will cover it or not. I believe it will, but in justice to the department having jurisdiction, I think the gentleman should raise the figure set forth in his amendment. I would suggest he raise it to $40,000 or $50,000.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I took the gentleman at his word. He is chairman of the committee, and he stated that he expected $30,000 would be sufficient. Certainly if the chairman of the committee does not know what is involved in this authorization, I am certain that Members of Congress who are not members of that committee are not in position to say. It seems to me, in view of what has been claimed, that an authorization of $30,000 ought to be adequate and sufficient to take care of the situation up there.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. It seems to me that there is only a small difference involved. My suggestion to the chairman is that the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin be accepted, and if it has to be raised a little, that can be taken care of in the Senate.

Mr. KEEFE. Yes. I have no objection to that. All I am interested in is seeing to it that this unlimited authority as provided by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida is not carried into this bill and that we as Members of Congress put some limitation upon this authority. My amendment accepts the position of the chairman of the committee in reference to what he thought the limitation should be, and I think the amendment should be unanimously supported.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, we have no objection to the first figure, although the amount has never been quite determined. Our rough estimate is about $30,000. This bill has passed the Senate and the matter will go to conference anyway and can be worked out. The gentleman, in offering an amendment limiting this bill, knows that if there is any money to be expended it has to go through the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. KEEFE. I understand it has to go before the Appropriations Committee ultimately, but I may say from my brief experience as a member of the Appropriations Committee that it has often been contended when Congress has acted on an authorization that that fact alone should have a powerful influence on the Appropriations Committee to make an appropriation for the amount authorized. That is why I would like to have this limitation put in.

Mr. DIMOND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the Delegate from Alaska.

Mr. DIMOND. I think there has been some confusion as to the amount of $30,000. The only time I heard $30,000 mentioned in the hearings on this bill was in the testimony of Governor Gruening, of Alaska, when he was asked as to the possible value of the property to be purchased of the Mount McKinley Tourist & Transportation Co., and he said, as I now recall, that it would, in his judgment, be about $30,000. That $30,000 mentioned in the hearings did not take into consideration at all the cost of any lodges or structures of any kind for the accommodation of visitors to Mount McKinley National Park.

Mr. KEEFE. May I suggest to the gentleman, it seems to me, in view of that statement, if it be the fact, the whole bill ought to be sent back to the committee and then that committee report something that we can understand.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GREEN) there were—ayes 81, noes 54.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN], as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 95, noes 43.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ROBERTSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4868) to amend the act authorizing the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES of Ohio) there were—ayes 106, noes 81.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members; and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 173, nays 170, not voting 86, as follows:

CODE OF LAWS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I have, today, introduced in the Senate a bill providing for the appointment of a committee of eminent lawyers to prepare a new code of laws for the District of Columbia—see Senate bill 3533, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and appears under the heading "Bills and joint resolutions introduced." This bill has the support of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia, and of the lawyers of Washington. I was astonished to find that the capital of the Nation, which in the past 40 years has grown from a comparatively small city to a great metropolitan center, is still operating under a 1901 code. I am advised that many provisions of the present official code have been repealed or modified by later statutes, that at present the statute law of the District of Columbia is in a state of confusion, and that there is a general demand for a new official code. I understand that in the case of several decisions made by judges, upon further investigation it has been found that they had overlooked one of the many statutes stored away. There should be an official code where one can find all the laws relating to the District of Columbia, so that he may know what the law is when he finds it. No mere collection of statutes in a compiled code will suffice. What the people need is a new official code, such as we have in most of the States of the Union, which the lawyers, judges, and litigants can understand. Since I have been in the Senate I have heard much to the effect that Washington should lead the Nation, that it should be progressive and show the way to the rest of the country. The Congress now has an opportunity to show the good people of Washington that it can take the lead in reform legislation.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. PITTMAN submitted an amendment requiring ratification by the Senate of reciprocal-trade agreements, intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 407) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to House Joint Resolution 407, extending the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. I ask that the amendment be printed and referred to the Finance Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be received, printed, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BROWN. In connection with the amendment which I submit, I desire to make the following statement:

The amendment provides, in substance, that upon the making of a trade agreement it shall be submitted to the Congress and remain there for 60 days, during which time it shall not be in effect. If during the 60-day period no concurrent resolution expressly disapproving it is passed, the trade agreement shall go into full force and effect. The same procedure applies to the termination of the trade agreement. Perhaps it may assist in understanding the amendment to say that there is applied to the trade agreements by this amendment the same general procedure that is now applied to the Executive orders issued by the President under the recently enacted governmental reorganization law.

I desire to say that this amendment is offered by one who has been convinced that the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act should be extended, regardless of whether or not this amendment is adopted. There is considerable sentiment in the Senate and in the House for some congressional control of the trade agreements. If this sentiment is strong enough to endanger the passage of the bill, it is thought that the amendment may meet the views of those who insist upon some congressional check upon the power granted, and thereby result in the passage of the bill which might otherwise be lost.

I am convinced that the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act should be extended. If it is necessary to adopt some form of congressional control, I believe this plan should receive serious consideration.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CIVIL FUNCTIONS OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT—AMENDMENT

Mr. WHEELER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 to enable the Secretary of War to carry out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a public historical museum in the Custer Battlefield National Cemetery, Mont.," approved August 10, 1939, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8668) making appropriations for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1941, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

RATIFICATION BY SENATE OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS

[Mr. PITTMAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed by him under date of March 7, 1940, to Senator JOHNSON of Colorado, relative to a proposed amendment requiring ratification by the Senate of reciprocal-trade agreements, which appears in the Appendix.]

SEVEN YEARS OF CONSERVATION

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a release from the Division of Information of the Department of the Interior regarding the progress during the 7 years of the Democratic administration in the conservation of American natural resources, which appears in the Appendix.]

ARTICLE BY MR. IKE HUGHES ON WORLD AFFAIRS

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article pertaining to world affairs recently published in the Washington (N. C.) Daily News and written by Ike Hughes, of Washington, N. C., which appears in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators, let the Chair state the parliamentary situation so that the Senate may understand it.

The Senate has just approved the Journal of the Senate of yesterday. The Journal shows, so the Chair is informed by the Journal clerk, that the motion pending before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] was rejected.

So the question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona to reconsider that vote.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is generally a correct statement. However, while the motion to reconsider was made by the Senator from Arizona, he was disqualified by reason of his attitude on the vote. Subsequently a motion to reconsider was made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will realize, the Chair is sure, that when there is no yea-and-nay vote it is impossible for the Chair to say who is qualified and who is not qualified. The Journal shows, so the Chair is informed by the Journal clerk—and the Journal has just been approved by the Senate—that the motion of the Senator from Arizona is pending before the Senate at the present time.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to the history as recited, but I think the Journal is just about as incorrect as was the occupant of the chair yesterday when he announced the result of the division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is relying on the Journal, for the Journal has been approved by the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have just come into the Chamber and understand the motion pending is to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I am one of the Senators who voted against the Senator's amendment, as I said yesterday to the Senator from Arizona. Although I think the Chair is right that when there has been no yea-and-nay vote a motion to reconsider can be made by any Senator, however, if there is any question about it——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed by Mr. Watkins, the Parliamentarian, that that has been the universal practice of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is correct, but, if there is any question about it, Mr. President, as I said yesterday, I stand willing to make a motion to reconsider. I voted with the prevailing side. I still believe as I did when I voted against the amendment, but a question was raised as to whether the amendment was rejected or whether it was carried. Anyway, it seems to me, so long as there is a question, no matter how it arose, we ought, in order to be fair, to permit its reconsideration so that there may be a yea-and-nay vote. It is only common justice, it seems to me, that the vote ought to be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent, or what request does the Senator make?

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that is not necessary. The Chair has entertained the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I have no desire to oppose the motion to reconsider. I rise merely for the purpose of making an observation on a practice of the Senate which, to my mind, is solely and absolutely responsible for such a situation as arose on yesterday, and which, so far as I am advised, is in contravention of the practice of every other parliamentary body in the world, either official or unofficial. That is the practice in the Senate of having the Chair, on a division, simply announce whether the motion has been carried or defeated, without announcing the vote, and then rule that following that arbitrary announcement of the Chair a demand for the yeas and nays comes too late.

So far as I am advised, the practice of every other parliamentary body in the world is that when a demand is made for a division, the Chair counts and announces the count, so many "ayes" and so many "noes"; and when the count is announced, before the Chair declares the motion carried or defeated, it affords an opportunity for any Member who either doubts the accuracy of the Chair's count or believes the result could be changed upon a yea-and-nay vote to ask for the yeas and nays, and that opportunity is accorded him.

Of course, I am perfectly familiar, as we all are, with the reason for the Senate practice of not announcing the vote, but simply having the Chair say: "The 'ayes' have it" or "the 'noes' have it." The practice grew up because of a desire to evade the constitutional requirement that a quorum shall be present for the transaction of business; and the reason for the practice is to avoid disclosing, by the announcement of the vote, that a quorum of the Senate actually did not vote upon the particular proposition. I submit, however, that it is a bad and vicious practice which ought to be changed. Any presiding officer, no matter how fair he may be, no matter how anxious he is to record the will of the Senate, may conceivably be mistaken as to the number of Senators rising on one side of a proposition or another. He might make a mistake if he should take the trouble individually to count, as is done by the presiding officer in the House of Representatives. It is for that reason that a check should be made by an announcement of the vote, and an opportunity should be afforded, in orderly practice and the preservation of the constitutional rights of a legislative body, to demand the yeas and nays, which is a constitutional right, and not be precluded by the arbitrary judgment, perhaps the mistaken judgment, of any presiding officer.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will Senators permit the Chair to make a statement in that connection?

When the present occupant of the chair came to this body he was told by the Parliamentarian that the practice of the Senate was that when a division was called for the clerk made the count. The clerk is not a constitutional officer, and the Chair could not understand why a constitutional officer should not be trusted as well as the clerk elected by the Senate, so the Chair himself adopted the practice of counting, and he is going to continue it so long as he occupies this position.

On the second proposition referred to by the Senator from Missouri, with reference to announcing the vote, the Senate will recall that the present occupant of the chair each time has announced the number voting on each side, and he intends to continue to do so. It does not make any difference so far as the Constitution is concerned, because the last roll call of the Senate showed that a constitutional majority was present, and the presumption in law is that it continues, regardless of the number of Senators voting, because, as the Chair understands, Senators may sit in their seats in the Senate and decline to vote. The Chair knows of no power except the Senate itself that can make them vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not want this occasion to pass without making just a short observation.

In the main, I think what the Senator from Missouri said is correct. Notwithstanding the Chair is going to hold otherwise, I believe that if a vote discloses that there is no quorum present, the point of no quorum is good and should be recognized if it is made right at the time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. In a moment. My understanding has always been that the Chair has often announced merely that a motion was carried or lost because of what might have happened if he had stated the number who had voted on each side, when everybody knew there was not a quorum present. To avoid that, both sides have been willing that those who were present should be regarded as sufficient, and the Chair has been permitted merely to announce that the motion was either carried or defeated.

All that trouble could be avoided if before the Chair announced that a motion had been carried or defeated the Chair should say, "The ayes appear to have it," or "the noes appear to have it"; and that would give an opportunity for any Senator who did not believe the announcement was correct to call for the yeas and nays or for any other proceeding he desired to take. All trouble might be avoided if that practice were observed; but now we are confronted with the fact that there is an honest difference of opinion as to whether the amendment was carried or was defeated yesterday when the vote was taken. I think it ought to be the desire of all Senators, no matter how they stand on the merits of the amendment to get, if posible, and not to interfere with getting the actual view of the Senate, which can be done now, as I understand under the ruling, only by a reconsideration of the vote. It seems to me we ought to give unanimous consent for its reconsideration, so that there may be no question as to what the outcome is going to be when the amendment is finally voted on by a yea-and-nay vote or otherwise.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to reconsider the vote taken on yesterday on the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it, and the motion to reconsider is agreed to.

The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, as modified, to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. McNARY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire briefly to discuss the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, before that is done I ask to have the amendment read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment will again be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 7, after the word "determination", it is proposed to insert a comma and the following:

> Whereupon such officer or employee or the appropriate State or local agency, or both, shall have the right to appeal from any such finding to the next term of the United States district court for the district in which such officer or employee shall reside; and the United States district courts shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such appeal, and all proceedings therein shall be had in the same manner as is provided for appeals taken under section 39c, Public Law No. 696, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, approved June 22, 1936 (U. S. C. Supp., title 11, sec. 67c). No such officer or employee shall be dismissed as a result of such determination by said commission and no loan or grant shall be withheld until said appeal shall be finally determined. Pending final determination of any such appeal, any such officer or employee previously found guilty of a violation of this section shall stand suspended.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I understand from conversations with various Senators, there is not any doubt that this amendment is going to be agreed to. I am opposed to it. I think its importance perhaps is not great; and if it were not to be a precedent I believe I should not say anything on it, because as the Senator from Connecticut has modified the amendment he has taken out of it what seemed to me, when he first offered the amendment, an objection which was absolutely insurmountable, and which would have made the amendment unworkable.

Mr. President, apparently we are going to supply the right of appeal to the courts after a man who has had a hearing before the Civil Service Commission has been discharged, which means that the case may be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States.

We do not apply that principle, and from the very nature of things, in my judgment, could not, to the thousands of cases of discharge or suspension which may occur under the various departments of our Government. If we are going to apply it at all, we should apply it equitably. For instance, a man may be engaged as one of a gang of men building a road, and in the judgment of his superior officer may have violated the law, and the law may provide that for that violation he must be discharged. It seems to me we should let the man who is in charge discharge the workman without even having a hearing by the Civil Service Commission. That is the practice in other cases. When the foreman or superintendent, or whoever the man in charge may be, discharges, his word is supreme. If Senators will reflect on the matter, I am sure they will agree that it is necessary that that be so, when thousands and thousands, and perhaps millions of cases may arise within a few years if we apply the rule to every one as we are asked to apply it here; and it should apply to every one in the Government if it applies to one.

If a foreman discharges a man, and the man thinks he has not violated the law, or desires to contest the discharge, he goes before the Civil Service Commission; they investigate the case, pass on it, and decide whether the discharge shall be consummated. It seems to me that is going far in the protection of every right which may exist on the part of anyone. When a case is carried into court, the complainant or the Government is given the right to appeal from one court to the next. There is first a trial in the district court, which may and probably will cost hundreds of dollars, perhaps thousands of dollars; then the parties go to the next court, and from there to the Supreme Court, employing attorneys, whose fees, if they are at all reasonable, would probably amount altogether to thousands of dollars. When they get through, the project upon which the man was working may be finished, may be ended, may not exist any longer, and there will be nothing but a moot case, except that probably if it went to the Supreme Court, and it was found that the man was wrongfully discharged, he would be entitled to his wages.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Can the Senator enlighten me on this point? Is the procedure embodied in this amendment followed anywhere in the Government today?

Mr. NORRIS. Not that I know of, in any similar case. I do not think it is followed in any Government activity.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in a moment. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for asking the question. If the practice should apply in the case we are now considering, then I submit in all fairness, in order to treat everyone alike, it should be applied in every branch of the Government, and every employee in the Treasury Department, or in any of the other departments of Government, who might be discharged, ought to have the right of a trial before the Civil Service Commission; he ought to have the right of appeal from that decision to a district court, and there be entitled to try the case de novo, with witnesses summoned, perhaps, hundreds of miles, and a long, tedious trial had. Then he ought to have the right of appeal, the record made up, and the case taken to the circuit court of appeals, and from there to the Supreme Court.

I now yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I am not entirely sure that I understood the implication of the question asked by the Senator from Massachusetts, but I wish to say to the Senators present that in the State of California there is the right of appeal to the courts of the State from a ruling of the civil-service commission in the case of the discharge of an employee. I handled several such cases during 20 years' practice in California, and I never observed any of the difficulties and handicaps which have been suggested by the Senator from Nebraska.

I may say that in perhaps a hundred cases in which I was consulted by employees who had been discharged, I advised the employees in 10 of the cases that they had been discharged because of political corruption, or the arbitrary and capricious action of some public official. Of the 10 cases in which I was perhaps concerned, we established our right in the courts in 8 or 9 of the cases and had reinstatements.

I desire to say to the Senator from Nebraska that undoubtedly the right of appeal to the courts and to have witnesses sworn and examined and cross-examined, and a full hearing under the glaring light of publicity, is, indeed, a strong check upon arbitrary action upon the part of public officials or the civil-service board, and I for one desire to commend the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. In this era, in which we are heavily implementing the power of bureaucracy, and concentrating power in the hands of a few, it is well, merely as a check upon the Civil Service Commission, to reserve the right to a hearing in the case of an employee who has been discharged unfairly or dishonestly or through political corruption.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from California has misconstrued the question propounded by the Senator from Massachusetts, or, if he has not, then I did not understand it. We are not dealing with the civil-service commission of any State; we are dealing with the Civil Service Commission of the United States. I do not know what the laws of the various States are, I do not pretend to say, and I do not think the question the Senator from Massachusetts had in mind had any application to anything except the question we are considering as it applies to the Federal Government. If I am wrong, I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts correct me.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is entirely correct. What I was trying to ascertain was whether in any of the departments of the Federal Government the proposed practice was followed.

Mr. NORRIS. As I have stated, I do not believe it is. If it is, I do not know of such an instance. It will be part of the Federal procedure if we agree to the pending amendment.

Again, Mr. President, it seems to me we are unjustified in insinuating, as Senators often do, that the Civil Service Commission of the United States is lacking in intelligence, or ability, or patriotism, or a sense of justice. I think we all have confidence in the Civil Service Commission; at least I have. I think their judgment is sometimes wrong; sometimes I have not agreed with them; but I think their judgment has always been based upon what they believed to be the facts in the particular case. It is that Commission which is to pass on a discharge, if one takes place, and I do not believe we are justified in insinuating that the Commission is either prejudiced, biased, or incompetent.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I call to the attention of the Senator the fact that under the pending bill the same Civil Service Commission would be empowered to thwart the will of the Congress with reference to grants-in-aid of State functions, insofar as it provides grants-in-aid, and to exercise its discretion to withhold, either in whole or in part, so much of the funds as it may decide would be a fair penalty upon a State or a department of the State because of the alleged violation by some employee. Does the Senator from Nebraska not yield to the very persuasion that it is as right and fair and just that a State department so affected be given the right to determine, by way of appeal, whether or not such a conclusion by the Commission was arbitrary and capricious and unjust?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator assumes that it will be capricious and arbitrary, which I do not assume to start with. I believe they will give aggrieved employees a fair trial, and I do not think the Senator from Connecticut is justified in assuming that they will be arbitrary or capricious. They might not decide a case as I would decide it; but they are as honest as a judge, perhaps just as unprejudiced, perhaps just as able. We would give the Commission an opportunity to consider the case, then we would give the district judge an opportunity, and then give the circuit court of appeals an opportuntiy, then give the Supreme Court of the United States the last guess as to what should be done in a particular case when a man is discharged from some job on a project in which the Government is engaged, such as building a road, or something of that kind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask the Senator a question regarding the right of appeal from a decision of the Commission. Does not the Senator think that would be quite a restraining influence? Of course, the three Commissioners themselves cannot pass on a case; they have to have it passed on by a deputy or by employees. Does not the Senator think that if the law provided that there might be an appeal to a district court of the United States, it would make whatever official of the Civil Service Commission who would pass on a case exceedingly careful not to make a mistake?

Mr. NORRIS. That may be true; perhaps he would be more careful. But, if that is true in one case, it is true in every other case. There is one thing we should do, it seems to me, if we can, and that is we should stop litigation. Someone has to pass on the question of fact, and it does not necessarily follow that a court or a judge can better perform that duty than a layman. If a question of law is involved in the case, the man affected can get into court without any trouble. He can file a bill for an injunction, if a question of law is involved, and get into court; but when it comes to the finding of a fact, I would trust the judgment of the Commission as much as I would my judgment, or the judgment of the Senator from Tennessee, or of a judge, realizing that all concerned are fair and honest men and want to do what is right, but that they may disagree very widely, of course.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not recall at the moment any provision of Federal law for appeal from decisions of Federal commissions, though I think there are cases in which specific appeals are allowed. But I recall that States have enacted laws which permit appeal from the findings of commissions or from a State court to a United States court, which appeals, I think, have had a very beneficial influence. I have known examples of such appeals.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, when we pass a law relating to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the question arises whether we should provide by law that the findings of fact by the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be final, or whether we should permit the courts to review such findings of fact. In my judgment, the findings of fact should be final. Questions of law which arise from the findings of fact, or from trials or hearings, should properly come before the court on appeal. It seems to me fair to permit appeal on questions of law.

About a year ago, when the late Senator Logan of Kentucky was with us, he was chairman of a subcommittee of which I was a member. I do not remember the question we had under consideration, but at the time a very noted Englishman was in the United States delivering lectures, and he delivered a very able lecture in Washington. I know him personally. He has a world-wide reputation as an economist. Senator Logan consulted me about the advisability of having a meeting of the subcommittee and asking this Englishman to come before the committee. I thought the idea an excellent one. I did not believe that he could give us any particular light on the immediate question before us, but I believed he would give us light on the general question of the jurisdiction of courts in England and in the United States.

He came before the committee and made an excellent witness. He answered all the questions we asked him, and we asked him a great many. I asked him whether in Great Britain they had any commission or board which was comparable to the Interstate Commerce Commission in the United States, and he said they did. He told us what it was.

I asked him, "How long has that board been in existence?" I do not remember his exact answer, but I believe he said it had been in existence 40 years. I asked him, "Is there any appeal from that board to your courts?" He said there was an appeal from that board on questions of law but that the findings of fact by that board were final and no court in England would dare set them aside.

I asked him, "Can you give us any idea of how many cases were appealed in that period of 40 years?" Again I speak only from memory and have not immediately refreshed my recollection, for I did not expect to refer to this experience; so I may be wrong; but, as I remember, he said that during those 40 years there had been only eight cases appealed.

I asked him whether there was any place to go from the court he mentioned. He said, "Yes; there is one more court." I asked him how many of those eight cases had been taken from the court he first spoke of to the higher court, the House of Lords, and my recollection is that he said three in 40 years.

Mr. President, we would have 40 in 3 minutes in the United States. That will be true always if we do not have some board or some authority to settle the questions of fact. In respect to jury cases, in most jurisdictions the courts have held that when a jury passes upon a question of fact submitted, the judge has no right to set aside the jury's decision unless the court finds that there was no substantial evidence to sustain the jury's decision, which, of course, raises another and different question. But the question of fact is for the jury to determine, and the question of law is for the court to determine. In the matter under discussion we deal mostly with questions of fact.

Mr. President, simply for the sake of the RECORD I desired briefly to submit my views on the question.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I have great respect for the opinions of the Senator from Nebraska. I rise to ask him a question: Does the Senator from Nebraska believe that the question of political liberty is involved in the pending legislation in any way?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not thought so.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, the Senator does not believe that the political rights of an individual who is charged with violation of the statute are being invaded?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I now understand the Senator's question. I do not believe so. Some honest men who are better lawyers than I am believe those rights are invaded. That question can easily be tested, however, without having the amendment adopted and passed upon. If the political rights of an individual were invaded, then the law would be unconstitutional, and one could get into court immediately by varicus kinds of applications. The question could be placed before a court and carried to the Supreme Court and that Court could pass upon it. The adoption of the particular amendment in question would not assist in that respect. If the law is unconstitutional, it will be so found very soon, even without the adoption of this amendment, and the law will fall.

Mr. LUCAS. But if the Senator from Nebraska entertains the same view as that entertained by the Senator from Illinois with respect to the invasion of the political rights of an individual, then, I take it, the Senator from Nebraska will agree that in case an individual were charged with violation of the statute he should have his rights determined by the court of last resort?

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator. But we do not need this amendment in order to get a decision on the matter. That is my contention. We could not put anything into the law, however ingenious we might be, which would take away the constitutional rights of any citizen, and if such an attempt were made the citizen could go into court and have the question determined, even without the adoption of language such as contained in the pending amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. REED. I join with every one in this body in admiration of the fairness of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska and the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, the author of the bill. I listened to the Senator from Nebraska yesterday, and, if I recall his statement correctly, he was afraid of the length of time which would be required for an appeal to be decided. The junior Senator from Kansas is merely a layman, and he wonders if the objection of the Senator from Nebraska is to be the matter of appeal, or to the length of time required to carry out an appeal, and whether or not it would be possible so to adjust the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut as to limit the appeal to the district court of the United States and to instruct that court to give preferred and first consideration to such an appeal.

Further——

Mr. NORRIS. Let me answer that question before the Senator propounds another one. I may forget the one he has already asked. I will answer in the affirmative. We could. I have no doubt we have the constitutional authority to adopt the kind of amendment the Senator is suggesting. We could limit the appeal and give such instructions as the Senator has suggested. That is often done. It has been done in a great many cases.

Mr. REED. May I inquire if that would meet, in part at least, the objection of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. It would not meet my objection. My objection is that, in the first place, this is an unnecessary thing, and will establish a precedent which I am afraid will come home to roost in connection with other legislation. If we enact such legislation, we ought to do so with regard to every person employed by the Federal Government. It seems to me it is unnecessary to enact this legislation in order to protect anyone's rights.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me again to interrupt him. I share the opinion expressed by the senior Senator from Missouri that the proposed legislation does not indicate a very high opinion of the present administration of the Civil Service Commission. I am for the Hatch bill and for its principles, but very frankly I am in doubt about lodging so broad a power in a commission, in which, from experience in this body, I have no confidence whatever.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator has no confidence in the Civil Service Commission. I had nothing to do with the modification of the amendment. It was a modification of what was originally in the law to remedy a situation which it was thought would bring about bad effects. Probably that is true. I am inclined to think it is. The amendment was worked out by a committee. I think the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] was a member of the committee. The committee proposed the amendment submitting the question to the Civil Service Commission.

In my judgment, there are a good many other bodies to which we could submit it, just as well as to the Civil Service Commission. We could set up a separate board, of course; but it seems to me that when it is necessary to carry on a project in which we are engaged, some agency ought to have the right to discharge employees, and to discharge them quickly if necessary. That is true in private business. It seems to me it ought to be true in governmental business of this kind. Otherwise, we interfere with the orderly progress of what we are trying to do.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to assure the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] that I am wholly sympathetic with the purposes of the bill, and expect to vote for it, whether the pending amendment be agreed to or not.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to take just a moment to explain something of the legal situation in which the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] would place us.

I have no particular objection to any plan which would protect or safeguard the rights of any individual. On the contrary, I would gladly aid in protecting and safeguarding the rights of individuals. However, before we can intelligently enact legislation providing for an appeal to the courts, the nature of the bill must be understood, as well as the nature of the power conferred on the United States Civil Service Commission.

Under the provisions of the bill, the Commission would never pass final judgment so far as the hiring or firing of an individual is concerned. In that respect I am sure the situation is entirely different from that which the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] portrayed. The only thing the Commission may do is to determine that a certain sum of money should be withheld, and if the State persists in retaining any employee who has violated the provisions of the act, another sum of money may be withheld from the State. No judgment is pronounced against any individual. There is no final judgment against the State in the sense that we understand judgments. The Civil Service Commission is not given the power to remove an individual from office. I am wondering what sort of judgment there would be, and how it could ever be taken into court, or whether the courts have any jurisdiction of such cases.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I invite the Senator's attention to the language of his bill, on page 6, lines 7 to 16, inclusive. In order that the thought therein contained may be in the minds of all, let me take just a moment to read it:

> If in any case the Commission finds that such officer or employee has not been removed from his office or employment within a reasonable time after such notification, or that he has been so removed and has subsequently (within a period of 18 months) been appointed to any office or employment in any State or local agency in such State, the Commission shall determine and certify to the appropriate Federal agency an additional amount to be similarly withheld from a loan or grant to a State or local agency within such State.

Mr. President, on page 5 it is definitely provided that upon receipt of a report of an alleged violation the Commission has to determine whether or not the violation has occurred. If it determines that it has occurred, and thereafter imposes a penalty by withholding, either in full or in part, funds by way of grants to the States, under the terms of the language in lines 7 to 16 on page 6 it even goes to the length of providing that if the individual has been put back to work in another subdivision of the State, an additional penalty may be imposed. I submit that a reading of the language shows that there is such a determination as to a question of fact as to warrant an appeal, both to the accused individual and to the State involved, or the subdivision thereof.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have no desire to argue with the Senator, but I wish he would listen to the authorities I shall read on the real legal points involved as I see them.

As I stated in the beginning, there is no disposition on my part to stand in the way of any proper or legal method of providing adequate protection or safeguards. But suppose the appeal is granted, as the Senator prescribes: What type of procedure is to be followed if that administrative function be transferred to the courts?

Under section 12 (b), if a Federal agency charged with the duty of making any loan or grant of funds to a State has reason to believe that there is a violation of the provisions of subsection (a) by an officer or employee to which such subsection applies, it makes a report to the United States Civil Service Commission.

Upon the receipt of such report, or of other information which seems to the Commission to warrant the investigation, the Commission then determines whether or not there has been a violation of subsection (a).

If the Commission determines that there has been such a violation, it then does two things:

First. It determines and certifies to the Federal agency the amount of any loan or grant which should be withheld on account of such violation, either permanently, temporarily, or conditionally; and Second. It determines whether or not the violation warrants the removal of the officer or employee, and notifies the appropriate State or local agency if it makes such a determination.

Thereafter, if the Commission finds that the officer or employee has not been removed from office after such notification, or that within 18 months after his removal he has been appointed to some other position in a State or local agency, the Commission is then to determine and certify to the Federal agency an additional amount to be withheld from the amount loaned or granted to a State or local agency within the State.

It is apparent that the action of the Commission in determining that a violation of subsection (a) warrants the removal of the officer or employee who committed such violation is not a binding decision in any sense, but merely a recommendation to the State or local agency that such officer or employee should be removed. If the Commission subsequently finds that the officer or employee has not been removed, it can do nothing about enforcing its recommendation to the State or local agency with respect to the removal of the officer or employee; but it merely has authority to determine and certify that an additional amount of Federal funds shall be withheld.

As a result, the determination by the Commission with respect to the removal of an officer or employee for a violation of subsection (a) is not a case or controversy within the meaning of article III of the Federal Constitution, and no court established pursuant to such article could be given jurisdiction to substitute its judgment for that of the Commission in such a case. This is true, first, because the determination of the Commission is not a final judgment or binding upon anyone; and, second, because the determination made by a court when it substitutes its judgment with respect to the question of removal for the judgment of the Commission would merely be an administrative determination which no constitutional court is permitted to make.

However, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut apparently contemplates that the district courts of the United States should pass upon the question of removal, and thereby make such courts in effect administrative agencies for determining a matter which does not come within the scope of the judicial power which they may exercise under article III of the Constitution.

It is also not clear from the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut—

First. What type of procedure is to be followed if that administrative function should be conferred upon the courts;

Second. Whether the suspension of the officer or employee referred to in his amendment is to apply only in the cases of officers or employees found guilty of a violation of subsection (a) by the Commission or the courts at some time prior to the time of taking the so-called appeal;

Third. Whether the prohibition with respect to dismissal of an officer or employee as a result of the determination by the Commission is an absolute prohibition, or limited to the period during which the so-called appeal is pending; and Fourth. What the effect of a decision by the court in any such case would be; that is, whether it would have any binding effect upon the State or local agency, or whether it would be merely a recommendation to the agency of the same character as the determination made by the Commission.

The language of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is apparently broad enough to allow the district courts to decide for themselves the question of removal of the officer or employee involved, and in that respect would seem to be no different from the power conferred upon the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in the original Radio Act of 1927 with respect to questions relating to applications for station licenses and for the renewals of such licenses when the applications had been refused. In that act it was provided that the decisions of the Federal Radio Commission "shall be final, subject to the right of appeal" therein given, and that the court "shall hear, review, and determine the appeal upon said record and evidence, and may alter or revise the decision appealed from and enter such judgment as to it may seem just." However, the Supreme Court held that such an appeal was not permitted, and said, in Radio Commission v. General Electric Co. ((1939) 281 U. S. 464, 467–468, 470):

> We think it plain from this résumé of the pertinent parts of the act that the powers confided to the Commission respecting the granting and renewal of station licenses are purely administrative and that the provision for appeals to the court of appeals does no more than make that court a superior and revising agency in the same field.

That is the position I take with respect to the powers under consideration. They are purely administrative and involve no judicial function whatever. The Senator's amendment would make the district court a revising agency, not in the judicial field but in the administrative field.

Continuing, the Supreme Court further said:

> The Court's province under that provision is essentially the same as its province under the legislation which up to a recent date permitted appeals to it from administrative decisions of the Commissioner of Patents. Indeed, the provision in the act of 1927 is patterned largely after that legislation. And while a few differences are found, there is none that is material here.

* * * * * * *

Our conclusion is that the proceeding in that court was not a case or controversy in the sense of the judicial article, but was an administrative proceeding, and therefore that the decision therein is not reviewable by this Court.

I take it that under the provisions of the amendment the Supreme Court would be bound to say again exactly what it said in the Radio case, and that no final judgment or judicial power is involved. The Supreme Court would say it was not a case or controversy within the article of the Constitution conferring jurisdiction upon the courts.

In the case of Postum Cereal Co. v. California Fig Nut Co. ((1927) 272 U. S. 693, 698–699, 700), the Supreme Court held that it had no jurisdiction to review a decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in a proceeding by it to review a decision of the Commissioner of Patents refusing to cancel the registration of a trade-mark. In the course of its opinion the Court said:

The decision of the court of appeals under section 9 of the act of 1905 is not a judicial judgment. It is a mere administrative decision. It is merely an instruction to the Commissioner of Patents by a court which is made a part of the machinery of the Patent Office for administrative purposes. In the exercise of such function it does not enter a judgment binding parties in a case as the term case is used in the third article of the Constitution. * * *

The distinction between the jurisdiction of this court, which is confined to the hearing and decision of cases in the constitutional sense, and that of administrative action and decision, power for which may be conferred upon courts of the District, is shown in the case of Keller v. Potomac Electric Co. (261 U. S. 428, 440, 442, 443). There it is pointed out that, while Congress in its constitutional exercise of exclusive legislation over the District may clothe the courts of the District not only with the jurisdiction and powers of the Federal courts in the several States but also with such authority as a State might confer on her courts (Prentis v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 211 U. S. 210, 225, 226), and so may vest courts of the District with administrative or legislative functions which are not properly judicial, it may not do so with this Court or any Federal court established under article III of the Constitution.

I raise that point, Mr. President, not because I desire to discuss any constitutional questions, but because it is so clear and so apparent that this amendment has no place in the bill that I hope it will be defeated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], as modified, to the committee amendment. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TYDINGS. My colleague [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is necessarily absent. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] are unavoidably absent.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] is unavoidably absent because of illness.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] are absent from the Senate because of illness. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Arkansas would vote "yea."

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] are detained on important public business. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Texas would vote "nay."

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 36, as follows:

So Mr. DANAHER's amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment on page 5, line 4, after the words "or either House", by inserting the words "or the executive council of said State."

This is purely a procedural and perfecting amendment which is suggested because of the fact that in Massachusetts the legislature does not confirm appointments but this is done by an executive council that is elected by the people for that purpose.

I have consulted with the Senator from New Mexico, as well as my colleague from Massachusetts, and the Senator from New Mexico tells me he accepts this amendment, which is purely, as I have said, of a procedural nature.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the committee amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, before that question is put, may I be recognized?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts so that I may make a motion to reconsider the vote on the previous amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts be temporarily laid aside so that he may make a motion. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DANAHER. I move that the vote on the previous amendment be reconsidered.

Mr. McNARY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. HATCH. I understand that is the vote on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. DANAHER. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk read the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 5, line 4, after the words "or either house," it is proposed to insert "or the executive council of said State."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have another pro forma amendment to which I should like to draw the attention of the Senator from New Mexico, and, after the pro forma amendment shall have been agreed to, I desire to offer an amendment which will probably require some discussion.

The perfecting amendment which I desire to offer is, on page 4, line 25, after the word "State," to insert the words "or any person who is authorized by law to act as Governor." I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the committee be perfected by the change suggested by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming is agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the amendment I desire to say a few words about comes in the committee amendment, on page 5, line 20, after the word "occurred", to strike out the remainder of line 20 and all of lines 21 to 25 on page 5, and on page 6, lines 1 to 16, inclusive, and on the same page, line 17, strike out the words "of loans or grants"; and, in line 21, after the word "occurred", to strike out the remainder of subsection (c), and in lieu of the matter stricken from subsection (b) to insert the following language:

> And that such violation warrants the removal of the officer or employee by whom it was committed from his office or employment, it shall notify the appropriate State or local agency of such determination. If in any case the Commission finds that such officer or employee has not been removed from his office or employment within a reasonable time after such notification or that he has been so removed and has subsequently (within a period of 18 months) been appointed to any office or employment in any State or local agency in such State, the Commission shall certify the fact to the appropriate Federal agency, which shall thereupon withhold from its contribution, loan, or grant to such State or local agency within such State a sum twice the amount of the annual salary of such officer or employee.

The purpose of this amendment is to remove the penalty which the bill now provides upon the State itself and upon the people of the State and to confine the penalty to the person, officer or employee, who has violated the law.

I have been particularly impressed by the argument which has been made on the floor by several Senators with respect to the effect of the bill as it now stands.

Subsection (b) of the proposed section 12 would have the effect of penalizing all the people of the State and the State itself, even though an offense were committed by only one or two individuals, and I am sure it is not the purpose of the committee to bring about such a result. If the punishment is to fall upon anybody, it should fall upon the person who has offended and not upon the whole population of the State.

Let us take, for example, a State highway department.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I should look favorably upon the Senator's amendment, but I am wondering whether his amendment is broad enough in scope. Does not the language which the Senator has attempted to strike out and to insert certain other language include the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut? If so, ought it not to be stricken out the same as the rest of the language?

I am not sure about that. I did not know anything about the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming until it was offered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I see. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is not printed in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understood it to apply to the persons and agencies affected; and if the amendment I now suggest were adopted, it would necessarily require a modification of the language of the other amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I was wondering whether the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, who does not seem to be present now, was not made to the language which the Senator from Wyoming attempts to strike out. If that be true, it ought to be included in his amendment. I take it that if the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming is agreed to the necessity of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut will at once disappear. I am sorry he is not present.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite right. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, which was adopted, was inserted to follow certain language of the bill which is proposed to be stricken out by my amendment; but, of course, I would have no objection to a modification which would take care of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. When that amendment was drafted, the Senator, having in mind that the penalty falls upon State agencies and the State, as well as upon the person, wrote into his amendment in line 3 of its printed form the words "or local agency." Those words could be dropped out in the event my amendment should be adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Wyoming permit the Senator from Connecticut to answer a question which I desire to propound to him?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming is agreed to, does the Senator from Connecticut believe that his amendment ought to go out with the other language that is proposed to be stricken out by the amendment? In other words, if the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming is agreed to, is it not true that the necessity for the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut will disappear?

Mr. DANAHER. I should say, by way of reply, the answer is "No," at least until we see the cumulative effect of our work on the whole bill. If the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming be carried, I am perfectly willing that we shall later go back and review cumulatively what we shall have done by the time we reach paragraph 15 of the bill. Then, of course, we shall be in a position to correct the language by dropping out language which is not applicable. As the matter now stands, however, there is no reason in the world why we should drop any amendment which is thus carried, for the reason that we do give protection at least to the accused employee, even if the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming is carried.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I quite agree with the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut. It was not my purpose to repeal the action which the Senate has just taken. The purpose of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut was to give a right of appeal to the persons affected and to the agencies affected. My amendment would eliminate any punishment on an agency as such; so the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut could be made to fit into my amendment merely by dropping from his amendment the words "or local agency."

I ask unanimous consent that the language of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut be considered as part of my amendment with those three words dropped.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I withhold the right to object for the moment while I ask the Senator from Wyoming a question or two. Does he now have in mind, in his unanimous-consent request, that he would alter my amendment by taking out certain language from the amendment which was just adopted?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Just the words "or local agency," because my amendment altogether eliminates the local agency from the text of the committee amendment. My request was that the language of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, modified by the elimination of the words "or local agency" in line 3, be considered as a part of the amendment I have offered; so, if my amendment should fail, his original amendment would stand.

Mr. DANAHER. I have no objection.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then let the amendment be stated as modified by the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment, as modified, will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 5, line 20, after the word "occurred", it is proposed to strike out the remainder of line 20 and all of lines 21 to 25 on page 5, and on page 6, lines 1 to 16, inclusive; and on the same page, line 17, to strike out the words "of loans or grants"; and in line 21, after the word "occurred", to strike out the remainder of subsection (c), and in lieu of the matter stricken from subsection (b) to insert the following language:

And that such violation warrants the removal of the officer or employee by whom it was committed from his office or employment, it shall notify the appropriate State or local agency of such determination, whereupon such officer or employee or the appropriate State, or both, shall have the right to appeal from any such finding to the next term of the United States district court for the district in which such officer or employee shall reside; and the United States district courts shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such appeal, and all proceedings therein shall be had in the same manner as is provided for appeals taken under section 39c, Public Law Numbered 696, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, approved June 22, 1938 (U. S. C. Supp., title 11, sec. 67c). No such officer or employee shall be dismissed as a result of such determination by said commission and no loan or grant shall be withheld until said appeal shall be finally determined. Pending final determination of any such appeal, any such officer or employee previously found guilty of a violation of this section shall stand suspended. If in any case the Commission finds that such officer or employee has not been removed from his office or employment within a reasonable time after such notification or that he has been so removed and has subsequently (within a period of 18 months) been appointed to any office or employment in any State or local agency in such State, the Commission shall certify the fact to the appropriate Federal agency, which shall thereupon withhold from its contribution, loan, or grant to such State or local agency within such State a sum twice the amount of the annual salary of such officer or employee.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry, as well as a suggestion. I assume that the Senator from Wyoming is quite free to incorporate in his amendment any language he wishes; but, as I understand, the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut was adopted, and then—pursuant to what I have regarded as an entirely improper practice in this body, but one which is growing in frequency—a motion was made by the mover of the amendment to reconsider it, followed by a friendly motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider. That is, the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut seems to have been nailed down; so I ask the parliamentary question whether it is now open to such change as suggested by the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should imagine that in the circumstances, by unanimous consent—which, I take it, has been granted—that parliamentary difficulty would not arise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the opinion of the Chair—that by unanimous consent, and only by unanimous consent, can the amendment be reconsidered in that particular.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then I shall merely return to repeat what I said a moment ago. The purpose of this amendment is to eliminate the punishment upon States and upon State agencies, and confine the punishment solely to the persons affected. I believe it very much improves the bill. Many of us were disturbed by the fact that as reported by the committee the bill upon our desks undertakes to extend the withdrawal of funds to States which probably in most cases would have no part whatever in the violation, and it is a penalty upon citizens who likewise are altogether innocent.

I think all will agree that we should not pass a bill which withdraws rights or benefits from any State because of the acts of some of its inhabitants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

ERNESTINE HUBER NEUHELLER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1998) for the relief of Ernestine Huber Neuheller, which was, on page 2, line 2, to strike out all after the word "citizen", down to and including the word "turpitude", in line 10.

Mr. WAGNER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ROBERT STOCKMAN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1449) for the relief of Robert Stockman, which were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$6,957.92" and insert "$5,000", and on page 2, line 1, to strike out all after the word "Provided", down to and including "$1,000" in line 14, and insert "That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. GREEN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

Mr. ADAMS obtained the floor.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 9, so that it will read as follows:

SEC. 9 (a). It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government or department thereof shall endeavor directly or indirectly to influence the vote or political action of any Federal officer or employee in any degree subject to his orders or directions or whose employment he has power to terminate. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects. For the purposes of this section the term "officer" or "employee" shall not be construed to include (1) the President and Vice President of the United States; (2) persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the office of the President; (3) heads and assistant heads of executive departments; (4) officers who are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who determine policies to be pursued by the United States in its relations with foreign powers or in the Nation-wide administration of Federal laws.

(b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered is an identical restatement of all of section 9 of the Hatch Act, with the exception of the second sentence.

I have had some contact with the Hatch law from time to time. The first Hatch amendment, as it came in, was directed to a relief bill. I very reluctantly voted against it at the urgent insistence upon the floor of the Senate of the majority leader. I was told that his political life depended upon its rejection. My own political life was in the balance; but I voted against the original Hatch amendment because of that appeal. I say that simply to prove that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the majority leader, was wrong when he said yesterday that he did not make votes by speeches. I offer myself as evidence of the persuasiveness of his appeal at that time.

Following that the Appropriations Committee accepted the Hatch amendments enlarged from the original form, and they comprised sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of the present Hatch bill. They are in a strong, a stringent, and a proper form. They definitely reach evils which should be reached.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee I aided in securing similar amendments to the appropriation bills and approved the adoption of these amendments.

I think the second sentence of section 9 should be modified. I do not differ with the purpose and theory of my friend and neighbor. I think he should, however, be willing to consider a softening of this one section.

Mr. President, I am not in any way concerned in this matter politically. I happen not to be a candidate for office. I have no candidates for office—I will take that back; I have a list of some 26 candidates for President. [Laughter.] That is some 25 more than others have.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Does not the Senator have on his list the 47 candidates who are Members of the Senate?

Mr. ADAMS. Now the Senator has caught me out on a limb. I cannot say that as many as 47 Senators are candidates. But in the seclusion of my office I made a list of the Democrats who could be elected, and who might be willing to take the place. I eliminated the other Senators, perhaps because I thought they would not take the place. I put on my list some names of persons who were not Senators.

Mr. President, the provision of the law which I seek to have amended makes a flat, positive, unequivocal prohibition that no employee, no officer in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. That language goes so far as to provide that if a Federal employee were engaged in doing sewer work he could not go to the country grocery store to a meeting of his precinct committee and argue politics. A stenographer in a Federal office could not go to a sewing circle and there argue the cause of her party. Construing the language literally and strictly, it means that a Federal employee could not go to the grocery store and argue with the group of people who were there that they should do certain things in the campaign, in spite of the facts that he had no control over them.

I think it perfectly proper to say that no Federal officer or employee shall engage in any effort to influence the conduct or the vote, or even the opinion of anyone who is subject in any way to his control, whose salary he can affect, whose duties he can affect, or whose tenure of office he can affect. But I think we go further than we should when we say that every Federal officeholder, no matter how minor his place may be, shall no longer take part in the activities of a campaign.

We are thinking, and I am sure the author of the bill is, in terms of a great Federal machine reaching out its arms and seeking to control nominations and elections. I am not in favor of that being done. I have personal reasons for being lacking in enthusiasm for such activity. The people in my home State do not agree with me today as to some policies. They probably would overrule me in the State convention. I would not deny them the right to do that.

In my State I am sure conditions are different from those in some other States. The activities of Federal employees in my State have not been corrupt nor corrupting.

Mr. President, we cannot escape having political organizations. We have State organizations which are necessarily made up of State employees. In all cities we have city organizations made up of city employees. We have a Federal grouping. Now, what is proposed to be done? It is proposed to prevent the participation in political activities of every person who has been given a Federal place. Again I refer for illustration to my State. The leaders in the State holding Federal offices were appointed because they had demonstrated their character and their capacity in civic walks of life. They were given Federal places because they were leaders previously. They are not leaders simply because they have Federal places.

I am entirely willing to say, and I approve of saying, to a Federal employee, "You shall not exercise your authority, your influence, upon another Federal employee." However, I am not willing to say to him, "You may not seek to pass on your experience and your knowledge and your views to others who are not otherwise subject to your control."

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is not ready to say that simply because the citizens of his State, to whom he has alluded, hold Federal offices, if they go out and participate in a political campaign they are guilty of pernicious political activity?

Mr. ADAMS. I am not going to argue adjectives. I think primarily a citizen is entitled to participate in all the governmental functions, unless there be some clear reason for excluding him therefrom. I think the provision in question excludes them without reason.

Mr. MINTON. The title of the act is "To prevent pernicious political activities." I inquire of the Senator whether he thinks that a collector of internal revenue, for example, whom he may have appointed in Colorado, who is a high-class citizen, and who of his own volition takes part in a political campaign in his own State, is engaged in pernicious political activities simply because he happens to be the collector of internal revenue?

Mr. ADAMS. I would be willing to restrict activities which are of a less culpability than those which may be designated as pernicious. I am unwilling to permit activities which are oppressive, which take advantage of someone.

I am thinking of the lesser Federal employees. I am thinking also, perhaps, of the major number of employees, who are the actual leaders in my State, and who know more about the public business than does anyone else in the State. I think we are denying to the public service opportunities and benefits which those persons can confer, which we ought not to do. Purely from the standpoint of the public service, I think we have gone too far. I do not think it is corrupt or pernicious for a man, merely because he is an officeholder, to approve the principles which he is seeking to support, or to advocate the cause of the party to which he has devoted the political efforts of his life.

I find in the discussion of yesterday that in almost every instance local conditions seem to have their bearing upon the situation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. Do I correctly understand that the Senator's amendment would give a public officer the right to which he refers, but would restrict him from attempting to bring under his influence those working under him?

Mr. ADAMS. Absolutely.

Mr. SMITH. As I understand, the Senator would not restrict anyone in the Government service from freely expressing his opinion at any public meeting, but would restrict him if he attempted to use his office to apply persuasion to one in the employ of the Government.

Mr. ADAMS. That is a correct statement of my view. In my State—and it is doubtless true in most of the other States—we have a provision of many years' standing which not only prohibits the officer of a corporation from seeking to influence those in his employ, but penalizes such conduct. That is a perfectly proper thing to do. In other words, the officer who controls the pay checks and the employment should not be in a position to influence those under him. He should not be permitted to put notices on the gate to the effect that unless so and so is elected the factory will not open the day after election. On the other hand, the superintendent should not be forbidden to go to his club and argue at the round table, among those who are not in his employ, his views about public affairs, thereby contributing some information to them.

I am trying to apply the same principle to the Hatch Act—punish every unfair use of power and prevent every possibility of those in Federal places taking advantage of their control over others, but leave to them their individual freedom.

For instance, in my neighborhood we have little precinct caucuses, where we meet to select delegates to a convention. At the present time a man holding a very minor place in the Federal service, having no one under him, may not go to a precinct caucus and there participate in the selection of delegates. He may not join or become an officer of the Young Democratic Club or the old Democratic Club. He must take no part in such processes. Many of these persons can contribute to the public welfare.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. The thing that has been worrying me about the Hatch Act is its universal application. If an individual in the Government service exercises his inalienable right to express his opinion, he is likely to lose his job and be subject to other punishment, regardless of whether or not he is appealing to someone in a position similar to his own. I do not think we have power by legislation to take from any citizen his individual, inalienable right of free speech. However, I think he ought to be prohibited from using his position of trust or power to coerce anyone who is in the same employment. I am glad the Senator is making that distinction. We should restrict those who are in a position to use their influence upon those dependent upon them, but we should preserve to everyone the American right of freedom of speech.

Mr. ADAMS. My own political welfare—if I were concerned about it—would lead me to support the Hatch Act. It is not to my advantage, as things exist in my State, to do the thing I am doing. The group of Federal employees out there—whose rights I wish to conserve—do not at this time agree with me upon certain matters which may become of first importance; but I am not willing to say to them that I, having freed myself, may cooperate with the city machine or the State machine and dominate nominations and elections in my State, while they, who are a part of the Federal organization, may not defend the principles in which they believe and perhaps seek to reelect those who were good enough to look after them.

Last summer and fall I met many friends of mine. They said, "You voted for the Hatch Act." I said that, like others, I sat by the side of my friend, to whom I am devoted, and although by a single word I could have prevented its passage upon the call of the calendar, I did not do so. I knew what was in it. I have no alibi. My friends said to me, "By that act you have said that we are tainted, and that we are not fit to participate in political conventions." I have not had much explanation to make. In a measure I am seeking to do penance for the reflection which I, along with others, cast upon the good citizenship of my friends and neighbors who happen to have Federal places.

I am not interested in politics; and I know from the yea-and-nay votes which took place in the House when the Hatch Act was passed, and the yea-and-nay vote in the Senate yesterday, that no Member of Congress was influenced by a political motive in casting his vote.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say that he does not think there was any politics in the vote yesterday in the Senate? I am trying to respect the Senator's opinion. I am listening to him as one who is giving his real judgment. If he makes such a statement as a matter of fact, he need not talk any further to me.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Of course the Senator from South Carolina does not mean that any partisan political question was involved, because the Senator saw the Democratic leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], lead the Republican Party to a great victory.

Mr. SMITH. I did.

Mr. MINTON. It was not partisan, to say the least.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from Colorado says there was no politics at all in it. This is a serious matter, and the Senator is going on record as saying that no politics was involved in the vote yesterday in the Senate. God help us.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I happen to be one who has never talked politics on the floor of the Senate. So far as I know, I have never said an unkind thing of a Republican on the floor of the Senate. I do not think unkind things about them. I want always to think that they are actuated by patriotic motives, as are my friends on this side of the Chamber. If it so happens that they did act in a group, I take it for granted that it is merely a coincidence that their opinions happened to concur at that particular time in what they thought was for the welfare of the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Perhaps the Senator has already explained the difference between the modified section 9a which he has presented as an amendment to the bill and the sections of the law as it now is. Has the Senator done that? If he has not, may I ask him to point out the changes?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be glad to try.

The Hatch Act, in section 1, as it stands—and as I want it to stand—makes it unlawful to intimidate or coerce any person as to his vote. That is perfectly proper.

Section 2 makes it unlawful for any person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States, including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, and any corporation all the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof, to interfere in an election.

Section 3 makes it unlawful for any person to promise any employment or other benefit in consideration of support of or opposition to a political candidacy.

Section 4 makes it unlawful to threaten to deprive—"to threaten to deprive"—any person of employment or the benefit of any relief funds on account of race, creed, or color.

Section 5 makes it unlawful to solicit or receive an assessment or contribution for a political purpose from any person entitled to or receiving funds made possible by funds appropriated for work relief or work-relief purposes, thus protecting work-relief recipients and funds.

Section 6 goes so far as to make it unlawful to secure or to aid in furnishing lists of names of persons receiving work-relief compensation so that they might be reached for political purposes.

Section 7 provides that no part of any appropriation made for work relief or work shall be used for the purpose of interfering with, restraining, or coercing any individual in the exercise of his right to vote.

Section 8 provides a criminal penalty for violating any one of the sections to which I have adverted.

Then comes section 9. The authors of the pending bill obviously recognize that section 9 is an unduly harsh provision, and do not put in the pending bill that criminal provision, but say, "If you do these things, you may be removed from your position." Section 9 of the law, however, will continue to have those provisions in it.

If my amendment should be adopted, it would be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government or any agency or department thereof to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. It would maintain the right to vote, but would provide for removal in case of violation of its provisions.

The provision which would be affected by my amendment is that which reads:

> No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

It is a broad provision. Having been forbidden to do various things, which we all agree are improper, under criminal penalties, the law then goes on to say, "You shall take no part in any political campaign regardless of how high your intentions may be and how meritorious your cause may be."

I have endeavored to limit that by providing that no one in the Federal service shall seek or be permitted to influence any other person in the Federal employment who is subject to his control, who is under him in any way, or in any degree, whose compensation or tenure of office is controlled by him; in other words to give the ordinary Federal employee, the inconsequential Federal employee, the right, if he desires, to go to a party meeting, and, if he wants to do so, to sit on the platform and to get up on the platform and say to the audience, "I think that my party has done great things for my State, for my country, for my city, for me, and that it should be returned to power." I do not think that is an offense so long as he is talking to his neighbors, those who are not subject to his control, but is merely debating the issues with his friends and his neighbors as to matters perhaps of great consequence. The only thing that has been saved to the political employee of the Federal Government as the act stands is the right to vote. He can express his opinion. I think, in its original form, it said he could express them privately but the word "privately" was stricken out, I think, somewhere along the road, but it may have been meant that he should express them quietly; I do not know.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. ADAMS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. NEELY. If the Senator's amendment should become a part of the law, in his opinion, to what extent, if any, would United States marshals and Federal district attorneys and collectors of internal revenue be restored to the rights which they enjoyed before the Hatch law was enacted?

Mr. ADAMS. They would not be permitted to give direction to those in their employ, to those who are in any way under them. They would be restricted in relation to those over whom they have influence or authority. A United States marshal would not be prevented from going down to the District X Club, of Wheeling, and saying there to people who have no connection with the Federal business, "I think that we Democrats have done a good job; we have done this; we have done that; and we have done the other, and I hope that when the election comes you folks will remember our candidate." Under the amendment he could express his opinion. There are civil-service limitations with which my esteemed and beloved friend is familiar, and I am not. I know he thinks I have gone a little beyond his understanding, but I think the things I have said are justified by the language of the Hatch Act, and the Hatch Act controls at the present time and not the opinion of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. NEELY. To be more specific, would the amendment of the Senator, if adopted, permit a United States marshal or district attorney or collector of internal revenue to become a delegate to a State convention or to make a speech in behalf of the party of which he is a member, without any reference to his employees but merely speaking in general terms for the adminstration of which he is a part?

Mr. ADAMS. I think so.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Have not such United States officials had the right guaranteed them under our Constitution and laws? Simply because he happens to be an appointee of the Federal Government, why has he not the right to take part in the politics of this country, as any other American citizen may do?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that I am not discussing the matter from the standpoint of constitutional right; I am merely saying, as a matter of morals and good citizenship, that we should not deny to these officials and employees the right of reasonable and proper participation, provided they do not make use of the power and influence of their office.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator 100 percent.

Mr. ADAMS. I am interested in my people at home who have asked me, "Have we become pariahs?" In most of the States of the country the nominating process is fundamental; much more is determined as to the welfare of our Government by conventions where candidates are nominated than by votes on election day. It is proposed to permit certain officials and employees merely to have the chance to vote, and to take from them all opportunity to participate in the processes of nomination, and, of course, in some States the nomination is final. In my State it is not, because of political conditions, but we might, by the exercise of discretion in a convention in my State, make better selections than otherwise. I think when we eliminate the advice and experience of people we are damaging the public service.

I will say to the Senator from New Mexico when we are dealing with the privileges which the law gives citizens—I am not saying rights; I am saying privileges—that if we make an error we should make the error on the side of protecting those privileges rather than of unduly restricting them; and I think that the provision of the bill is unduly restrictive. I am speaking honestly as a good citizen and in the interest of good government. I say that the government of my State would be better off with this amendment than with the provision of the bill. I say nothing as to other States; I am speaking of my State, for I know that there influence of the Federal employees has been wholesome; though, as I have said frankly, they may not agree with me, for many of them—in fact, most of them—had the inception of their employment from hands other than mine; but I do feel that they have certain rights. I feel that their party is entitled to their help; I feel their State is entitled to their help. If I may put it on a political basis, why allow one army with its generals, its colonels, its majors, its captains and lieutenants, drilled and trained, and they tell me encouraged to prepare for battle, and on the other side have the generals and the colonels and the majors and the captains all forced to retire and the battle fought without leadership on that side?

I do not mean to draw an illustration which might explain any votes, because, as I have said, there is no notion that any political consequences or considerations would influence or have influenced the votes. I am speaking to Republicans and Democrats, saying to them that I think this amendment is in the interest of good citizenship. I think it is in the interest of good politics. I think it is in the interest of the ultimate welfare of both the great parties.

FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS SELL SILVER; UNITED STATES HOLDS THE BAG

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am going to deviate from the subject before the Senate for just a moment to state that while the United States complacently continues buying foreign silver, other governments keep on scraping around to see how much silver they can get rid of.

Early this year the Government of Greece decreed the withdrawal of all outstanding 10- and 20-drachma silver coins, to be replaced by paper notes.

Now the Government of British India is starting to lower the fineness of its silver coins. According to the London Economist of February 10, 1940, reporting the present step by the Indian Government, the measure applies only to the ¼-rupee piece, whose fineness is being lowered from nine hundred and twenty-five thousandths to five hundred thousandths.

But—

it is possible that it may foreshadow the extension of this new fineness to the whole range of silver coins, provided the public response to this partial move is satisfactory. The aim of this measure is probably to conserve the silver resources of the Empire and to postpone to a very distant date indeed the time when it may become necessary to spend foreign currency on importing silver either for coinage or hoarding purposes. * * * The proposed fineness is that to which British silver coins were reduced by the Coinage Act of 1920, and experience in this country suggests that the appearance of the token currency need lose nothing from the debasement of its silver content.

There is hardly a foreign government in the world which, in one way or another, has not profited by the folly of the United States Congress in directing the Treasury to go out into the market and buy foreign silver. Under the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 to date more than $1,000,000,000 have been handed over to foreigners in all quarters of the globe in exchange for silver for which we had, have, and will continue to have absolutely no use. The imported silver, dug out of the ground in Mexico, Canada, Australia, and Russia, and taken out of hoards in far-off China and Siam, we have put back into the ground.

Today the Treasury holds one and one-third billion ounces of surplus and idle silver, cast off by the rest of the world. This Treasury stock of silver is not held as security for silver certificates, but constitutes a nest egg for potential inflation; and some people are now eyeing that nest egg longingly.

The use of silver as a standard of value was abandoned by European countries during the last half of the nineteenth century. By the early 1890's the process of abandonment was virtually complete. Yet a half a century later the United States Treasury is still buying the silver unwanted anywhere else, and buying it at an artificial price which would melt away the moment the Treasury stopped taking silver. Last summer, when the Senate voted to end foreign silver purchases, within just a few days the open-market price dropped from 43 cents to 35 cents when the Treasury again stepped in to peg the price.

I have before me a partial list of countries which have profited from the liberality of the American Silver Purchase Act of 1934, and the amount of silver they have sold since that year, as taken from the annual reports of Handy and Harman, dealers in the precious metals. The table does not show consumption of silver during the period. Consumption was accounted for mainly by the United States Treasury purchases and by the arts and industries.

During the 6-year period China and Hong Kong sold 1,166,200,000 ounces, Mexico sold 512,900,000 ounces, Canada sold 126,200,000 ounces, the Indian Government sold 130,200,000 ounces, the Soviet Union sold 45,100,000 ounces, the Siamese Government sold 22,000,000 ounces, and so forth.

Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD a table showing the various foreign countries and the amount of silver which has been purchased from them. I ask unanimous consent to have the table printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Calculated at the average price of foreign silver for the year concerned on the basis of New York "official price" plus ¼ cent per ounce.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, in addition to the table which I have just mentioned, I ask consent that there be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my speech a brief memorandum which I have prepared, and which I now send to the desk.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN PUBLIC MUST PAY TREASURY $1 FOR 27 CENTS' WORTH OF FOREIGN SILVER

Under congressional authority the Government is today indirectly using silver to pay off obligations at 27 cents on the dollar. Silver certificates, backed by 27 cents' worth of silver per dollar face value are legal tender. Once issued by the Treasury to the foreign seller of silver, or his agent, they have to be accepted by the rest of us in the liquidation of any debt, public or private. The public has no choice in the matter, short of repealing the law.

The so-called world price of silver is 35 cents an ounce. This is merely the artificial level at which the price is supported by the United States Government through the removal from the market of large quantities of silver and their burial at West Point. There the metal will stay interred until doomsday.

With silver at 35 cents an ounce, $1 will buy about 2.86 ounces of the metal. When the Treasury buys silver, it buys it with silver certificates. No budgetary appropriation is necessary. The silver "pays for itself," since by law the Government makes it into good money.

Against each $1 silver certificate, according to law, the Treasury must set aside about three-fourths of an ounce of silver (0.7732 ounce). At the world-market price, three-fourths of an ounce of silver today is worth only about $0.27.

In other words, the $1 silver certificate is today redeemable not in a dollar's worth of silver, as many people think, but in only 27 cents' worth. And, whenever the Treasury stops buying silver entirely, as some day it must, the figure of 27 cents will shrink.

What it all boils down to is simply this: the Treasury, by the issuance of silver certificates, causes 27 cents' worth of silver to be sold to the citizens of this country for nearly four times the cost to the Treasury.

It is all perfectly legal. Congress authorized this in 1934, and ever since then the Treasury has been carrying out the will of Congress "enthusiastically," to use the Secretary's own word for it.

The President posseses the power to reduce the content of the standard silver dollar by about 50 percent. Should he do so today, there would be less than 13½ cents' worth of silver behind each silver certificate.

If the people only realized the hocus pocus involved in this silver program, they would quickly put a stop to it. It is up to Congress to end the buying of foreign silver forthwith, as has been forcefully recommended by Federal Reserve Chairman Eccles and by the Federal Advisory Council, a Nation-wide body, in a unanimous resolution.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the pending amendment is the one offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. It had not been my intention to take the floor again on any of the amendments which might be submitted, except very briefly, perhaps, for I thought that when the Senate yesterday debated all day long section 9 of the original act, and, after a full, free, and fair discussion of that section, a vote was taken, with every Member given his right and opportunity to vote as he desired, the issue was settled. I thought in fairness it should have been considered as settled. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas had prevailed yesterday, the issue would have been settled so far as I was concerned.

Today, however, under the amendment which my good friend the Senator from Colorado has offered—and he is my good friend—he seeks to do exactly what the Senate yesterday said should not be done, for, despite the new language that is drafted and inserted in the amendment, the substance of the amendment would result in exactly what the Miller amendment would have accomplished had it been adopted yesterday.

The Senator from Colorado in explaining his amendment quotes very carefully and correctly section 9 (a) of the act passed at the last session of Congress, and I want Senators, if they will, to listen—for this is an important amendment—and see that what I have just said is correct. The first part of the amendment reads:

> It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof.

That is the exact language contained in the first sentence of section 9. As the Senator from Arkansas himself pointed out yesterday, the same language appears in section 2 of the act. So, so far as repealing section 9 yesterday was concerned, had the Miller amendment prevailed as to the language I have quoted, it would have made no difference, because it would have still remained in the other section of the act; namely, section 2.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think the Senator is entirely correct when he says that the first four or five lines of section 9 (a) are identical in meaning and intent with section 2 of the Hatch Act, for the reason that section 2 of the Hatch Act is aimed at the use of official authority in an election at which the office of President, Vice President, Members of the Senate, and so on, is at issue, whereas under section 9 the prohibition is against the use of such authority in all elections, and not just elections in which those officers are to be elected. Am I not correct about that?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Michigan is correct, but, in effect, that is what I was arguing, because for practical purposes at almost every election some Federal official is involved. I would not have objected at all to the Miller amendment on the basis of that difference. That was the point I was making.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to ask the Senator another question, if he will permit. The language of section 2 is that "It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative position by the United States," and so forth. I took that to mean such officials as were in the higher-up, policymaking positions in the Government, while in section 9 the prohibition is against the use of offical authority by any person employed in the executive branch, which I think is much more inclusive than the provision in section 2.

Mr. HATCH. That was my original idea, but a review of the authorities convinces me that there is no difference.

Mr. BROWN. I cannot agree with the Senator in that respect. There are those two substantial differences between sections 2 and 9 of the original Hatch Act.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I merely wanted to interject one thought in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan. There is no difference between an administrative officer and an employee of the executive branch. I know the Senator is a lawyer of no mean ability, and a consultation of the authorities by him will disclose the fact that an administrator of government is an executive officer; he is not an administrator if he is employed in the judicial or legislative branch. All administrators, as such, are employees of the executive branch, so the term "executive branch" is inclusive of administrators.

Mr. BROWN. Not necessarily agreeing or disagreeing with what the Senator has said, he can see that there is this difference between the two sections, that the one applies only to elections in which Federal officers are elected, while section 9 applies to all elections, whether Federal officers are elected or not.

Mr. MILLER. There is that technical difference, there is no doubt.

Mr. BROWN. It is more than technical, I will say to the Senator, because there is a considerable reason for applying the law to elections in which Federal officers are elected, but we are going a long way further toward the invasion of State rights if we interfere with State and municipal elections, in which the Federal Government has no interest whatsoever.

Mr. MILLER. I called the Senator's attention to the difference, and I do not believe there is much difference between the Senator's construction and my construction.

Mr. HATCH. The point about section 9 is that it is not concerned with the election, but with control over the officials, and the Federal Government has a right to know what its employees do in State, Federal, or any other kind of election.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is absolutely correct about that. Section 9 is founded upon a different constitutional or legal authority from that controlling section 2.

Mr. HATCH. The point I was making was that, so far as the coercion, intimidation, or use of official authority is concerned, I would have no objection if only section 2 of the act remained. It would make no particular difference about section 9. The meat of section 9 was the thing at which the Senator from Arkansas struck yesterday, and it is the thing at which the Senator from Colorado strikes today, and although the language used by the Senator from Colorado is somewhat disguised, the result, the effect, would be exactly the same.

Mr. President, let me read the language of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, remembering that already under the same section he has drawn and submitted he makes it unlawful—> for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government * * * to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof.

Under that sentence the use of all official authority, all official influence, is prohibited. What does he then provide? To take the place of the language he strikes out he adds this:

> No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government or department thereof shall endeavor directly or indirectly to influence the vote or political action of any Federal officer or employee in any degree subject to his orders or directions or whose employment he has power to terminate.

Instead of being an addition to the section, it is a limitation, if anything, on the preceding sentence of the same section. It is a well-known rule of law that a statute must be read in its entirety in order to get the intent of the legislators. Here we find in one place the use of official authority or influence prohibited altogether—it cannot be used against any person—but in the next sentence it is said that one cannot use it to intimidate or coerce a person under him. In other words, go out and intimidate or coerce anybody else, somebody who is not in your department, as in the case of a district attorney using the power of indictment, perhaps, against some person over whom he has no authority whatever. That would be perfectly legal, perfectly fair and right, under the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The language of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado would not prohibit such a practice as this, which I am informed is prevalent in some quarters: Take, for example, the unemployment-insurance activity, in connection with which a reemployment office is maintained. That was formerly administered by Federal personnel; it is now administered by State personnel, but the administrative expenses are paid 100 percent by the Federal Government.

I use that as an example of what it seems to me would be permitted by the Senator from Colorado in cases where no direct effort is made to coerce a Federal employee, but the employee is furnished by the State machine to the unemployment-insurance set-up, and members of the State machine sit around in the headquarters of the commission and discuss politics in front of applicants who are coming in to see about their unemployment insurance or to look for jobs. Those employees are not directly under the agents of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. As I see it, they would not be covered by the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. But if anyone is so foolish as to think that they would not have a tremendous influence simply by talking politics in front of the applicants who come in, and who may think that their jobs depend upon adhering to the views of those who have the power to give them jobs, he is badly mistaken.

Mr. ADAMS. It was my understanding that the situation which the Senator from Missouri presents was not covered by the Hatch bill in its present condition, and that was the reason why he was in favor of the amendment which is now pending. I expect to support that part of the bill for that reason.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, we are going to get so many complications in the measure that I am fearful we will not have any law at all.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, would not other sections of the Hatch bill penalize a district attorney or a similar officer if he used the authority of his office to influence or affect an election?

Mr. HATCH. If the district attorney deliberately threatened, intimidated, and coerced someone, he would violate section 2 of the act. It would, perhaps, be difficult to obtain evidence of such coercion.

Mr. MINTON. No one can be convicted if the evidence against him is not obtained.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator knows the difficulty of obtaining such evidence. That is the reason for section 9 also.

Mr. MINTON. But if the district attorney should use the authority of his office to influence, coerce, and threaten anyone so as to affect his action, he would be guilty under other sections of the Hatch Act, would he not?

Mr. HATCH. He would be and he should be. However, the Senator knows, as we all know, the difficulties involved in obtaining sufficient evidence to justify criminal prosecutions. We know how difficult it is to prove such cases. We wrote the provision in the law because such an aggravated case might occur as to make proof possible, but when it was written I knew full well that it would very seldom, if ever, be used.

Mr. President, I know, and the Senator knows, how the game of politics is played. I heap no more condemnation upon the Federal officials than the Senator from Colorado does. I have been in his State and met many fine and able officials there. But we know how the game of politics is played, and we know what is expected when delegates go to conventions, whether their employer ever says a word or not. We know how the game is played even in the little precinct caucus, of which the Senator spoke, which is at the very foundation and with which I am very familiar, because until last year we had the full convention system in my State. In the little precinct caucuses I have seen employees doing their most deadly and effective work, because there is where the first delegates are nominated. They go from there to the county conventions. The county conventions are controlled by the same officials, and delegates go from there to the State conventions, which they also control. I have seen them controlled. I have been in them when they were controlled. And the junior Senator from my State has also.

I was thinking of a case in his own city of Albuquerque. I am not going into political matters in New Mexico. I think New Mexico is just as good and perhaps a little bit better in many ways than many other States, but we have had our troubles, and we know what they are.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. CHAVEZ. My colleague and I have both been beneficiaries of it.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; both I and my colleague have been beneficiaries of it; and I think there is not a Federal official in my State who is not my friend and supporter; and I think the State officials are also. There is nothing personal in what I say on that account.

Senators have asked repeatedly, What is wrong about officials going to conventions? I have tried to argue the matter many times. Others have argued it here on the floor so many times that it would seem useless to mention it again.

I am sure Senators are not particularly interested in what I think, but I wonder if they would be interested in what a great Democrat thought on that subject? Yesterday I quoted what the founder of the Democratic Party said about it, and he did not hesitate to condemn the use of patronage in elections, and officials working in elections, and said that should be cause for removal.

Let me read the words from the mouth of a great Democrat, respected by every Democrat in this body. In 1886, President Grover Cleveland said:

> Officeholders are the agents of the people, not their masters. Not only is their time and labor due to the Government, but they should scrupulously avoid, in their political action as well as in the discharge of their official duties, offending by display of obtrusive partisanship their neighbors who have relations with them as public officials.
> They should also constantly remember that their party friends from whom they have received preferment have not invested them with the power of arbitrarily managing their political affairs. They have no right as officeholders to dictate the political action of their party associates, or to throttle freedom of action within party lines by methods and practices which pervert every useful and justifiable purpose of party organization.

I want Senators to listen to this sentence, because it is language such as I never dreamed of using.

> The influence of Federal officeholders should not be felt in the manipulation of political primary meetings and nominating conventions. The use by these officials of their positions to compass their selection as delegates to political conventions is indecent and unfair—

"Indecent and unfair," said Grover Cleveland—> and proper regard for the proprieties and requirements of official place will also prevent their assuming the active conduct of political campaigns.

That is exactly what the bill we passed last summer prohibits. It prohibits officeholders going as delegates to conventions. It prohibits such activities in political campaigns as Grover Cleveland said should be prohibited.

> Individual interest and activity in political affairs are by no means condemned. Officeholders are neither disfranchised nor forbidden the exercise of political privileges, but their privileges are not enlarged nor is their duty to party increased to pernicious activity by office holding.
> A just discrimination in this regard between the things a citizen may properly do and the purposes for which a public office should not be used is easy, in the light of a correct appreciation of the relation between the people and those entrusted with official place, and the consideration of the necessity under our form of government of political action free from official coercion.

I do not want to continue arguing this question over and over again, and I really think it is a little unfair again to raise it today. I do not charge the Senator from Colorado with unfairness. He is too close and good a personal friend of mine for me ever to make that charge; but I think that when we have once voted, as we did yesterday, that ought to be the end at least to the consideration of that phase of the subject.

I wish to refer to some things which were said today about the Republican Party supporting this measure. My friends on the other side of the Chamber need no defense from me, but I want them to know that I, as a Democrat, at least appreciate the support they have given this essentially Democratic measure, and if our floor leader led the Republican Party to a "smashing victory" yesterday, as was said here a while ago, he led the Senate of the United States to a smashing Democratic victory in line with the time-honored principle of the Democratic Party, and I congratulate him, and I appreciate the efforts, the ability, and the statesmanship displayed by the floor leader on this side of the Chamber.

I wish to make one more statement while I am on my feet about this bill, which has been referred to as the Hatch bill. I have never referred to it as such, although while it is under attack and being assailed I am perfectly willing that it bear that title. However, I want to say again that it is not my bill. In drafting the original measure, I was aided and assisted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. I think the three of us worked on that measure with no thought of partisanship whatever, with no thought of giving any party any advantage, but in our perhaps feeble manner we tried to do something for our country. And I do not want to see the result of our labors destroyed by the Senate adopting the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I want to clear one thing once and forever within this body and throughout the United States.

No one in the country knows better than I the motives of my colleague [Mr. HATCH] with reference to the so-called Hatch Act. The efforts of my colleague have not been on the impulse of the moment. I, for one, know that my colleague has been thinking of this kind of legislation for years.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. My colleague might also tell the Senate that the doctrines and things which I have preached in the Senate I have preached in our State before our conventions and to our party associates.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, long before the so-called Hatch bill was introduced in the Congress of the United States my colleague made definite efforts in the State of New Mexico to make this kind of legislation effective within the State.

Only some 10 days ago a grand and fine citizen of my State passed on to a better life. He came from my colleague's home city. His name was S. A. Jones. At the time of his death he was a member of the New Mexico State Senate. Long before anyone in this body or the other body of the Congress had heard of the so-called Hatch bill, Senator Jones, of New Mexico, in the New Mexico State Senate, at the instance of my colleague, introduced a bill similar to what we call the Hatch Act. It did not get anywhere.

Mr. President, through the press and through magazines it has been stated that the motives of my colleague in sponsoring the Hatch bill were due to some personal political situations in our State. I deny that. I know the newspaper boys think they are smart. I know that they think they can read the mind of the average Senator or Representative; but half the time they are wrong, as they were with respect to the election of 1936.

Before I read to the Senate a portion of an article which I have before me, let me say that the writer of the article slanders my colleague, and slanders Representative DEMPSEY, the sponsor of the Hatch bill in the House of Representatives.

There may be some Members of the Congress who are afraid of editorial opinion; but I am not. I prefer public opinion. I prefer the kindness and the good will of the type of people to whom the writer of this article refers to the opinion of a commentator in the city of Washington who could not elect a constable in his home city or in my home State.

I deny what this commentator in the city of Washington has said about the Hatch bill. I deny that my colleague had any such motives. I deny that my friend Representative DEMPSEY, of my State, had such motives. I give to my colleague and to Representative DEMPSEY credit for sincerity of purpose, notwithstanding the fact that I am against the pending bill. I know that their motives are sincere in what they think is the interest of the country. But there are commentators in the city of Washington who would credit my colleague with different motives.

I hold in my hand a photostatic copy of an article from the Washington (D. C.) Evening Star of September 6, 1939, written by Jay Franklin. The article reads in part as follows:

> We, the people. Yes; there should be, there must be, there is a Uvalde.

The commentator to whom I have referred was taking to task the Vice President of the United States or someone in Uvalde. In discussing the Hatch bill, which had recently passed, this man, who calls himself an American, used the following language. I read in part from the article:

> As a matter of fact, now that the subject has been raised, is there such a place as Texas? We know that there is a state of mind down there, bounded on the north by Col. Amon Carter, on the south by Mayor Maury Maverick, on the east by the ruins of Huey Long, and on the west by the Hatch pure-politics ("Don't let the greasers vote") bill.

Mr. Franklin, in referring to a class of loyal people who have voted for my colleague and for Congressman DEMPSEY, by insinuation or malice attributed to my colleague or to Representative DEMPSEY certain base motives. I say he prevaricates. CARL HATCH is not that type.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I had forgotten the article which the Senator is reading, and especially the words which he has just read. I wish to thank the Senator for making the statement he has made.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I do not want any commentator or newspaperman in the city of Washington to attribute malice or any of the other meaner motives to my colleague, notwithstanding the fact that I am still against his bill, but not for the reasons assigned by this commentator in the city of Washington.

I know that by no stretch of the imagination could there be any truth in the unkind words used by Mr. Franklin against a class of people who have dared to accept my colleague and Representative DEMPSEY, from other States, and honor them by sending them to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is the Senator referring to a commentator who is ashamed to go under his own name, but goes under an alias?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I do not even know the gentleman. I will give him that much credit. I will call him a gentleman.

Mr. President, I have a difficult task on this particular occasion. I know my colleague. I know his pure motives. I happen to come from a race of emotional people. It is with a sad heart that I feel it my duty to take a stand against a thing which I know he sponsors, and with respect to which he is so sincere.

However, Mr. President, I have not yet evaded a responsibility. I have not yet neglected a duty. I have not yet voted for reasons of expediency. Down in my conscience I feel that my colleague's bill hits at the very fundamentals of the things which Mr. Franklin would talk about, which are sacred to the American people. I know the ills at which my colleague aims, and I know the difficulty which my colleague has encountered in the passage of the original act. I know what he is trying to reach by the pending measure. I have been the beneficiary and the victim of the so-called bad influences within State governments. I have helped—and my colleague has helped—to elect State Governors who later forgot. I say to the Senate today that it would be to my interest from a political standpoint to support my colleague in his efforts to purify State politics. But, Mr. President, in order to reach an evil it is wrong to try to do something that may prove much more of an evil.

That is the reason I was opposed to the original Hatch bill, and why I feel that I must, in conscience, support the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

If it had not been that yesterday our honored and beloved leader had made some statements with reference to politics, I would not on this occasion tell my thought; but I feel that I am entitled to speak to this body and especially to those to whom my leader was appealing yesterday, as to whether this class of legislation is in keeping with and will perpetuate the philosophy of government which we have had for the last 7 years.

Mr. President, I am still old-fashioned enough to believe in party government; I am old-fashioned enough to believe that if the people of this country should select the minority leader as President on the Republican ticket next year, I would prefer that kind of government rather than bureau Washington. I am still old-fashioned enough to believe that the people of the United States should select the one, whether it be the present President of the United States or some other Democrat, to carry on party government rather than the Civil Service Commission or any bureau in Washington. That has been our system. The country has grown and progressed under that system, and I, for one, do not want now to change it by giving more and more power to bureau Washington.

We may talk all we want about Fascists, we may discuss all we want the views of Communists, but we all know the American people will get them all out of the way in no time when they get good and ready. The danger to free government, the danger of dictatorship is bureau Washington. When some individual in New Mexico violates the law whether it be the Hatch law or any other law, I, for one, want the peers of that citizen to say what shall be done with him and not some clerk here in the city of Washington. That may be treason for the moment; it may be unpopular; but that is the way I sincerely feel about it.

Carrying that a little further, what are we doing? We are saying to an employee who may have had the fortune to be recommended by my friend, the Senator from New York, or my friend, the Senator from Kentucky, because the Senator from New York or the Senator from Kentucky trusted him and felt he could do his duty as a citizen and as an official, "You must not exercise your inherent right as an American citizen and say to the people of Kentucky or New York 'I believe in the philosophy of President Roosevelt, and I want you to help continue it.'" Should he do so, under the bill he would become a lawbreaker; he would belong to that group who are outside the law.

I want to go further. We have heard and we have read ever since we became of age about the indifference of the American people to their political affairs. We hear during all elections that the people are not interested; that they will not come out and vote. Here we are proposing to select a special class of employees merely because someone dared to recommend them for public office and to require those in that class to keep still.

I believe in the philosophy of President Roosevelt, and I think it is still right for the Solicitor General of the United States—if he cares to do so, to go out and say to the country "Yes, I believe in Roosevelt." Why not? Would you prevent him from trying to carry on as he believes?

What is there wrong in an employee in any State—in the State of Kentucky, for instance—if he happens to have a little 2-by-4 governmental job, saying, "I believe in Senator CHANDLER; I believe in Senator BARKLEY"? Should he be held to violate the law because he asks those who feel the way he does about it to vote for them? Why should such a man be made a criminal? Furthermore, we cannot change the world in any such manner as that. We had prohibition sometime ago, and we had bootleg whisky. All that will be done by this law will be to make a bunch of political bootleggers out of honest people. Many of those who would be affected by the law would continue to carry on as has been done since the passage of the Hatch law. I do not mind telling you, Mr. President, that Congress cannot pass legislation that will specialize a certain class and not make it apply to all.

I am one of those who believe that the right under the law and under the Constitution of a charwoman in a Federal building is just as sacred as that of the Secretary of the Interior. If he can talk, why can she not talk? What makes him bigger? I prefer the charwoman; she can get more votes for the New Deal. [Laughter.]

Why must the Government of the United States be hypocritical about these matters? We know we are not going to enforce this proposed law. The present law is not being enforced now. Go to the Census Bureau, and unless you get a clearance from a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives you cannot get one enumerator appointed anywhere. I should like to have Mr. Capt deny that statement. The Hatch law is in existence; so why not let us try to be honest and fair with ourselves and not be hypocritical. Why act under false pretenses? If a law is good for one, let it be good for all.

Further referring to the remarks of my grand leader, my fine leader, on yesterday, when he was talking about what would happen if the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] should be adopted, he said the country would revolt. The country has already revolted.

When the bill introduced by my colleague became a law we, the Democrats, lost the House of Representatives. Do not fool yourselves. It is all right to thank my friends on the other side; it is all right to be grateful to them because they helped out in one particular matter here; the voice is that of Jacob, but the hand is that of Esau. They are gloating and bragging, and I do not blame them. It is Republican legislation; it is not Democratic legislation.

Let us analyze this proposal in a practical manner. We know that the only thing that counts on election day is votes. We know the only way the Democrats can carry on is to have a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate. Very well. If we do not have a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate, it is not possible to put into operation our policies of government or our party policies.

How do we arrive at whether a thing is right or wrong in an American way of thinking? By the rule of the majority. So far as the Democrats are concerned they have spoken and are on record as being against the so-called Hatch law. They went on record yesterday. Forty Senators rose in their might and expressed their opinion of—I may go further and say probably their resistance to—the law sponsored by my colleague.

If it is thought that the Democrats are legislating, let me remind the Senate that after the original Hatch bill passed the Senate of the United States, in an orderly way, on the unanimous-consent calendar, without a single objection, in due course it went to the House of Representatives, and there they had a record vote. I am talking now as to the feeling and the sentiment of Democrats and Republicans. The test on that proposition came about when Representative Healey, of Massachusetts, made a motion to recommit the bill to the committee.

What do we find? On page 9638, volume 84, part 9, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Seventy-sixth Congress, we find a list of those who voted for the so-called Hatch bill and those who voted against it on a test vote of recommittal. We find, Mr. President, 146 what—Republicans? No; we find 146 Democrats voting to recommit the bill. Do you believe in the rule of the majority? And against the motion to recommit we find 75 Democrats and 157 Republicans. So tell me that the Democratic Party is legislating for the good of the country, or what should be for the good of the country.

Among the 146 who voted on the test vote against the so-called Hatch bill we find such Democrats as BELL, of Missouri; BLAND, of Virginia; BLOOM, of New York; BOLAND, of Pennsylvania (the majority whip); BRADLEY, of Pennsylvania; BUCK, of California; BULWINKLE, of North Carolina; CHANDLER, of Tennessee; COLMER, of Mississippi; CULLEN, of New York; and so on down the line; and the last one on the list who voted against the so-called Hatch bill is a candidate for President of the United States to this day—and let me tell you we could do worse—the Speaker of the House of Representatives. That is the class of Democrats who voted against the so-called Hatch bill, not because they were interested in patronage, not because they were against doing away with the evils about which my colleague talks, but because the bill in its effect hit more fundamental things than a measly job in New Mexico or Idaho; because it is un-American, according to my way of thinking; because it is special legislation, and affects only a class of citizens that are being penalized now because my colleague and I dare have enough confidence in them to have them appointed United States marshals, United States attorneys, or collectors of internal revenue.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. How many Democrats voted for the Hatch bill in the House on final passage?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Approximately the same number. Let me tell the Senator from Kentucky that on the motion to recommit, 146 Democrats voted for recommittal. One hundred and fifty-seven Republicans and seventy-five Democrats voted against recommittal of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. My question was, How many Democrats voted for the bill on its passage?

Mr. CHAVEZ. On the passage of the bill there were 241 yeas and 134 nays.

Mr. CHANDLER. How many Democrats voted for the bill?

Mr. CHAVEZ. The difference between 241 and 157.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator understands that many times legislators will vote for a motion to recommit in order to keep from voting on the bill; but when they have the bill right in front of them, it is a different proposition. They will vote to do away with something so that they will not have to face final action on it; but the situation is different when it comes to casting their votes on it directly, when it is on the barrelhead, and they have to vote "yes" or "no."

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; but I want the Senator from Kentucky to look at these figures.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator give me those final figures again?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Certainly.

On the motion to recommit there were 146 Democrats voting for the motion. On the passage of the bill there were 134 Democrats who voted against it.

So if we believe in party government, if we believe in the American system of the rule of the majority, I still maintain that this legislation should be credited to the Republicans, and I am willing to give it to them. With all due deference to them, I do not think they have the sincerity of purpose that my colleague from New Mexico has; but they passed the legislation, and not the Democrats.

Recall the vote yesterday on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER]. There were 40 Democrats for the amendment, and 22 Democrats against it, or a ratio practically of 2 to 1; and on the House side, by the record vote, we have the same result. So if we are to continue with party government, if we do not want to go ahead with mongrel politics, if we still believe in the system which has made this country what it is, it appears to some of us that the rule of the majority should prevail.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am unable to follow my dear friend from New Mexico in pointing out the vote on yesterday as 40 Democrats to 22 or 23 Democrats unless it is for the purpose of impressing the 23 with the view that they ought to have been with the 40.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct; I think they should have been.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that was true on yesterday, ought it not to be true on all legislation? Ought we not to hold a Democratic conference on every bill that is brought here, and let the majority govern, so that the minority would fall in line with the majority, and vote as they did?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I have so much confidence in my leader that I want him to decide those questions.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's confidence, if it exists; and I do not question the sincerity of his statement.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I assure the Senator that it does exist.

Mr. BARKLEY. But if, by implication and by inference, I am to be criticized because I happened yesterday to be with 23 instead of 40, I ask my friend in all sincerity if we ought not to take a party poll on every proposition, and let the minority on all matters fall in line with the majority; and if he thinks that I, in the position I occupy here, regardless of my own views and regardless of what I conceive to be my duty, ought to take a poll in advance of every vote, and line up with the majority of the Democrats because they happen to be on a certain side of a question?

Mr. CHAVEZ. No; the Senator from Kentucky misunderstands me.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am trying to understand the Senator.

Mr. CHAVEZ. As a Democrat, I still think the Senator from Kentucky should do as his conscience dictates, whether he is alone or with the majority.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am glad to hear the Senator say that, because the Senator from New Mexico does that, and I honor him for it. I frequently regret that he and I are not together, but I never doubt his sincerity; I never impugn his motives; I never criticize or question him when he votes in any way he sees fit, though I sometimes wish he would vote with me.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I am not questioning the motives of any one who voted against the Miller amendment on yesterday. As a matter of fact I am submitting to the majority, even if the majority is composed of a minority of Democrats and Republicans; but I want to impress upon the Senator that as far as the Democratic Senators were concerned, notwithstanding the fact that the amendment lost, the majority of the Democratic Senators evidently were not satisfied with the Hatch law as it originally passed.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator knows that in the past several years, during the entire two terms of President Roosevelt, there has never been any effort on the part of the Democratic majority to bind any other Democrat; and because the impression might have gotten out that we were seeking to bind

Democrats there has never been, so far as I recall, a conference of the Democratic majority on legislation with a view of undertaking either to bind Democrats or even to persuade them to vote in a certain way. We have recognized the right of Democrats here to vote as they saw fit. In fact, if they were not more or less individualists, they would not be Democrats. But, in view of that general attitude of all Democrats here toward their colleagues, does the Senator from New Mexico think it really is pertinent to recall what the vote was yesterday?

Mr. CHAVEZ. It is pertinent only as showing numerically what the Democrats thought of the Hatch law.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes.

Mr. MINTON. Of course, we who voted for the Miller amendment yesterday had no criticism to offer of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CHAVEZ. No; we had no intention whatever of criticizing him.

Mr. MINTON. We have not any criticism at all of him, but we were just flabbergasted to see him running toward the wrong goal. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, of course there are many doors to this Chamber, and frequently I am flabbergasted by seeing the departure of Senators through various doors that lead out of the Chamber or out of the fold of what I regard as good democracy; but I have never found fault with them, and I do not now find fault with them.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I am not finding fault.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have always assumed, and I should not want to belong to a body where I could not assume, that every Member of it votes as his conscience dictates to him.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Frequently we are compelled here, regardless of our partisan affiliations, to take positions which are nonpartisan, which are beyond the limitations of party control or party conception or party advantage. On a matter of this sort, which is not partisan, and by no stretch of the imagination can be made partisan, I think every Democrat and every Republican at least ought to be given credit for voting his sincere convictions upon it.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I am sure they voted their convictions, and I am not trying to criticize the vote of any Member of this body on yesterday. I am just trying to impress upon the Senate numerically how the Democratic Senators stood, and further to impress upon the Senate that as far as I am concerned I am still standing in the same position I occupied in 1938.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has been consistent. He has been against this legislation fundamentally from the very beginning.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct; and nothing has hurt me more than the fact that I could not agree with my colleague about it, because I should have loved to go along with my colleague, for I know his purity of thought and motives.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, does the Senator from New Mexico claim that the use of patronage is not only excusable but laudable if it is used in order to carry out the policies of President Roosevelt?

Mr. CHAVEZ. No; the Senator from Rhode Island certainly misunderstood the Senator from New Mexico. What the Senator from New Mexico said was that in my opinion any employee of the Federal Government who believes in the policies of the President of the United States has the inherent right to try to carry out those policies in the only way provided by the Constitution or the law; that is, through politics. How are we to carry on with the administration of this President or any other President unless we elect people who believe in the particular philosophy of government espoused by the President we are supporting, and how are we to elect such people unless we go out and help?

Let me say this to the Senator from Rhode Island, that I was for Roosevelt "before Chicago." I did not become a supporter of President Roosevelt after the nomination at Chicago or after I came to Congress. I was in Congress before Roosevelt was nominated, and there was only one way in which the American people had an opportunity to show that they were for Roosevelt—for the Democrats to get out and get delegates to nominate him for President of the United States at Chicago and for the people to elect the nominee. He may be the best man in the world—and I believe he is—but unless he is nominated neither the Senator from Rhode Island nor I will have an opportunity to vote for him.

Mr. GREEN. Then, let me ask the Senator from New Mexico a further question. If that is his view as to President Roosevelt and his policies, why does he denominate this a Republican rather than a Democratic measure? He alludes to the fact that no Democrats voted against it in the Senate, but a majority of the Democrats of the House voted against it. Why does he ignore the fact that the President of the United States—President Roosevelt, whose policies he claims he supported "before Chicago"—signed the Hatch bill last year, and that yesterday he expressed himself as opposed to any amendment to the Hatch Act?

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct. He did sign the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I demand proof that he stated he was opposed to any amendment. I deny it and demand proof.

Mr. GREEN. I limit the question, then, to the fact that he signed the Hatch bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask, then, how long he took to approve it after it reached his desk.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, whether he signed it or not has not a thing whatsoever to do with whether or not I feel that the legislation is good legislation. The President of the United States has his responsibilities, and on many occasions Congress passes measures which may be contrary to the views of the President, but due to the fact that Congress has acted, he signs the measures. That happens every day in the week. How many times has the Congress of the United States increased appropriations in bills contrary to the financial policy of the President? He would be against that, but Congress having acted, he acted in his capacity, carrying out his functions as the Chief Executive, and signed the measures. The fact that he signed the Hatch bill does not convince me, for one, anyway, that he was so enthusiastic about it.

Mr. GREEN. No; but it does not support the Senator's position, does it, that when no Democratic Senator voted against the bill and a Democratic President signed it, therefore it was a Republican measure?

Mr. CHAVEZ. No. What I maintain is—and it is a fact, and is of record—that a majority of the Democratic Senators expressed their opinion against the bill, the majority of the Democratic Representatives expressed their opinion against the bill, but a majority of Congress voted for the bill, and I respect the law as long as it is the law, but I still think it is a bad law.

Mr. President, only one more point, and I shall have finished. I have stated heretofore that the danger to this country, in my opinion, is "Bureau Washington." I am sincere about this. I know that the people of the States make mistakes, but I know that the people of the States rectify those mistakes at the proper time, and I think that it behooves the citizens of the United States to watch the situation very carefully, or pretty soon we will have a Government by bureaus and not by sovereign States; we will have a Government from Washington and not a Government from Mississippi or Alabama or North Carolina; we will have someone in Washington telling us what we should do instead of having the people of Idaho and elsewhere saying what they want to do. Officials in Washington do coerce; Washington does use the "squeeze play," if I may use that expression, and I have seen it done in my State. I am going to call the attention of my colleagues to an incident in my own State where there was a "squeeze play" from Washington, and what happens in New Mexico happens elsewhere.

Last December, at the insistence of and under threats from "bureau Washington," the board of regents of our State college were forced to discharge a director of the Extension Service in New Mexico, a local employee, who had been appointed by the board of regents chosen by our Governor. I think that the board of regents were wrong; I think they should not have let Washington threaten them the way they did, but someone from Washington went to Las Cruces, N. Mex., and said, "This fellow must get off." They said, "Why?" "Well, we don't agree with him." The man from Washington may have been correct. We happen to have in the State college a local set-up of the Triple A, which employs 63 or 64 persons. This man said, "You either fire this man or we will take away the set-up of the Triple A." When I went to the Department of Agriculture in the city of Washington and complained of those methods, I was told by a high official, whose name I do not care to mention here, "Well, possibly that was the only way they could get away with it."

Mr. President, I do not want such things to happen in any State. I thank the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 9 of the act so that it will read as follows:

SEC. 9. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government or department thereof shall endeavor directly or indirectly to influence the vote or political action of any Federal officer or employee in any degree subject to his orders or directions or whose employment he has power to terminate. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects. For the purposes of this section the term "officer" or "employee" shall not be construed to include (1) the President and Vice President of the United States; (2) persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the office of the President; (3) heads and assistant heads of executive departments; (4) officers who are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who determine policies to be pursued by the United States in its relations with foreign powers or in the Nation-wide administration of Federal laws.

(b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

Mr. HATCH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOWNEY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea" on this question. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am advised, however, that if present and voting, he would vote as I have voted. Therefore, being at liberty to vote, I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MCNARY. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] is paired on this question with the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY]. If present, the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "nay", and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senators from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY and Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. I am advised that, if present and voting, the Senator from Texas would vote "yea" and the Senator from Georgia would vote "nay."

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. I am advised that, if present and voting, the Senator from Utah would vote "yea" and the Senator from Texas would vote "nay."

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] are unavoidably detained. These Senators have a general pair.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 42, as follows:

So Mr. ADAMS' amendment was rejected.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, beginning with line 15, it is proposed to strike down to and including line 18 on page 7.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, every Senator is entirely familiar with the bill, and the amendment is so simple I shall take but a few moments to discuss it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut, who has presented an amendment, the purpose of which is to strike out certain language on pages 4, 5 6, and 7 of the bill, which I take it is all of section 12——

Mr. MALONEY. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Was the Senator present in the Chamber, and did he know that practically all that language has been stricken as the result of the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MALONEY. I was present when the proposal of the Senator from Wyoming was adopted, and I think I am familiar with that amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I was not quite sure whether the Senator from Connecticut understood the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. MALONEY. Yes; I did. I should like to say in that connection, Mr. President, that if the Senator from New Mexico feels that my amendment deserves recognition, and makes the statement that its adoption would destroy the bill, I wish to say, so there may be no misunderstanding, that that is entirely the purpose of the amendment. I am against the bill. I am opposed to section 3 of the bill, and to the bill in its entirety, because I firmly believe that it trespasses upon the rights of States.

I still adhere to the views I held when I first came to the Senate. I have endeavored always to express my opinions, sometimes with little success, occasionally with a degree of success, on measures concerning the rights of States.

It so happens that I am in a politically comfortable position in offering this amendment, because if adopted it would have no favorable effect upon my own political welfare. The administration in my State is entirely Republican, but regardless of what the situation there may be, I should very much dislike to see the Senate take another step of intrusion upon States' rights.

I made the statement in the Senate a long time ago that the rights of States were marching toward death, and this is but another long step in that direction. Without further explanation, I just want to say that I am very hopeful that the amendment will be adopted.

I shall ask for the yeas and nays on this question.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. The question now recurs upon the adoption of the committe amendment, as amended. Therefore, the same thing would be accomplished by a vote on the committee amendment as by a vote on the amendment to strike out.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I am hopeful that the committee amendment will be rejected.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to indulge me to make a brief comment in favor of the amendment offered by the able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] for the reasons already given in the remarks which he made in offering the amendment.

The particular provision in the bill represents an undue aggression of the Federal Government upon what I consider to be the just immunities of the several States.

The language appearing upon page 4 of the bill contains these words:

> No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

It does not say that the officers or employees of the several States shall not take any part in a Federal campaign or a campaign involving the election of a Federal officer. Remember this measure does not deal with Federal employees. It deals with State employees. It is proposed that the Federal Government shall say that no State employee who does not come within the few exceptions contained in the amendment may participate in a municipal election for mayor, a district election, a county election, or a State election. What is the justification for that restriction on the ordinary civil liberties of State employees? The justification is that the Federal Government is contributing certain funds to the agency of which the State employee may happen to be a part.

I am vitally interested to know, therefore, whether or not we are laying down the definite principle that the Federal Government has the right to control—not to prescribe the general conditions for, but to control—the activities of every local agency which is supplemented by Federal funds.

I am interested to know that, Mr. President, because on every possible occasion I have voted for the appropriation of Federal funds in aid of State agencies which were trying to serve the general welfare. I have endeavored to make it possible to vote in even more cases than have appeared before the Senate. I am the author of a bill which contemplates Federal Government aid in the education in the public schools of the country of underprivileged children. But if the pending bill should become a law, and this precedent should be established, every school teacher in my State would come within the restrictive clutch of the Federal power to define what his or her political activities in local—not Federal—affairs may be.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator think the Federal Government has a right to fix the terms upon which money appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States shall be distributed among the States?

Mr. PEPPER. I answer the Senator by saying that the Federal Government has the power; but, if it ever exercises it, it will violate the fundamental concept of the difference between Federal and State power.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, the Senator advocates the distribution of Federal money among all the States without in any way prescribing the terms under which it may be expended?

Mr. PEPPER. I did not go so far as to say "without in any way prescribing the terms under which it may be expended." I do not advocate any restriction upon the Federal power to lay down reasonable terms and conditions surrounding the use of Federal funds; but, of course, it is as Mr. Justice Holmes said. Everything from the Two Tables of Stone up to the present time is a matter of degree. It is all right to prescribe certain broad general standards, as the Federal Government does in making road funds available to the several States. It prescribes a certain type of highway, with certain dimensions, to be constructed according to a certain design, from certain materials. However, that right does not carry as an incident the Federal right to say what the individual employee of a State road department shall do in local politics.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator think there is any degree of difference between the use of money out of the Treasury of the United States to control or affect the election of a Federal officer, and the use of the same money to control the election of a State officer?

Mr. PEPPER. I think there is a very distinct difference, Mr. President.

Mr. BARKLEY. The difference being, if I gather the trend of the Senator's argument, that if a State officer, including the Governor, the secretary of state, the State auditor, or even the chairman of the highway commission, or the State director of the old-age pension system—half the expenses of which are borne by the Federal Government—desires to use not only the money out of the State Treasury, but also money out of the United States Treasury to bring about his election to some State office, a lesser degree of wickedness is attached to that conduct than if a United States Senator, Representative, or some other Federal officer were trying to do the same thing.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am not at all sure that there is a great degree of wickedness—to use the term of my friend the able majority leader—in either case; but I can well understand the reasons of policy which make it a proper exercise of the Federal power in one case and an improper exercise of that power in the other case.

I suggest this reason for that distinction in my mind: There was a State road department in Florida before the Federal Treasury began to contribute Federal funds to the building of roads in that State. The Federal money did not bring into existence the State power to build roads. It may have supplemented it, but the Federal contribution was made because the Federal Government, being concerned about the movement of citizens of the whole country, sought to bear its just share of the construction program.

Mr. BARKLEY. Florida was one of the forward States in the matter of constructing highways. So was North Carolina. So was Illinois. Some States are far ahead of their sister States in the construction of highways. However, I believe that the adoption of the Federal good-roads law operated more effectively to stimulate highway construction in the United States than anything that has been done by any State or by the Federal Government alone in the construction of highways.

The point is not whether or not there was a highway department in the Senator's State or in my State before the passage of the Federal Aid Road Act. It seems to me the gravamen of the whole situation is whether or not a State officer, whatever may be his title, ought to be permitted to use funds out of the United States Treasury—no matter whether they be highway funds, funds for unemployment compensation, or funds for the payment of county agents in the Department of Agriculture within the State or a subdivision of the State—to advance his political fortunes to a greater extent than anybody else ought to be permitted to do so. While I am a stickler for State rights, I do not believe that doctrine ought to be extended to the point of permitting or sanctioning the use of Federal funds by any State official in order to advance his political welfare.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, let me state the question a little differently. I say that merely because the Federal Government makes a just contribution to a State expense, it has no right to deprive State citizens of their normal civic prerogatives under State law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The justice of the contribution to any activity within the State, if it is encouraged and fostered by the Federal Government, is no greater than the justice of the contribution of the Federal Government to any of its exclusive activities. It seems to me the question of justice does not enter into it.

Mr. PEPPER. Surely the Senator makes a distinction between the status of an employee of a State agency whose funds may perchance be supplemented from the Federal Treasury, and that of an employee who owes his official existence to the Federal Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. The difference in the status is that in one case the employee is appointed by State authority, and in the other he is appointed by Federal authority; but in both cases he is spending money out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I invite the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the language on page 4, beginning in line 23:

> When used in the second sentence of this subsection, the term "officer or employee" shall not be construed to include (1) the Governor or the Lieutenant Governor of any State or the mayor of any city; (2) heads of executive departments of any State or municipality; (3) officers who are appointed by the Governor of any State by and with the advice and consent of the legislature or either house thereof, and who determine policies to be pursued by such State in the State-wide administration of State laws; (4) officers holding elective offices.

The officials are excepted from the terms of the bill. The bill applies only to the plain workers in the various States. In a way, the language referred to is a tremendous step toward perpetuating the present State officers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will further yield, the language referred to by my friend from Tennessee is a part of the language of the very amendment on which we are about to vote.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is sought to be stricken out.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Florida is opposing the adoption of the entire amendment. So, if his attitude should prevail and the amendment should be rejected, no part of section 12 would remain in the bill. It would all be eliminated, including the language read by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it ought to be eliminated.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no doubt of that. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that there is no virtue in reading that language, because, if the amendment shall not be agreed to, it will go out.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Kentucky asked the Senator from Florida if the Federal Government does not have the right to dispense its bounty upon such terms as it sees fit, to which the Senator from Florida replied, "Yes." Of course, no one can question that statement so long as the Federal Government writes its laws looking to the dispensation of its bounty for the things it is trying to promote with that bounty, and not in an effort to coerce the States into doing something which, in the first instance, the Federal Government has no right to require to be done. That is the difference between the Federal Government dispensing money upon proper conditions and dispensing it upon improper conditions.

Mr. BARKLEY. Nobody doubts the ability and power of the Federal Government not only to fix the conditions upon which its own money shall be expended, but to appoint in every State the very persons who are to dispense the Federal money. In appropriating funds to the States we have a right to select the employees who are to dispense it.

Mr. MINTON. Nobody would deny that the Federal Government has that right; but the Federal Government has no right to say "We shall dispense this money in a manner which will compel the States to do politically something which the Federal Government has no right to require under its own power."

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not understand that the bill undertakes to compel the States to do anything.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from New Mexico says that is the purpose of it. I have read the provisions of the bill time after time. There is nothing in the bill except coercion of the States.

That is its purpose—Federal power to coerce the States to do something that the States do not want to do but the Federal Government wants to compel them to do.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not understand that the Senator from New Mexico or any other Senator supporting this bill has stated that the bill is intended to compel the States to do anything. It is an effort to prevent State employees receiving Federal funds doing what we will not permit our own employees of the Federal Government to do.

Mr. MINTON. That is a matter of tweedledum and tweedledee. If we are going to prevent them from doing something by action which they themselves would not take, whether it be coercion or not, the result is exactly the same.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky is entirely right. We would not have this legislation before us today if we had not taken the very unusual step of the original Hatch Act, and if after the passage of that act it had not occurred to some people that Federal employees and Federal officeholders were denied the rights held by people in the State governments. If this proposal here today had come before us on its own merits, without the existence of the original Hatch Act, it would be scorned as a horrible intrusion upon the rights of the States. Now the attempt is being made, quite sincerely, of course, to advance the action earlier taken, by bringing in a bill that coerces the States, or, as the Senator from Kentucky points out, prevents the States from doing something; prevents them from managing their own business.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Florida if he desires to proceed with his remarks.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I should like to say to the Senator from Indiana and others who have been stating my position on the floor that I have tried to make quite clear what I seek to accomplish. Let me say that there is another thing the Federal Government is vitally concerned with and vitally interested in; we have a solemn duty and obligation to the people of the United States to see to it that the funds we appropriate of the taxpayers' money shall not be used for corrupting influences in the States or in the Federal Government, either, and while I do not use the phrase "corrupting influence" in any bad sense, experience has taught us that the pernicious political activity of employees of State and city governments, as well as of the Federal Government, is a corrupting and bad influence on the States of the Nation; and the Federal Government has a vital and deep concern in all such matters.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I see very clearly that the proponents of this bill contemplate nothing less than the political emasculation of everybody who happens to be the partial beneficiary of Federal funds. If the argument made by the proponents of this legislation prevails, and we pass it, we had just as well get ready to see the greatest curtailment of Federal expenditures and the greatest curtailment and restriction of Federal extension that we have seen in a long time in this country. There are many who perhaps would like to see that happen.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator have any objection to curtailing the expenditure of the public money of the people of the United States?

Mr. PEPPER. I do have objection, and I will state to the Senator my reason. I am in favor of the bill which is now on the Calendar of the Senate, ably presented by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], which contemplates that the Federal Government shall aid the several States of this Nation in providing adequate education in the public schools of the States.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator want, in providing for the adequate education of the youngsters of America, to fix it so that everyone who gets some Federal money will be required, in order to teach school, to play politics in order to keep his position?

Mr. PEPPER. I will answer the Senator. In making the Federal Government equalize the natural economic differences in the ability of the several States of this country to furnish a fair standard of education to the boys and girls, I do not deem it proper to tell the school teachers who may happen to be the partial beneficiaries of the Federal contribution that they cannot go out and say they support a candidate for superintendent of public instruction in their own counties. That is none of the Federal Government's business.

Mr. CHANDLER. When the Federal Government appropriates money to the several States it has a right to expect that the States where that money is expended will spend it for the purposes for which it was appropriated. If the Federal Congress appropriates money for the Public Health Service, for public charities, and for public schools, we are undertaking to say by this bill—and I would apply it to everybody except the President of the United States, and at one time I thought that I would go that far, but I am not willing to go that far now but would let him say, if he wants to, whom he is for and whom he is against—we are undertaking to say to everybody else who spends the money of the people of the United States or to whom money may be appropriated, if this legislation is ultimately successful, as I believe it will be: "You have public money; devote your time and attention to the job for which you have been selected; we are not going to have a single cent expended for waste or graft or extravagance or political management or manipulation in the United States."

I wish to repeat what I said a couple of days ago. If the Senator does not think that his people in Florida and my people in Kentucky and the people all over America have grown weary, and will continue to grow more weary of present conditions, if the Congress of the United States does not fix it so that the public money cannot be spent for politics and for the perpetuation of people in office in America, and if the policy is not changed here in Congress the people will change it themselves, for some day they are going to send a group of representatives here who will change it.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me there?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield briefly, but I should like to reply to the statement of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MALONEY. Briefly, I should like to comment upon what has just been said. I think the Senator from Kentucky is entirely right, and that the people are greatly worried about the situation to which he refers, but they have one greater worry which I should like to point out, and that is their great worry about the centralization of government. That is one of the outstanding fears of the country right now.

Mr. PEPPER. Of course.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again?

Mr. PEPPER. I should like first to answer the Senator's statement.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not wish to take the Senator's time.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to answer the Senator's statement; then, as soon as I have answered, I will yield to let the Senator propound another question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; go ahead.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to point out to the Senator that his reasoning has proceeded upon the assumption that we will keep State employees from taking Federal money and going out and using it for political purposes. It is just exactly the contrary; and here is the language I am complaining about:

> No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

I am not talking about taking Federal money and going out and hiring automobiles with it, supplying campaign posters to be put up, and inserting advertisements in newspapers; I am saying that the Federal Government, instead of freeing the citizen from anything, is putting upon him Federal shackles of tyranny when it says to the school teacher, in the case, I supposed, that even at nighttime in his or her own time in the community square or in the county courthouse he or she cannot get up and say, "I am here to make a speech for my candidate for superintendent of public instruction."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I take it the Senator is heartily in favor of the purposes of the original law which was to prevent Federal employees taking part in political campaigns?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. How can the Senator take that group of our citizens and tell them, "You shall not do this because you are paid by the Federal Government," and withhold the same restriction from other persons who are paid not in full but in large measure by the Federal Government? In the town of Orlando, Fla., in the Senator's own State, for instance, there are two men living next door to each other. One of them is the deputy collector of internal revenue, working for the United States Government. The Senator says he does not want that individual to take an active part in a political campaign. He thinks it is perfectly right and proper that the deputy collector of internal revenue should not take any part in a political campaign in the State of Florida, because he is paid from the Federal Treasury. Now, the man next door to him is an employee of the State highway department and, we will assume, has his salary paid to the extent of 55 percent, for the purposes of illustration, by a contribution which comes from the Treasury of the United States.

If the principle is sound in the first instance, and those who are on the Federal pay roll should not take any part in politics, the man, although appointed by the State, is 55 percent on the Federal pay roll; and the truth is if it were not for our peculiar system of building highways, which grew up not with any definite plan but evolved into its present shape, 55 percent of that man's salary would be paid by the Federal Government and 45 percent would be paid by the State; and yet when an election or a political campaign comes on the deputy collector of internal revenue and the State highway officer are talking and the State highway officers says, "Come out with me tonight; I want to electioneer for Mr. John Brown who is running for Congress," and the deputy collector of internal revenue says, "I cannot do that because my salary is paid by the Federal Government." But the highway employee says, "55 percent of my salary is paid by the Federal Government; and why should you not have as much right to go out and work for your candidate as I have?"

Leaving aside the State and National situation to which the Senator has alluded as a reason for his opposition, and putting the matter on the mere basis of civilian rights, on the mere basis of equality of opportunity and special privileges to none—which is another old Democratic slogan—does not the Senator think the man who is in the Internal Revenue Department should feel justly aggrieved?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I prefer not to yield until I answer the question of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. There is another question which I should like to ask the Senator to answer at the same time. I hope the Senator from New Mexico will be able to clear up this question in my mind:

Suppose that down in Orlando, Fla., there are twin brothers. They are exact twins. One of them commits the crime of making a mistake in his income-tax return.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Or refuses to answer the census questions. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. All right; we will say he refuses to answer the census questions, and the Federal Government prosecutes him. The other man murders his wife. The county prosecutor, or whatever the prosecuting officer in the State of Florida is called, is a friend of the man who murdered his wife, and decides not to prosecute him. The man admittedly has murdered his wife. His twin brother violates a Federal law by not answering the census questions and goes to the penitentiary; but the brother who murders his wife is allowed to go free in the State of Florida. Would the Senator recommend that the Federal Government should go into the State of Florida and prosecute the man for the murder of his wife?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Washington has, of course, indicated the answer to the questions of the Senator from Maryland. I would put my direct answer in three categories.

In the first place, the employee of the State is not even partially an employee of the Federal Government. In the second place, the thing that is involved in the first case, where restrictions are thrown around the activities of the Federal employee, is only the one question of the extent to which a man's civil status shall be affected by our Federal restriction. In the third place, in the case in which the employee is an employee of the State, we have not only the question of restricting his civil status and prerogatives but we have the very distinctive question in American political philosophy of a transgression upon the sovereignty of the States of the Union.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Just let me make a further statement. The Senator may say, "That is just a technical difference"; but at one time I heard it said that the difference between a man and a woman is just a technical difference. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me say to him that all the distinctions to which he has alluded and worked out to such a point of refinement are only little twigs on the tree of liberty. The trunk of the tree of liberty is equality of treatment; and denial of the right to take part in an election is going almost as far as denial of the right of suffrage.

The Senator can see no objection whatever to having the Federal Public Roads Administration come down to his State and say, "You shall not build in Florida a road that is not 20 feet wide. You shall not build in Florida a road of which we do not approve." The Senator has voted for that over and over again.

Mr. PEPPER. And he will continue to do so.

Mr. TYDINGS. He has allowed the Federal Government to say what kind of roads the taxpayers of the State of Florida shall have, and he has not been at all concerned about it, because he was on the receiving end of the beneficial appropriation.

Mr. PEPPER. Oh, no.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator could go that far to allow this great, big Federal Government to come in and dictate to the sovereign State of Florida what kind of roads it should have, certainly the Federal Government can follow its own money and provide, in the complete expenditure of that money, that there shall be no political influence attached to it.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the able Senator from Maryland is a very distinguished lawyer. He surely could not have been listening a moment ago when, in response to the question of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], I readily conceded to the Federal Government the legal power to do that. I am making an argument on the basis of policy, that it is not desirable for the Federal Government to exercise that power in a case of this kind.

I will distinguish the highway case from the case we are now considering. It does not involve any encroachments upon a civic prerogative for the Federal Public Roads Administration to say, "If you want our contribution in building a national highway system, you must meet Federal specifications for that kind of a project."

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. PEPPER. The dead earth in a State does not feel affronted because a particular type of specification has been insisted upon. It does not have the animate opposition to the encroachment of Federal power that a human being has. We do not get into the question of sovereignty and sovereign immunities when we have that question; but when we say, "We are going to carry the doctrine of the Federal power to its inevitable, logical destination and say that everybody who directly or indirectly receives aid from the Federal Government, and therefore from the country as a whole, must have even the minutiae of his conduct regulated by the Federal power," we have gobbled up every pretense of sovereignty that is left in the political subdivisions of the country.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator has made a good statement there, to the extent that there is no question of the Federal Government having the power to do what has been suggested, but that he wants to put the matter, not upon the contention that we have not the power, but upon the basis of policy.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. I want to put it upon the basis of policy. How can we disfranchise from political influence one citizen who owes his living in whole or in part to the Treasury of the United States, and permit another citizen to exercise such influence? The citizen was created before the State. The people were first created, and the purpose of the State was to serve the people; and the purpose of the Nation which was later created was only to serve the people in a whole way.

So the State and the Federal Government are the servants and not the masters of the people. Therefore, what the Senator has sought to do is to make the State bigger than justice between man and man; bigger than equality between man and man. Without equality there is no democracy and there is no government. So, on the premise of policy, I think the Senator might well consider that there is only one avenue to justice, and that is equality of treatment for all who receive, in whole or in part, their compensation from the Federal Government.

Mr. MINTON and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

Mr. PEPPER. Let me make a comment, and then I will yield to the Senator from Indiana, and then to the Senator from Kentucky.

I will say to the Senator from Maryland that, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] a moment ago indicated, there are many instances in which there is a disparity between similar situations in the State jurisdiction and in the Federal jurisdiction. For example, under the Federal law, if a man is convicted of committing a homicide, first-degree murder, he is hanged. In my State, if he receives a similar conviction in the State court, he is electrocuted in the electric chair. Yet the Senator from Maryland, pursuing his logic to a conclusion, would say, "I insist that similarity of execution must be inflicted upon both—those who are the victims of the State power and those who are the victims of the Federal power."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will again yield, his premise cannot be sound, because the man who commits murder in Florida commits murder under a State law, while the man who commits murder on a military reservation commits it under a national law.

Mr. PEPPER. That is the distinction I am pointing out.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the instant case, the point at issue, whether a man is a State employee paid in part by Federal funds, or whether he is a Federal employee paid entirely by Federal funds, he is working under one Federal law, and all I am asking is that the Senator stand by what he has just said—that we should not have two standards of justice for the violation of one Federal offense.

Mr. PEPPER. I point out to the Senator that we have been having two standards ever since there has been a Federal Government—a Federal system imposed upon a State system.

Mr. TYDINGS. But the Senator is now advocating, and I think he will be fair enough to admit it, that there shall be two standards. If you are paid in full by the Federal Government, a certain standard shall apply. If you are paid 90 percent by the Federal Government, that standard shall not apply. I want it to apply with equality to all.

Let me say that I did not vote for the Hatch Act the first time it came up, although I doubt whether any man in this Chamber had greater personal grounds to support it than I had. I voted for it the second time with some misgivings. I questioned then what the Senator is arguing now, but there was no one to listen, and certainly I was not the one to make a fight to defeat the measure when I knew the injustices that might occur as a result of Federal influence in State elections. I say to the Senator that the biggest thing in this law is the preservation of what we call democracy. With the years that are ahead, with war, with deficits, with unemployment, we cannot throw too many safeguards around elections if we want democracy to survive.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, what the Senator calls democracy I have heard him on previous occasions call "the tendency of the Federal Government to usurp the whole prerogative of government in America."

Mr. TYDINGS. That is just my point, and I was not enthusiastic about the original law, but now that we have it, and the Senator from Florida voted for it, let us make it apply to all alike.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana, and then I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland pitches his argument on the basis of equality.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. MINTON. And he cited a couple of examples; one of a man employed on the Federal pay roll as deputy collector of internal revenue and the other on a State highway activity for which he receives some Federal funds, and they live as neighbors. On the basis of equality, because I do not favor taking Federal employees out of politics or State employees out of politics——

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course not.

Mr. MINTON. I want to get them all in. The more people in, the better——

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. MINTON. My proposition would be like this: Here are twin brothers, using the illustration of the Senator from Washington—a couple of "Gold Dust twins," such as we have seen around here. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. Siamese twins.

Mr. MINTON. One of them works on the State highways, for which he receives some Federal funds. The other works, we will say, for Tom Girdler, who is politically minded. If the Hatch bill passes as it is before us now, the one who works for the State highway cannot go out and take any part in a political campaign, to protect his own job, and work for the man who got him his job, and support the party which put him to work; but the follow who works for Tom Girdler can go out and do every political trick in the book that Tom Girdler tells him to do, and not only protect his own job, but probably improve his position. Is that equality?

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator want me to answer? May I have the time, I ask the Senator from Florida?

Mr. MINTON. One man is proscribed merely because he holds a job on a project to which the Federal Government makes a contribution.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to reply?

Mr. MINTON. That is the only distinction between them, for they are twins.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, to my mind the illustration answers itself. I do not think I even have to utter a sentence. According to his statement, the Senator would not have any civil service for Federal employees.

Mr. MINTON. I would not, if the Senator asks me.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I thought.

Mr. MINTON. The civil service does not protect those who are outlawed by the Hatch bill; the civil service does not protect those whom the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] proposes to outlaw by the bill——

Mr. TYDINGS. The point I make is——

Mr. MINTON. The civil service has not anything to do with these poor people. They are not protected by civil service at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. The point I make is that if we follow the Senator's premise, as I see it, to its logical conclusion, we would not have any restriction at all as to anyone who works in any department anywhere for the Federal Government; but while possibly our policy has sometimes been foolish, sometimes ill-advised, in the main our impulse has been to throw around Federal employees in governmental life certain restrictions as abuses have occurred.

There was a time when every Member of Congress had passes on the railroads of the country, but abuses took place as a result of that system, and today, as I understand, one cannot have a pass on a railroad in this country and be a Member of Congress. So even a little regulation like that is the result of an abuse. Therefore, what we are attempting to do here—whether we have done it in the right way or not I am not arguing—is to eliminate one more abuse which interferes with the machinery of that which we call a constitutional democracy.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will permit me to make one observation to the Senator from Maryland, he pitched his argument on the high plane of equality. My proposition was pitched upon the same plane, and the man whom I cited as an example was not in any more of an equal position than the one to whom the Senator referred, whatever the collateral arguments may be.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator has a point there, except that we have the Hatch Act on the statute books. Let us make the Hatch Act apply to all who are affected by this philosophy, or repeal it. That is a different matter. But so long as it remains on the books let us have equality of treatment for all under it and make no exceptions.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator's argument, then, comes down to this: Since we have done one bad thing, let us make it worse.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; but if we make everyone in the country except five people pay 10 cents on a hundred dollars as a tax rate, I want to take those five in and make them bear their burden, too. Taxes should fall equally, and so should the responsibilities of government.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield now to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator has gotten considerably away from the point about which I wanted to inquire a few moments ago. He stated earlier in his remarks that if the new Hatch bill shall be enacted into law the amount of Federal contributions to the States and to the various counties will be materially curtailed. I assume he meant by that to intimate that rather than give up their political control over men appointed by them, the legislatures and Governors of the States would withdraw their requests for or their acceptance of Federal funds. Is that what the Senator meant?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I will state very clearly what I meant. I meant, I will say to our able leader, that if the States, because they accept some Federal aid, have to bow down and accept Federal dictation in respect to the minutiae of the conduct of their citizens, I hope to heaven that they will at least have sufficient pride in their hearts to repudiate promptly all Federal aid.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that in order to continue to control the political activities of the people appointed by the States and employed on the highways, or receiving unemployment insurance, all of which is paid by the Federal Government, for the States make no contribution at all to the payment of unemployment compensation, or the payment of the agents appointed by the State, in case of county agents, or in the case of anyone else appointed by the State government to administer funds contributed by the Federal Government, rather than give up their political control of those appointees, the States would withdraw their acceptance of Federal contributions. I dare say there is not a Governor or a legislature in the United States that on any such pretext would withdraw a request for or acceptance of Federal money.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator has asked a fair question, and he is entitled to a fair answer. The distinction I make is that I would not preserve to the State or any State machine or any State agency or officer a right to dictate to their employees who are partial beneficiaries of Federal funds. I do not profess any desire whatever to preserve that prerogative to them, but I do protest against this language and this sentiment being included in the law:

> No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

I am saying that it is not the power of the boss I am trying to preserve; it is the political and civic liberty of the individual citizen of the municipality, county, or State, who would not be protected because the agency for which he works happens to get some of its funds from the Federal Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield, that is precisely the principle for which I am contending, and for which I think the Senator from New Mexico and all others who are supporting the proposed legislation are contending, that is, the liberty of the individual citizen to be free from domination on the part of anyone who has been responsible for his appointment. I contend that no State officer and no Federal officer has any inherent right to dominate or coerce any citizen as to the way he shall vote.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Therefore all we are proposing to do is to provide that whenever such officials use Federal funds they shall not undertake to use their power or their influence. They may have the power to influence the employees, but they do not have the right. That is the difference between the Senator's contention and mine.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is ignoring the distinction in the section. The first part of the bill, the earlier part of it, and the original Hatch Act, do proscribe intimidation, coercion, and the like, on the part of the officeholder, the employer, as it were, under whom the employee works. That is not in controversy here. I will ask the Senator to listen to this language:

> No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

I am not talking about the boss influencing the employee; I am saying that the language against which I remonstrate restricts the liberty of the individual school teacher, if the State gets Federal funds for its schools, or of the individual militiaman, if the National Guard of the State gets Federal funds, and restricts the political activity of the private citizen, in a way, with respect to a local purpose only, with which the Federal Government should not be concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has mentioned school teachers. I am familiar with the teaching profession. I myself once taught school. I think if there is anything for which the school teachers of America contend and stand it is the right of all school teachers to exercise the right of suffrage as they see fit, and I am sure the Senator knows that in many cases those who are responsible for the appointment of school teachers undertake to dominate them in order that someone may be elected on the school board who will guarantee that they will be retained as teachers in the schools where they have taught. I have seen it happen, and every other Senator I am sure is familiar with the fact, that often, in order to get a school trustee elected, the teachers exercise their influence with the children and the children's parents in order that some man or woman may be elected as a trustee who will guarantee that they will be reappointed as teachers.

Certainly no Federal funds contributed for education should be used by any power, any authority, which has the determination as to whether or not a school teacher shall be reappointed, and certainly no such authority should be turned loose to exercise that sort of control over the school teachers of the United States. I think that evil and that possibility and that power outweigh any damage which may come to the individual school teacher from providing that he or she may not go out and make speeches or become campaign manager for someone running for office.

Mr. PEPPER. I think the Senator from Kentucky is overlooking the fact that there are at least two provisions in the bill. The first lines of section 12 contain an element of the suggestion to which the Senator has addressed himself, in these words:

> No officer or employee of any State or local agency who exercises any function in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency shall use his official authority or influence—

I interpolate the word "official" before the word "influence" also—> for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof.

In that portion of the section reference is made to the employer, the head of the department, as it were, not being permitted to use his official influence for the purpose of coercing his employees. In addition to that, Mr. President, the section contains the language which I have quoted before, namely:

No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. The Senator from Florida suggested a while ago that the bill would apply to the National Guard. Is that a considered opinion?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have not made any serious or prolonged study of the question, but what I meant to say was that if we pass this bill, and then are consistent in principle, we should also say that no National Guard member, no member of the State militia, can take any part in local political campaigns in his State, because a part of the State militia's income is derived from Federal contributions. I say that is going far outside the scope of the power we should exercise.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. In view of what the Senator from Florida has just said, I should like to ask him if he can visualize the logical extension of this kind of legislation a little later to affect the veterans who receive pensions from the Government?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. MALONEY. And, carried further to a logical conclusion, legislation affecting all those who receive unemployment insurance and old-age pensions under the Social Security Act?

Mr. PEPPER. Of course. Mr. President, if we once establish the precedent that whenever we appropriate Federal money we shall insist upon the prerogative of controlling the minutiae of the conduct of those who receive that money, we might just as well obliterate any pretense of distinction between the Federal and the State Governments.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to carry the suggestion made by the Senator from Connecticut a step farther. If taken to its logical conclusion, the next step is to provide that if the State does not do something which is required by the Federal Government, it will not receive Federal funds.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. And it would be quite logical to say that no Federal funds would be given any State which would not elect Democratic Senators.

Mr. PEPPER. That may be entirely plausible.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator believe that the Congress of the United States would do such a thing as pass a law requiring the election of only Democratic Senators?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator was bringing the thing to a logical conclusion or extreme, and I said that, consistent with that principle, the Congress had the power to do it. Does the Senator deny the Federal power to do it?

Mr. HATCH. Let me say to the Senator, who has always been very liberal in his views with respect to the extension of the Federal power——

Mr. PEPPER. That is the reason I spoke of it.

Mr. HATCH. I have heard the Senator speak on that subject, and I am somewhat amazed at his present attitude. I wish to say that whenever the Congress of the United States shall pass a law requiring the election of Democratic or Republican Senators, the Senator need not worry about laws or anything else.

Mr. PEPPER. Of course, the Senator knows that that is simply carrying the matter to its logical extreme. I said to the Senator from Kentucky that if we have the power to regulate the conduct of persons who receive Federal money in one case, I assume we have the power to regulate it in another case. As to whether or not the illustration suggested is carrying it to a logical absurdity, there may be a difference of opinion.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Did the Senator vote for the Social Security Act?

Mr. PEPPER. On the final vote I voted "no," but I am in favor of it, and that vote was only because of the failure of the Senate to adopt the Connally amendment.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is in favor of that measure?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. It goes further than this bill does.

Mr. PEPPER. I may not have understood the Senator's question completely.

Mr. HATCH. I refer to the merit system in the States.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes. Does the Senator suggest——

Mr. HATCH. I do not suggest anything.

Mr. PEPPER. Let me answer that question. I admit—and I so stated in answer to the question of the Senator from Kentucky. I admit not only the power but the desirability of the Federal Government to prescribe fair condition for the receipt of Federal funds. I said that in my response to the able Senator from Missouri yesterday. I deny neither the power to prescribe nor the desirability of the Federal Government prescribing reasonable conditions.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield there?

Mr. PEPPER. I will yield in a moment. In the case of the social security fund, to say that the employees who are to spend the money should be competent employees and be selected by fair standards of competency, I do not regard as an unreasonable violation of the sovereignty of the State; but to say to them, "You must not only be competent, you must not only be chosen by fair standards of competency, but we are going to tell you how you must spend your time at night, whom you may speak to on the street corners, what you can say in the courthouse on Saturday afternoon when you are not on your job"—I say that that in high degree is an improper extension of the Federal power.

Mr. HATCH. Yet, Mr. President, the identical rule against political activity is now applied to the employees to whom the Senator just referred.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is not talking about all the employees of the social security fund.

Mr. HATCH. I am talking about those in the States for whom we set up standards under congressional authority, and we made the State set up standards, among which were requirements against political activity. There is no difference in the world between the purpose then sought and the one we are arguing for today, except that the restriction in the case of social-security matters goes ten times further.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the only answer I can make is the one I made to the Senator from Maryland. It is a question of degree, and a question of the reasonableness of the regulations under the circumstances in question.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, let me say that I differ with the Senator. It is not entirely a question of degree. In this case the provision is that if a State employee in a department that receives Federal funds shall engage in politics, then he shall be discharged; if he shall be reemployed in any department in the State, then a penalty shall be imposed upon some other agency—in other words, an agency in which he was not employed—which was not involved in the matter.

Mr. HATCH. I do not want that suggestion to go unanswered. The Senator was correct as to the original bill. That has already been modified and taken care of.

Mr. PEPPER. Let me answer what was intimated a moment ago by the Senator from New Mexico as to why I, who consistently have voted for Federal funds, had taken the position I did in this matter. I wish to answer that question. It is because I make the same distinction in my political philosophy which I understand Justices Holmes, Brandeis, Frankfurter, and Black, and perhaps other members of the Federal Supreme Court, have made in their determination relative to the extent of the Federal power. I mean that in the realm of economics, in the realm of the adjustment of economic maladjustments, in the realm of economic experimentation, in dealing with conditions which in the very nature of things must affect the whole extent of the country, I think there is a just Federal prerogative. But when the effort is made to extend the Federal power to encroach upon civil rights that are not indigenous and not related to the whole country, we have a different situation.

A few days ago Mr. J. Edgar Hoover was down in my State purporting to clean up the city of Miami. He sent his emissaries, I know, to the offices of at least six sheriffs in that State, and called the sheriffs of the State before a group of his hired men. The first question he asked them was, "How much graft are you taking in? How much are you sending to Tallahassee?" I protested against it. I do not care if J. Edgar Hoover had stood like Elisha to catch the mantle of Elijah when it descended from his predecessor who ascended into heaven. I do not care how noble he is. He has no right to police State offenses. And I was particularly pleased to hear the able Senator from Nebraska make an inquiry of the Attorney General of the United States to know whether or not the Federal Bureau of Investigation was trying to become an agency to police every one of the minute crimes of this country. I have been for the Bureau 100 percent, and I am still for it, but however much good it may have done, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has no right to police violations of municipal law, county law, or State law in my State.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. That is just what would happen if a garbage collector in the Senator's State should violate the law, is it not?

Mr. PEPPER. Of course, it is. If we permit its continued expansion, we shall engulf the sovereignties of this country beneath the Federal Government.

Mr. President, I do not want to see a revulsion in sentiment which will destroy the Federal Bureau of Investigation. I do not want to see a revulsion in sentiment which will make the State highway departments say to the Federal Government, "No; we will not take your money at the price of our own ignominy."

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Can the Senator give the Senate any opinion or has he any notion as to how many men would be required to make the necessary investigations in an election year, or the number of complaints which would be made to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the number is incalculable. The Senator knows, as I know, that the law would never be enforced, because we could not practically enforce it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Take the case of a State in which those who are in elective public office are all Republicans. Is it not a fact that under those circumstances, if this bill should become a law and the provisions of the Hatch Act were extended into the States, the Democrats would find ways and means to lodge with the Civil Service Commission in Washington, D. C., every conceivable type of complaint against the Republicans in power?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. And would not the same situation arise with respect to Democrats in power? Would not the boys who are smart in politics on the Republican side use every conceivable means and effort to lodge every kind and character of complaint with the Civil Service Commission between now and the fall election in order to create a false impression as to what is being done by those in control of the affairs of government in the State of Illinois? Compared to the present situation, would not that sort of activity be the most outrageous character of pernicious political activity that could be imagined?

Mr. PEPPER. I think the situation the Senator contemplates would be practically unavoidable with such a law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield if the Senator from Illinois has concluded.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to make one further observation along that line. If the prophecy of the Senator from Illinois should be correct, how much money and how many more employees would be required in connection with the enforcement of such a law? How many more employees would be required in the field to make an investigation, as the proposed law requires, upon every legitimate complaint that comes along? We had better add some money, if it is proper to do so in this bill, properly to enforce the law.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is correct in foreseeing that it would require more employees than the effort to enforce the prohibition law ever required, and would be equally futile.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the Senator noted published statements, and heard statements to the effect that the Civil Service Commission is now very greatly behind in its work of merely grading the examination papers of new applicants for Federal jobs?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the Senator further noticed the statement that $250,000 is now being requested by the Civil Service Commission in addition to its regular appropriation?

Mr. ADAMS. $400,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. $400,000 is now being requested by the Civil Service Commission to enable it to catch up with its present work.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the pending bill should become law, how much does the Senator estimate would be required in addition for the Civil Service Commission to make all the necessary investigations, obtain evidence, and follow the prosecutions of the cases?

Mr. PEPPER. In my humble opinion, the United States Army itself would not have enough members properly to police such a law in this country.

Mr. President, I stated a moment ago that I am concerned about this question as a matter of philosophy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very much concerned about the question just asked, and the answer of the Senator. The proposed new section 15 provides as follows:

> SEC. 15. The United States Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized and directed to promulgate, as soon as practicable, rules or regulations defining, for the purposes of this act, the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns." After the promulgation of such rules or regulations, the term "active part in political management or in political campaigns," as used in this act, shall have the meaning ascribed to it by such rules or regulations. The Commission is authorized to amend such rules or regulations from time to time as it deems necessary.

In other words, every single appropriation that the Congress may make now or hereafter will in effect come under the supervision of the Civil Service Commission. I think the Senator is correct in stating that an immense amount of money would be required to administer such an act. I wonder whether or not the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] can tell us how much money would be required in the event the bill should pass. How much money would he expect to ask for in the beginning?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that I am not as pessimistic about employees and officials of the United States Government as some other Senators seem to be. I am not so doubtful of the integrity and honesty of those officials and the law-abiding qualities of the citizens of the United States as to think that any law which is laudable and right cannot be enforced without calling in the United States Army and all the resources of the Treasury to enforce it.

I will tell the Senator what will happen under such a law. I will tell him what will happen in my State, and I believe also in the State of the Senator from Tennessee and in the State of the Senator from Colorado. When the law is once thoroughly understood, I think it will be obeyed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator is somewhat of an optimist.

Mr. HATCH. I would rather be an optimist than a pessimist.

Mr. McKELLAR. All my life I have been, and still am, one of the most ardent of prohibitionists. I thought anything that would do away with liquor was necessarily good and righteous. The Senator entertains similar views with respect to the proposed law. I did not believe any power could prevent the United States Government from enforcing the prohibition law; and yet I lived to see the day when it was not enforced anywhere under any circumstances. Why? Because the law was in opposition to a desire on the part of many of our people to drink.

A similar inclination exists in connection with politics. I believe nine-tenths of our people are very greatly interested in politics, and therefore are likely to take an interest in politics when they ought not to do so. I believe an enormous sum of money would be required to enforce the provisions of the proposed act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question. Is it not a fact that too much talking by Federal employees would constitute a violation of the proposed law? In that connection, is it not as natural to want to talk as it is to want to drink?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I think it is even more natural to want to talk than to drink. [Laughter.] I would rather talk than drink, because I do not drink.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I see no analogy whatever between the enforcement of the proposed law and the enforcement of the prohibition law. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that if he had received the expressions I have received from a great many employees throughout the country—some of them anonymous communications from persons afraid to sign their names—he would not feel quite as he feels today. Many employees are afraid of their jobs every day on account of the political activity demanded of them. They would gladly surrender the right to engage in political activity if they could be relieved from the threat and intimidation under which they constantly live. Even those appointed by patronage methods know they are going out by the same method. They live by the sword, and they will die by the sword. The whole thing is wrong.

In the long run, there will not be much difficulty about enforcing the proposed law. At first, of course, there will be plenty of evasions, which will cause trouble; but in the long run, with the educational processes of the country going on, enforcement will not be too difficult.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order that I may ask one further question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I asked the Senator how much money would be required to enforce the proposed law. The Appropriations Committee has just finished the consideration of one deficiency bill, which it will report tomorrow; and in a few days we shall have another. How much money will the Senator ask for, through the proper authorities?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have conferred with the Civil Service Commission, and I have been informed that they can handle the job. However, on the question of money, let me say that if we can effectively stop the political activity of employees of the Federal Government and of the States, we shall save the Government of the United States and the governments of the States many times the cost of enforcing the proposed law.

Mr. McKELLAR. One further question, and I shall have concluded. If the proposed law is such a splendid thing for the great body of people, why does it except the Governor or the Lieutenant Governor of any State, the mayor of any city, the heads of executive departments of any State or municipality, officers who are appointed by the governor of any State by and with the advice and consent of the legislature or either house thereof and who determine policies to be pursued by such States in the State-wide administration of the State laws, and officers holding elective offices? If it is such a good thing, it seems to me the language exempting those classes ought to come out. I think the law should apply to Senators and to Governors. I do not think we should set up any favored classes to be exempted from the provisions of the proposed law. No persons in the world are more interested in politics than are the very ones who are excepted under the provisions of the bill.

Who is more interested in politics, I ask, than the Governor or the Lieutenant Governor of a State, or the mayor of a city, or heads of executive departments, or officers who are appointed by the State by and with the advice and consent to the legislature or either house thereof and who determine State policies in the State-wide administration of State laws, or ourselves? Who is more interested in politics than the 96 Members of this body—in low, debasing, corrupt politics, if you want to call it that? I do not call it that because I do not think that way about it. I do not believe we are in debased or dishonest offices in this body; but if we are going to pass a law for the general run of people I think we ought to make it apply to ourselves, who are the chief among politicians.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator started out by asking me a question. Then he included a great many other questions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just let the Senator answer the question. I want to know how much money the Senator is going to ask for in the deficiency bill which will soon come before the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has passed that matter. He wants to know why certain officials were exempted.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to have that information, too. The Senator did not answer the first question. I hope he will answer the second one.

Mr. HATCH. I am sure the Senator did not hear me on yesterday, when I explained quite carefully, and as best I could, the difference between policy-making officials, such as he has described, and others. There are such things as political offices. The Senator occupies one; and, of course, there are a few things like State and Federal constitutional provisions as a result of which we could not require the removal of such an officer.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Constitution apply to all persons alike? I did not know that I belonged to one class under the Constitution, and that the man who works here in a subordinate capacity belongs to another class. I think our Constitution applies to everybody.

Mr. HATCH. Let the Senator get this point, and see if there is any difference: The man who works here may be fired, may he not, by his superintendent, and thus lose his job?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and we may be fired, too. Do not forget that. We may be fired.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator may be removed from office only by impeachment proceedings. He may be impeached and removed from his office.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; the people may fire us whenever they wish. They are our employers. They may fire us whenever we do not do right, and sometimes even when we do right. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I desire to answer the suggestion of lack of power which to my very great surprise was apparently intimated by the able Senator from New Mexico. Does the Senator mean to say that the Federal Government has power to say that an employee of a State road department who may happen to be the partial beneficiary of Federal funds may be regulated with respect to his political activity, but a constitutional officer having supervision over a State road department, in spite of the fact that it receives Federal funds, is immune from Federal regulation?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have never said anything of the kind.

Mr. PEPPER. I thought the Senator answered that these constitutional officers could not be removed or affected.

Mr. HATCH. I said the processes were entirely different. A highway employee and a Governor are not comparable, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. PEPPER. But do we have the power?

Mr. HATCH. No; I say we do not have the power to remove the highway employees.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Federal Government have power to provide that funds which the Federal Government makes available to a State road department may be revoked by the Civil Service Commission, provided the Governor of the State takes part in a political campaign? Have we that power?

Mr. HATCH. We may exercise power over our own funds in any manner or way that is wise. Certainly that would not be a wise way in which to exercise it.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator does not deny, then, that the Federal Government has power to regulate the political conduct of a Governor, and that we could strike out the exceptions on pages 4 and 5, and the legal validity of the bill would not be affected?

Mr. HATCH. I made that plain. On the floor of the Senate I pointed out not only what I have said but what our party has said and our President has said as to the difference between policy-making officials and other employees. A Govenor comes within the definition of a policy-making official.

Mr. PEPPER. But the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] awhile ago, and others, have said that everybody should be dealt with similarly. I myself have made the distinction between power and the desirability of the exercise of power. So I understand the Senator from New Mexico to admit that the Congress has power to include within the terms of its regulation governors and other State officials, constitutional or not.

Mr. HATCH. I think the Congress has power to impose any restrictions it cares to impose upon the expenditure of funds it appropriates.

Mr. PEPPER. That is what I thought. I do not disagree with the legal answer the Senator has given. That is the tragedy of this law, and the danger of it.

Mr. President, I have a few more remarks to make. If the leader is willing to subscribe to a unanimous-consent agreement that I may resume my remarks at the beginning of the session tomorrow, with the understanding that I shall not take over 10 or 15 minutes, I shall appreciate it; but, of course, I can conclude now if he would like to have me do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am willing to suspend now.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I improve this opportunity to give notice that as soon as I can obtain the floor tomorrow I shall demonstrate beyond the possibility of a doubt that there is great necessity for drastic legislation on the subject now before the Senate; second, that the bill in its present form is not sufficient; and, third, that the substitute I have offered will, if enacted, provide effective relief for the political disease which every honest man and woman in the country desires to exterminate.

AMERICAN VESSELS DETAINED BY BELLIGERENTS

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield in order that I may put something in the RECORD?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD—not in the Appendix—a tabulation of American vessels detained by belligerents since the outbreak of the war. There have been 108 ships reported to the State Department as detained in that period, 90 being held by Great Britain, 14 by France, and 4 by Germany.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the tabulation will be printed in the RECORD.

The tabulation is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MARCH 7, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, strong to save, hear us when we call to Thee. O Thou, the unaging Christ, who hast suffered for every sin-convicted heart; Thou Holy Spirit, the Divine comforter, who didst brood upon the waters and bade the wild confusion cease; O Holy Trinity of love, mercy, and power, enable us by faith to cling to Thee. Incline our hearts to wisdom, our souls to love, and our lives to faith that the sweetening streams of the higher humanities may flow forth, unfolding and revealing Thy holy will in this changing world. By Thy help may we forsake every known evil, retire into the hushed depths of our own being and pray to God who wears the robes of the universe: "O Lord, make bare Thine arm and Thy righteous will be done." O lift us beyond the dust of matter into the morning realms of hope and vision where the tree of life spreads its branches, and here may we yearn for a deeper rest not known before. In the holy name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 685) entitled "An act to create a Division of Water Pollution control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. SHEPPARD, and Mr. MCNARY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. J. Res. 206. Joint resolution creating a joint committee to arrange for the celebration of the sesquicentennial anniversary of the signing of the first United States patent law.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of a majority of the committee, of which I am chairman, to investigate the National Labor Relations Board, I have this morning introduced certain amendments to the National Labor Relations Act, which have been referred to the Committee on Labor.

As it is somewhat difficult to ascertain what the amendments really mean by simply reading the amendments themselves, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD to include an explanatory statement of the purpose and effect of the amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. And may I say, Mr. Speaker, while I regret very deeply the inability of the committee to submit a unanimous report as to the amendments, nevertheless I believe that each member of the committee has striven earnestly and honestly to reconcile our views. It is now up to the Members of this House as to whether they wish to take action at this session of the Congress on the National Labor Relations Act.

I wish to say further that the committee has spent weeks in the preparation of these amendments and I think we can assure the House that there is nothing contained in them that will emasculate the act or diminish the right of collective bargaining or the means of enforcing that right, as guaranteed by the act. We have, however, sought to insure to both employer and employee fair, just, and honest treatment. [Applause.]

The matter referred to follows:

EXPLANATION BY SUBJECTS OF AMENDMENTS RECOMMENDED

The amendments to the National Labor Relations Act which the committee recommends be enacted are submitted in the form of a bill.

ABOLITION OF PRESENT BOARD

The amendments recommended provide for the abolition of the present National Labor Relations Board and the creation of a new Board of three members to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than two of the members are to be members of the same political party. The new Board is to have the same name as the present Board. There are no restrictions placed on the power of the President to appoint the members of the present Board to the new Board.

SEPARATION OF PROSECUTING AND JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS

The bill proposes to separate the prosecuting and judicial functions under the National Labor Relations Act by distributing the powers and duties under the act between the new Board, which is to exercise the judicial functions on the one hand, and a new officer, to be known as the Administrator of the National Labor Relations Act, who is to exercise the prosecuting functions, on the other hand. The Administrator is to be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and is to have no connection whatsoever with the Board. The new Board is given power to appoint employees necessary to the exercise of its judicial functions, and the Administrator is given power to appoint employees necessary to the exercise of his prosecuting functions. Whereas under the present act charges of unfair labor practices are made to the regional directors of the Board, and complaints based on those charges are issued by the Board through the regional directors, under the amendments recommended charges will be filed with the Administrator or his regional director. All the preliminary investigations in relation to charges made will be carried out by the Administrator, and if he has reason to believe that the charges are true, he, and not the Board, will issue the complaints. Under the present act, the time and place for a hearing is designated in the complaint. Under the recommended amendments, the complaint issued by the Administrator will be filed with the new Board, and that Board will fix the time and place for a hearing thereon, which cannot be less than 15 days after the service of the complaint. It is hoped that this change will do away with the practice brought out in the hearing before the committee of fixing "phoney" hearing dates for use as a lever to force a settlement. The amendments recommended make it the duty of the Administrator to prosecute the complaint before the Board or before its trial examiner conducting the hearing. The Board has no prosecuting function whatever, but is to sit merely as a judge to determine the facts from the opposing contentions of the Administrator, with his witnesses, and the person complained against, with his witnesses. The Administrator is required to be made a party to all proceedings before the Board and to take such action therein as he deems necessary. Orders of the Board are to be enforced in the courts, not upon application by the Board as under the present law, but upon application of the Administrator. Such application is required to be made when the Board so requests, or may be made by the Administrator on his own motion.

Similarly, proceedings to review an order of the Board are brought by the party aggrieved, as petitioner, against the Administrator, as respondent, and the Administrator, rather than the Board, has the function of bringing to the attention of the court the reasons why the order of the Board should stand and be enforced. Thus, the Board is not required to act as advocate in relation to a matter which it has decided as judge. Since it has no prosecuting functions, the Board is given no power to subpena any witnesses, but is required, upon application by the Administrator or any party to proceedings before the Board, whether before or during a hearing, forthwith to issue subpenas to the Administrator or such party, as the case may be, for the attendance of witnesses or production of evidence. The issuance of a subpena is to be done as a matter of course, but if a person is required by any subpena to produce evidence under his control, and he thinks that such evidence has no bearing on the inquiry in progress, or that the subpena does not describe with sufficient particularity the evidence whose production is required, he may move the Board to revoke the issuance of the subpena, and the Board is required to revoke the issuance of the subpena if it agrees with him. These changes in provisions relating to the subpena power will do away with any prior restraint upon the issuance of subpenas, and at the same time adequately protect persons from fishing expeditions. Under the amendments recommended, enforcement of a subpena against one who disregards it is to be had in court upon application of the person to whom the subpena was issued rather than upon application of the Board as under the present law.

REPRESENTATION CASES

Substantial changes are made by the amendments recommended in the power of the Board in relation to determining units appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining and certifying representatives for collective bargaining. Under the amendments, the Board is precluded from acting in these cases on its own motion, and is permitted to act only upon application by an employer under specified circumstances, or upon application by a specified percentage of, or by a representative representing a specified percentage of, employees. When such an application is made, the Board is required to hold a hearing, and if as a result of the hearing it determines that the statements in the application are true and that the question is one affecting commerce, it is required by order first to determine the unit appropriate for collective bargaining. That unit can't be larger than the largest unit claimed as appropriate in an application filed by employees or representatives in the proceeding. After determining the unit appropriate for collective bargaining, the Board is required to take a secret ballot of employees in that unit, and by order certify the representative or representatives for collective bargaining that have been chosen by a majority of the employees voting. This certification is to be effective for 1 year. Thus during this period both employees and employer will be free from controversies with respect to employee representatives.

The power of the Board to determine the unit appropriate for collective bargaining has one important exception. In cases where there is a dispute between two or more labor organizations, each of which in their applications in the proceeding claim to represent a majority of the employees in the unit claimed by such labor organization to be appropriate, as to the unit or units appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining, the Board is required to make a finding to that effect, and is given no power in such cases to determine the appropriate unit or units until such labor organizations have by written agreement settled such dispute, or to determine any unit to be appropriate which is not specified and claimed to be such in the agreement.

Where a dispute as to the unit or units appropriate for collective bargaining exists, the employer is protected by providing that it is not an unfair labor practice for him to refuse to bargain with either faction.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND OF THE PRESS

Questions have arisen under the present law as to whether section 8 (1) of the act, making it an unfair labor practice to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of their rights to self-organization and collective bargaining, prohibits an employer from expressing his opinion with respect to matters which may be of interest to employees or to the general public. Obviously, no law of Congress can interfere with the freedom of speech or of the press guaranteed in the Bill of Rights. Hence, a clarifying change is made in section 8 (1) of the act to provide that nothing therein is to be construed or interpreted as prohibiting any expressions of opinion with respect to any matter which may be of interest to employees or to the general public, provided that such expressions of opinion are not accompanied by acts or threats of discrimination, intimidation, or coercion.

RULES OF EVIDENCE

Under the present law the rules of evidence prevailing in the courts of law or equity are not controlling in Board hearings. This requirement—and it has been construed as a requirement by the Board's trial examiners—has had the effect of making records unduly long, as well as permitting the Board to make findings based upon, and to draw inferences from, evidence which under the most liberal rules would never be admissible in a court of law. The character of controversies which the Board decides is not such that the rules of evidence must be relaxed to any great extent in order that substantial justice may be done or vigorous enforcement of the act effected. Thus, the committee has recommended that the proceedings before the Board or before its trial examiners shall, so far as practicable, be conducted in accordance with the rules of evidence applicable in the district courts of the United States under the rules of civil procedure adopted by the Supreme Court.

FINDINGS OF FACT BY THE BOARD

Under the present law the Board is required to issue an order if upon all the testimony taken it is of the opinion that the person complained against has engaged in an unfair labor practice. The hearings before the committee indicate that the Board has confused its functions under this requirement with the function of the court in relation to findings of fact by the Board in a proceeding for the enforcement or review of a Board order, for there was testimony in the hearings to the effect that the Board made its findings on substantial evidence rather than on a preponderance of the evidence. The trier of facts is always required to make findings on a preponderance of the evidence. An appellate court accepts the findings of the trier of facts if those findings are supported by substantial evidence, because an appellate court is not in a position to weigh evidence, not having heard the testimony, seen the witnesses, observed their demeanor, and not being expert in evaluating testimony in a highly specialized field. Because the court cannot weigh the evidence, however, does not mean that the trier of facts should make findings with an eye to court review rather than with an eye to determining where the truth lies on a preponderance of the evidence before it. Hence, the committee recommends that the Board be required to make findings upon a preponderance of the evidence in the same manner as every other trier of facts.

EFFECT OF BOARD FINDINGS ON COURT REVIEW

Under the present law, the Board's findings of fact are made conclusive on the courts if they are supported by substantial evidence. While it is true that the Consolidated Edison Case ((1939) 305 U. S. 197) broadened to some extent the concept of what evidence was deemed substantial, the nature of the controversies which the Board is called upon to decide, such as the determination of an employer's true motive for discharging an employee, are such that the courts ought to be given more power than they now have under the present law to review the Board's findings of fact. Thus an additional standard is prescribed under which the court can overturn such findings. Under the amendments recommended, such findings are conclusive unless they are clearly erroneous, or unless they are not supported by substantial evidence.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

Two minor changes have been made in the wording of the findings and declaration of policy in section 1 of the National Labor Relations Act. First, the statement that the denial by employers of the right of employees to organize and the refusal by employers to accept the procedure of the collective bargaining leads to strikes, etc., has been changed in the amendments recommended to a simple statement that the failure to bargain collectively between employers and employees leads to strikes, etc. In the opinion of the committee the present language of the act constitutes an indictment of employers generally, which is not justified by the facts. The second change made in the language of the findings and declaration of policy by the amendments recommended is the elimination of the statement that it is the policy of the United States to encourage the practice and procedure of collective bargaining. In the opinion of the committee, Congress should do everything in its power to protect the exercise by workers of that right, but should not require the Board to encourage unionization where employees do not want it.

VIOLENCE

Under the amendments recommended, the committee, by changes in the definition of the word "employee," proposes to write into the act the rule announced by the Supreme Court in the Fansteel Case ((1939) 306 U. S. 240) with respect to the right of an employee who has engaged in violence or unlawful destruction or seizure of property to be reinstated by order of the Board. If a preponderance of the testimony taken shows that an employee has willfully engaged in these unlawful activities, the Board is to have no power to order such employee reinstated.

CLARIFICATION OF TERM "BARGAIN COLLECTIVELY"

Questions have arisen under the present act as to whether the act compels an employer to enter into an agreement with the representatives of a majority of his employees in an appropriate bargaining unit. The Supreme Court, in the Jones-Laughlin Case ((1937) 301 U. S. 1), stated that there was nothing in the act to compel an agreement, and the committee proposes to write into the act in terms that cannot be misunderstood the rules thus announced by the Supreme Court. "Bargain collectively" is defined as including the requirement that employer meet and confer with his employees or their representatives, listen to their complaints, and make every reasonable effort to compose differences, but is not to be construed as compelling or coercing either party to reach an agreement or to make counter proposals. This definition is in substance the definition announced by the Supreme Court in the Virginia Railway Case ((1937) 300 U. S. 515).

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

Under the amendments recommended statutes of limitations are provided for in two instances. First, it is provided that no complaint can be issued which is based on a charge of any unfair labor practice which occurred more than 6 months prior to the time such charge was made to the Administrator; second, it is provided that no order for the payment of back pay or other money shall order such payment with respect to a period longer than 6 months. Cases have been brought to the attention of the committee where the decision of the Board has not been rendered until at least 18 months after the case was argued before the Board, and in which the Board has issued an order directing the payment of money during this entire period of time. It is hoped that this provision will act to speed up Board decisions.

EFFECT OF EXAMINER'S INTERMEDIATE REPORT

An amendment recommended by the committee provides that in situations where the case is heard before a single member of the Board or before a trial examiner such member or examiner shall prepare and serve on the parties an intermediate report together with a recommended order, and that unless exceptions are filed thereto within 20 days after service, or within such further period of time as the Board may allow, such recommended order will become the order of the Board. The Board is given power at any time prior to the filing in court for a petition for review or enforcement to modify any such order or any other order issued or made by it.

DEFINITION OF AGRICULTURE

Under the amendments recommended the term "agricultural labor" is clarified by definition. Such term is not defined in the present law, and the Board in the North Whittier Heights case has held that employees of farm cooperatives are not agricultural labor. This decision of the Board was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals, and hence an amendment is necessary to exclude from the coverage of the act employees which it was never the intention of Congress to include in that coverage. Hence the committee recommends that "agricultural labor" have the same meaning as in the Social Security Act. This definition was carefully worked out by the Committee on Ways and Means and has been passed upon and approved by both Houses of Congress.

ECONOMICS DIVISION

Under the amendments recommended the Board will be effectively precluded from setting up an economics division. The hearings before the committee indicate that there is no justification whatsoever for the existence of this division, and there will be less justification for its existence under the other amendments which impose on the Board the exercise of judicial functions only.

Mr. THOMASON. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

REVISION OF THE LAWS

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce, on behalf of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, that the fifth cumulative supplement to the United States Code is being delivered to the folding room and placed to the credit of Members. The committee has continued its practice of showing the legislative development of the code by italicizing the new matter and bracketing the deleted portions of those amendments to existing law. Supplement 5 of the code includes all laws passed up to and including the second—special—session of this Congress. The committee also maintains, for the convenience of Members and others, a current classification of public laws enacted during the present session. Inquiries for such information may be addressed to the chairman. The committee is always anxious to receive suggestions and comments from the Members, and from those who use the code, designed to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of it. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include a resolution passed by the legislative committee of the Nebraska State Farmers' Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a brief editorial from the Cincinnati Post on the subject of flood defense.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, after the completion of matters on the Speaker's desk and the legislative program of the day, I be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks to be made this afternoon by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN] I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TERM OF THE PRESIDENCY

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, there is much discussion today relative to a third term for the President, and in connection with it attention is directed to the much-discussed suggestion that the President should be elected for a single term and be ineligible to succeed himself. The idea is not new. It was one of the great compromises of the Convention which brought about the adoption of the Constitution and the establishment of our present Government. I have introduced a resolution providing for the necessary amendment to the Constitution to make the change from our present practice of electing a President every 4 years without ineligibility to succeed himself. My resolution is now pending in the Committee on Election of the President and Vice President, and now would seem to be an appropriate time for its consideration and enactment. It would not affect the present situation, but it would anticipate the future.

On the 20th of July 1937 I addressed the House and covered the history of the subject of the term of the President from the beginning of the Government. In assembling the material I had the assistance of the legislative research staff of the Congressional Library; and while allowance must always be made for omissions, you will find in my remarks a very comprehensive study of the subject.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Bakersfield Californian on 147,000 immigrants who came into California in 1939 by automobile.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, which I shall not do, to call the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN] to the fact that this proposition of one term for the President of 6 years was written into the Confederate Constitution. I am glad to know that leading Republicans have gotten around to reading that sacred document. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

NOMINATIONS FOR THE PRESIDENCY TO BE MADE IN MINNESOTA

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, contrary to general belief, the Presidential nominations for the Democratic and Republican Parties are going to be decided in Minnesota this summer and not in Philadelphia and Chicago, where most of you assumed the selections will be made. The Chicago and Philadelphia national conventions will be only to confirm action taken and decisions already made in Minnesota the first week in June.

From June 2 to 5 the National Governors' Conference will be held in Minnesota at the request of Minnesota's popular and smart young Governor, and consequently there will be in our State at that time all the best political heads, quantitatively and qualitatively speaking, in the entire United States, to say nothing of the squads and droves of newspapermen.

Will that conference discuss and decide who the Presidential nominees are to be? Knowing Governors and politicians and political writers as we do, the answer is obvious. So Minnesota steals the show and sets the stage for these most important events.

All that is left is to decide which one of our many beautiful and breath-taking summer resorts gets the Governors' conference. Minnesota's efficient adjutant general, Ellard A. Walsh, is to decide, as arrangements chairman, whether the group will go to the Arrowhead country, to Detroit Lakes, Brainerd, Gull Lake, Breezy Point, Grand Rapids, Alexandria, Hackensack, Bemidji, International Falls, or where. We have so many beautiful spots it is indeed hard to choose between them, but any place in Minnesota will inspire these political visitors, as it does everyone who breathes its fresh, pure, invigorating, pine-scented air and views its beauties of forest, lake, and countryside.

WALTER-LOGAN BILL

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order to ask a question of the majority leader. I am receiving a great many letters from my constituents asking about the Walter-Logan bill. I wonder whether the majority leader has decided whether that bill is to come before us for discussion and action at this session.

Mr. RAYBURN. A rule has been granted on that bill, but no time has been fixed for its consideration.

Mr. BARTON. Is it a part of the program that we will probably come to before adjournment?

Mr. RAYBURN. There has been no specific program made out as yet. What we want to do is pass the appropriation bills as fast as they come to the House and intersperse with that matters more or less controversial. As far as general legislation is concerned, there has been no program made.

Mr. BARTON. Would it be fair to say that there is no plan for legislation except appropriation bills at this session of the Congress?

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, no; not at all.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an excerpt from the Baltimore Sun.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, and include a report on the methods used in the selection of candidates for Annapolis and West Point.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8745) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8745, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1941, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries: For the Secretary of the Interior, Under Secretary, First Assistant Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and other personal services in the District of Columbia, $874,950: Provided, That in expending appropriations or portions of appropriations contained in this act for the payment for personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, with the exception of the First Assistant Secretary and the Assistant Secretary, the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act, as amended, and in grades in which only one position is allocated the salary of such position shall not exceed the average of the compensation rates for the grade, except that in unusually meritorious cases of one position in a grade advances may be made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade but not more often than once in any fiscal year, and then only to the next higher rate: Provided, That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service, or (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation was fixed, as of July 1, 1924, in accordance with the rules of section 6 of such act, (3) to require the reduction in salary of any person who is transferred from one position to another position in the same or different grade in the same or a different bureau, office, or other appropriation unit, (4) to prevent the payment of a salary under any grade at a rate higher than the maximum rate of the grade when such higher rate is permitted by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and is specifically authorized by other law, or (5) to reduce the compensation of any person in a grade in which only one position is allocated.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 2, line 5, after the comma, strike out "$874,950" and insert "$689,970."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment with the idea of trying to save a little of the money that the committee has brought in here for the operations of the office of the Secretary of the Interior. That you may know how well based my motion is let me say that the appropriation for this purpose last year was $545,410. The amount recommended by the committee is $874,950, an increase of over $329,000.

There is absolutely no justification for this increase. It is true that they have in this Department probably 150 or 175 employees who are paid from the relief rolls. To put them in with the regular employees will require $216,000. This added to last year's appropriation would make $761,000.

There is a useless item in there for propaganda and publicity of $72,000. There is another item for photographs, $12,520. There is another item for a power-policy committee—a promotion outfit—$55,560; another item for a radio section, $21,660. I have not proposed to take all of that out of this outfit, as I should.

I have only proposed to cut out $185,000. I have done this because I feel that this office is spending too much money, that there is absolutely no justification for it. When it comes to the point that the operations of a department are such that it must put somebody on the radio with arguments suggested by it every day in the year we are getting to a situation which is intolerable. It is bureaucracy at its worst. It is one of the worst showings that has ever been brought here by any department of the Government. The only way we can ever save America from the ravishment of bureaucracy is by turning down the money which is being wasted upon propaganda falsely to uphold the position these people have taken in raiding the Treasury of the United States. Never can we begin to economize, never can we get anywhere in economizing, unless we stop at the source the propaganda, vicious and improper, and in many cases in violation of the law, that has been going on for several years by this Department. I think it is one of the worst outfits in the Government of the United States, absolutely irresponsible and absolutely without any regard for the law.

I hope this amendment will be adopted. The item is even $45,000 above the Budget. Let us save a dollar. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, it is not unusual for the gentleman from New York to oppose appropriations for the Interior Department.

The first item to which the gentleman appears to object is one of $216,500, not a new item, not a new policy. This committee is not trying to establish a policy; oh no. Practically every one of these people is on the pay roll, and the gentleman himself is a member of the deficiency committee which made funds available for this personnel on a more or less permanent basis. There is nothing else for us to do except to discharge these people or make an appropriation for them. So much for that. These people are getting their money—and it is no secret—from public-works funds.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will yield, I have included in my amendment enough money to continue the employment of these people. It is intended to cut out the vicious propaganda.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman proposes to cut out $185,000, yet the item to which he objects so strenuously is a little $15,000 radio item.

Mr. TABER. It is $21,660.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yet his amendment would make a cut of $185,000. Let me finish my statement. If the gentleman will permit, I did not interrupt him.

The next item to which the gentleman so strenuously objects is the power-policy item. The people are being paid now out of Public Works and it is not proposed to put a lot of additional men or women to work, as has been suggested, but the committee simply lays the cards on the table and proposes to put them on a permanent basis, where they belong.

The next item has to do with the radio service. The gentleman objects to these radio programs. These people, for the most, at least, are now being paid out of emergency funds. May I say to the gentleman that the committee, instead of bringing in a bill above the Budget estimate, this item, like practically every other item in the bill, is reduced. This reduction is between $25,000 and $30,000 below the Budget estimate instead of being $45,000 above the Budget estimate, as the gentleman has suggested.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I do not yield to the gentleman now. The reason for the apparent increase is due to the fact that we have consolidated the estimate for the power policy committee plan into this, which amounts to $60,000. That is all there is to it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether we can eliminate all the items suggested in the amendment or not, but certainly some consideration should be given by the Members of the House to the Secretary's office. May I call your attention to the fact that the Division of Personnel Service has increased 135 percent in 7 years. The number of employees in the Interior Department in 1933 was 19,600. The number of employees today is 47,000. Get that—an increase from 19,600 employees in 1933 to 47,000 employees at the present time in the Department of the Interior, an increase of 135 percent in employment in 7 years. Perhaps the Department of the Interior is not a bit worse than the other departments because the increases in employment have gone up tremendously.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How many new activities have been added to the Interior Department during that period?

Mr. RICH. Too many.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How many in the last year?

Mr. RICH. We took out three and put in four; so the number of employees there involved in the exchange was nominal.

Mr. Chairman, the point I make is that we have added department after department. What did Mr. Roosevelt say before he took office? He stated, "I will consolidate departments and I will eliminate bureaus." Instead of that he has added more; many, many more. Let us consider the reorganization bill that was passed last year. In that connection he has added over 100,000 employees to the Government pay roll because of the reorganization. This is something the membership of the House ought to think about. The reorganization that Mr. Roosevelt has established has resulted in adding 100,000 employees. An increase of 135 percent in 7 years in the Department of the Interior is entirely too much.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman is a very valuable member of this committee and he knows that this bill had been slashed about 20 percent before the committee got hold of it. Will not the gentleman admit in a general way that the committee did a good job in slashing this bill nearly $3,000,000, making a cut of 20 or 22 percent?

Mr. RICH. I made the statement on the floor of the House that the committee worked hard on the bill, but I could cut this bill $10,000,000 and it would not hurt our country but would help it.

In the Division of Information we have spent $21,660. I asked Secretary Ickes about this increase and he stated as follows:

I remember that Mr. Straus, the Director of Information, came in sometime ago and said he would like to put on a dramatization of the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior. I told him that he was crazy; that it could not be done in any attractive form. However, in due course he brought in to me a script, which I read with great care. It seemed to me to have great possibilities, and I gave a clearance for it.

When we have men in a department who can convince the Secretary that a lot of the work they do should be dramatized, I say we have too many people in those departments and they are only trying to increase the size and scope of the work of those departments. I think that propaganda of that kind within the Department is vicious and should be stopped. It does no one any good and should be stopped.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. What meaning does the gentleman get out of the proposal to dramatize this work? What does he understand that to mean?

Mr. RICH. He was talking about dramatizing the report of the Secretary. If the Secretary's report is not intelligent enough to the American people and we have to go out and dramatize it so they will know what they are talking about, then I suggest we pay more attention to our schools so that our people will be educated to understand a report of the Secretary or else have the Secretary of the Interior make a more intelligent report. If we would indulge in a little education along that line we will not need so much expense in the various departments of our Government dramatizing and putting on a department show.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 73, noes 107.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOSSETT: After the period on line 9, page 3, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the appropriation made available to the office of the Secretary by this section shall be used for the broadcast of radio programs designed for or calculated to influence the passage or defeat of any legislation pending before the Congress."

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Chairman, I come not to attack or condemn the Department of the Interior that has done much splendid work. This amendment proposes to protect the Department of the Interior and the Congress from the folly and the danger of political broadcasts paid for out of the public purse.

The section of the bill just read appropriates $874,950 to the office of the Secretary of the Interior. Included in this appropriation for the Secretary's office are funds for the radio section of the Information Division of the Department of the Interior. Concerning this radio section, Secretary Ickes, in the hearings on this bill, testified as follows:

The Information Division proper remains as it was, and it has been very successful in serving the bureaus during the past year. There is included in our estimates, however, the transfer of a radio section, consisting of eight persons, having salaries totaling $21,660, who have heretofore served the Department but been financed by the Public Works Administration.

Then I notice in the report on this bill under increases in contingent expenses an item for radio broadcasting records of $3,000.

So far I am not complaining. The Department is to be commended for the number of entertaining and educational programs broadcast during the last year. The people of this country are entitled to full and complete information concerning their Government and its many services to them. I hope more and better programs of information and entertainment may be furnished them as time goes on. But all the programs have not been of this character. Several broadcasts have gone entirely outside and beyond the field of education or information. Our able colleague the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] has introduced in this Congress a bill enthusiastically sponsored by the Department of the Interior which would provide for the absolute Federal control of the oil business of this country, such control to be in the Department of the Interior. This is not the place for, and time does not permit, a discussion of the merits of this Cole bill. Suffice to say, it is highly controversial. In an obvious effort to build up sentiment for this bill, the Department of the Interior through its radio section staged several broadcasts that would rival Orson Welles' melodrama on the Men From Mars. I want to read you some excerpts from these broadcasts, which you will find in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on page 1124. On program No. 24, the departmental broadcaster depicts a state of public hysteria, and then follows a series of outcries from a land gone dry of oil:

DOCTOR. I'm a doctor. I must get there at once. A woman is dying.

ATTENDANT. Sorry, Doc. We haven't a drop of gasoline in the station.

(Sounds: Fire siren.)

FIREMAN (shouting). It's the schoolhouse! And we can't move our fire engines.

TRUCK DRIVER (through filter). Listen, Boss, I'm carryin' perishable goods—fruit and vegetables—on this truck. How am I gonna get them there before they spoil?

TICKET AGENT. The Twentieth Century Limited can't leave this station, Madam. You'll have to get to New York by stagecoach.

FARMER (surprised). Well, I'll be doggone. I can't use my tractor. I can't plow my farm.

HUSBAND (ordering wife). Get the children. We'll leave the house and find a restaurant where they cook with a coal stove.

DISPATCHER (droning via radio). All airplanes are grounded. All airplanes are grounded.

Boss. You men needn't report to work tomorrow. This plant's shutting down. Can't run our machines without oil.

(Sound: Telegraph key, in and under.)

TELEGRAPHER. S O S! S O S! Steamer America calling. Stopped in midocean. One thousand aboard. Send help at once.

MAN. Get some candles, Martha, or we won't have light.

ADMIRAL (dictating). To the Navy Department: Fleet unable to leave port for Pacific coast as ordered. [Fade.] Guns useless without oil. Waiting further word on——

Then on program No. 26 the departmental narrator says:

I'm speaking for the Department of the Interior, principal guardian of your natural wealth; it wouldn't let me say anything that wasn't so.

This is followed by a statement that all of our known oil reserves will last only about 13 years; certainly not longer than 17 years. He then appeals to an imaginary Mrs. Murphy to see her Congressman.

Doubtlessly, oil and gas have been and are being wasted. Certainly we should conserve all of our natural resources, but no department of our Government has any right to spend the people's money in trying to sell the people anything. To present by radio at Government expense an argument in behalf of pending legislation is bad; to use misinformation in such an argument and for such a purpose is intolerable. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again read. I have not heard the modified amendment and I should like to know just exactly what it is. It may be that we can accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. May I say for the benefit of the Committee that certainly no member of our committee has any desire that any radio program be put on the air for the purpose of influencing legislation, either for or against any proposal. I did not hear the one particular program to which the gentleman so strenuously objects. I did hear a number of programs, and they were excellent, entertaining, and certainly not objectionable.

It was my understanding that the original amendment to be offered was to eliminate the entire item for radio programs. I am glad that the modified amendment does not attempt to do that. Personally, I see no objection at all to the amendment. I have not discussed the matter with all members of the subcommittee, but I believe we could accept the amendment as I do not think it adds to or takes from the present law.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. If this amendment is put into effect, how will it be handled? Who will have the say? How could it be handled without having a board or some employees in addition to those covered by the pending measure to determine these questions? Then you would run up against the very proposition we are up against now, about being driven by some sort of regimentation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. May I say to the gentleman that the amendment really does not amount to anything. The present law is a good deal stronger than the amendment, and to be perfectly frank, that is the reason I am willing to accept it. Of course, the General Accounting Office has the final say as to what could be or could not be used. This really does not amount to anything, but if it will make the proponents feel better and if they will go along on the remaining provisions we will be glad to accept it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. It certainly is not going to hurt anything and it might do a lot of good. I believe it ought to be adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Would the acceptance of the amendment help the gentleman to go along with the bill, then?

Mr. RICH. I will certainly go along with this amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The committee has no objection to the amendment.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT] has referred to legislation bearing my name as inspiring the broadcasts to which he has specifically referred. I am glad the Committee has seen fit to accept the amendment, and I shall comment very briefly upon it.

The truth is that during the long and tedious hearings the committee of this House, of which I have the honor of being chairman, was conducting in the investigation of the petroleum industry, it developed through one of the witnesses that such broadcasts were being conducted under the auspices of the Interior Department. The committee condemned the broadcasts said to specifically refer to legislation before us, at that time, and does now. Because of that testimony I requested the Department of the Interior to send me some facts relative to the work which they were doing under their radio set-up costing only $15,000 a year. I was truly amazed to find the wonderful service they are rendering. I found also that some young man associated with the problem, overly zealous as to his interest in the petroleum-conservation proposition and the prevention of waste thereof, had gone beyond what the Secretary of the Interior himself desired. With the permission of the Chairman, I shall insert as a part of my remarks, a list of the leading stations throughout this country—105 in all—which are now carrying the programs of the Interior Department from New York, with professional actors paid by the broadcasting companies; also the caption of the many programs they have sponsored dealing with all the interesting and important work before this great Department. The more I read these reports the more I wonder if the reason Secretary Ickes is criticized as much as he is is because he is doing something all the time. Whether you like him or not, you must admit the efficiency of the important personnel under him. He is a man who does things, and with few exceptions, does them well. I am sure it will be interesting to the Members of the House to know what their programs contemplate in the future, and finally, the public reaction to the program What Price America, sponsored by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. Chairman, the broadcast referred to, and according to the remarks of my good friend, the distinguished Member of this House from Texas, referring to the legislation he has mentioned, has no influence upon the committee dealing with this problem whatsoever. We have about concluded the general survey of this matter, which is of such vital concern to a great majority of the Members of this House, and our report will be made within the time required therefor. As the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] has said, the law already covers such a situation as has been described here, but nevertheless this amendment might seem to curtail in the future overstepping the bounds and privileges extended this Department. I do not think it necessary, but it might do good as a reminder.

Herewith is a list of subjects covered in the 52 broadcasts of What Price America program referred to in this discussion: Earliest Conservation; Ohio Land Co.; Lewis and Clark; The Land Office; Mormon Irrigation; Discovery of Gold; Yosemite National Park; Bureau of Mines; Major Powell—The Geological Survey; Yellowstone—Its Origin; Central Valley; The Grazing Problem; Imperial Valley; John Muir and Our National Parks; Monongah Mine Explosion and the Bureau of Mines; Olympia National Park; Helium; Bureau of Mines During the World War; The Reclamation Program; National Monuments; Our Indians; Fire Prevention in the Nation Parks; Boulder Dam; Oil—Historic Background; Hot Oil; Wildlife; Romance of Silver; History of Coal; Fish; Inventory of Our Natural Resources; This Very Moment—Fire Prevention; Plug in the Tub—Boulder Dam; Central Valley; Navajo; Grand Coulee; Oil—13 Years; Wildlife Today; Fish—Great Lakes; Grazing—Taylor Grazing Act; Field Services of Interior Department; Coal—Bituminous Coal Division; Boulder Dam; What America Has To Be Thankful For; Conservation Versus Waste; Strategic Minerals; Conservation and Democracy; Special Christmas Program; Parks—Yosemite; Puerto Rico; Grand Canyon; Bonneville Dam; résumé ended January 27, 1940.

A special award was given this program when it was selected by Max Wiley as the best radio series presented by the Government and cited in his book Best Broadcasts of 1938 and 1939, as follows:

For its sustained dramatic interest, for its power to transport the listener to the scene, for proper subordination of informative content to entertainment value, and for accuracy of research, the series What Price America represented the outstanding radio effort of the United States Government last year.

It was also cited as "the most popular adult educational program" by the Women's National Radio Committee, comprising more than a score of national women's organizations.

Some estimate of the public reaction to the What Price America series might be gathered from the following:

A total of 137,252 requests for conservation literature—the What Price America booklet—have been answered by the radio section in connection with this series.

While the great majority of the requests did not reveal the profession or interest of the person making request, the following were identified in the numbers indicated:

Officials of adult educational organizations	431
Officials of automobile and travel clubs	25
Businessmen	641
Officials of colleges and universities	531
Library officials	127
Principals of grade and high schools	232
Professional conservationists (State officials, editors, writers, etc.)	250
Professional people (doctors, lawyers, engineers, etc.)	1,004
Students (who indicated material was being used in class work)	998
Teachers	1,244
Youth organizations officials (Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, etc.)	180

As to current activities of the radio stations in question, I am advised as follows:

The radio section is now engaged in the research and preparation of two new series of programs.

1. This, Our America, a series to be presented on the red network of the National Broadcasting Co.

2. A second series of What Price America, developed along entirely new lines, and the outline of which is attached.

Facilities of the studios and services of the personnel, are continually employed not only with departmental activity, but in servicing the various outside agencies of government who request help and assistance. Currently there is being produced from the studios a coast-to-coast series for the Department of Labor, the episodes of which are also being electrically transcribed.

An extensive electrical duplicating job is being performed for the Music Division of the Library of Congress; a series of network broadcasts with which the Library of Congress is identified, are being recorded; planning and preparation is under way for a series of electrical transcriptions to be made for the Bureau of Fisheries to stimulate fish consumption; an extensive transcription job is being done for the Work Projects Administration; a series of radio programs is in process of preparation for the United States Travel Bureau, to stimulate travel in the Americas; a series of broadcasts to promote interest and travel in the national parks this summer is in process of being placed; a series of educational broadcasts to be based on Indian cultures and backgrounds, to be used in the schools, is being contemplated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Technical assistance of the Radio Section staff is being asked for an international broadcast from Mexico City, in connection with a Western Hemisphere Indian conference, to be held in April; electrical transcriptions on wildlife are being contemplated by the Biological Survey and the American Wildlife Institute; a series of electrical transcriptions are in process of being prepared for the Rural Electrification Administration; the regular series of broadcasts presented by the Office of Education are being electrically transcribed; and a series of recordings are being planned by the Social Security Board, for clarifying problems of personnel in their various field offices.

I am glad to have this opportunity to bring this information to the attention of the House, because I know the membership will be interested. Certainly I have been, and within proper limitations I think you will agree they have been performing a splendid service and should be permitted to continue to do so. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I am frank to say that I hesitate to take the floor at this time for the purpose for which I have sought the floor, but I feel sure that before I have concluded my remarks the Members will agree with me that I am justified in so doing.

Many Members know, if not all of them, that there is pending before a subcommittee of the District of Columbia Committee a proposition as to whether or not the District of Columbia shall be given the right of suffrage. I happen to be a member of that committee. Yesterday in a newspaper in Washington a rather unfair attack, I think, was made on me by reason of my stand on certain matters pertaining to suffrage for the District, and at this point I want to observe that it seems strange to me—so strange that, insofar as the newspapers of the District of Columbia are concerned, one is not privileged to take a stand contrary to the opinion of the papers of the District without having the District immediately charge him with some unholy motives.

I am too smart to jump on the newspapers. I want no argument with them. They have always got another edition coming out on you and they will have the last word. So, of course, if I had an argument with the newspapers, I would lose that argument; but now I want to refer to an article which appeared yesterday in the Times-Herald under the name of a very eminent and learned writer, Mr. Frank C. Waldrop, and, in discussing this matter, he had this to say:

To escape threatening damage to prestige, perhaps even loss of control in the House, the Grant administration rushed through the present form of District of Columbia government prohibiting suffrage to white or black. At that time Negroes were 33.6 percent of the District of Columbia population.

They were a difficult 33.6 percent, naturally, and needed patience, tolerance, and time to grow into the community. They got none of those. Instead, they were made the butt of every "confidential" explanation why Congress could not return any suffrage at all.

"Why, you wouldn't want a Negro mayor in the Nation's Capital, would you?"

That was the line the city patronage soppers used then, just as they use today. No later than 2 days ago the acting chairman of the House subcommittee considering District of Columbia suffrage let it be known that he is not against votes, but he is worried about the Negroes.

At that point I say this: Insofar as this question of suffrage has ever been considered by me, the matter of the Negro question has never been mentioned by me at any time, and when this distinguished gentleman says that 2 days ago I made any remark about the Negroes, or about the Negro question, insofar as it applied to suffrage for the District, the gentleman is making a misstatement of fact. Further, I think that the newspapers of the District could well be busily engaged about the matter of attempting to keep down racial hatred rather than to incite it through articles like this. [Applause.]

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Let me finish and I shall yield later if I have time. I quote further from the gentleman's article:

The Honorable JACK NICHOLS, of Eufaula, Okla., his name is. The Honorable Jack isn't worried about any Negro mayor. He is worried about the prospect that his string of relatives on the pay roll of the District government would be fired if he lost his patronage control.

Meaning what? Why, the gentleman charges that I have a string of relatives on the District pay roll, and that the reason I am against suffrage for the District is because they will lose their jobs, if suffrage were granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, the real truth of the matter is that I have not a single relative, of any degree removed, on the District pay roll. I have a sister who is employed by the Work Projects Administration, who works in the District of Columbia, of whom I am tremendously proud, and who is doing a swell job, but she does not, nor never has she, worked for the District of Columbia. Not only that, but 4 years ago I recommended a boy for a position in the District of Columbia government.

He was put to work and has been there ever since. Besides him, I have never had man, woman, or child employed by the District government upon my recommendation. Is this fair? Of course, it can only be done for one thing—in an attempt to injure me. Where? Here? Oh, no; at home. For what purpose? To scare me into submission. I do not scare easily. [Applause.] I merely ask my learned friend, the author of this story, that in the future he write anything about me that he chooses, but please confine it to the truth and I shall not quarrel with him. I cannot help but think that this matter of charging me with loading the District pay roll with patronage is a deliberate misstatement of fact.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The gentleman would not have his colleagues in the House believe that for a moment he wanted to restrict the great privilege of the civil liberties which the gentleman apparently exercised?

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, no; but I wish I were accorded the same liberty.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the District Committee, and I commend the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] for his attitude on suffrage. He has always had an open mind upon it. I agree with his course, because this same columnist made about the same attack toward me some weeks ago. I wrote to him and told him to print my words in their entirety. He never made a reply. I agree with the gentleman from Oklahoma wholeheartedly in what he has said, and I commend him for his attitude in the hearings he held in giving the question of suffrage fair hearings.

Mr. NICHOLS. I thank the gentleman and shall say just one other thing. I was sent word yesterday morning that if I did not change my attitude on this matter, a newspaper owner of the District of Columbia was going to send people into my district to attempt to defeat me. I shall call the name of that person if it is necessary. At the moment I choose not to, but if challenged I would be very happy to supply it. I thank you. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn:

The Clerk read as follows:

DIVISION OF INVESTIGATIONS

For investigating official matters under the control of the Department of the Interior; for protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; for protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation; for adjusting claims for swamplands and indemnity for swamplands; and for traveling and other expenses of persons employed hereunder, $470,000, including not exceeding $40,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia; not exceeding $52,500 for the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motorboats for the use of agents and others employed in the field service. The Secretary of the Interior shall include in his annual report a full statement of all expenditures made under authority of this paragraph.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the committee for a brief period to make reference to an item further on in this bill, namely, the Bureau of Fisheries.

I am particularly interested in that Bureau because it has been doing most excellent work in my district, as well as throughout the country. There is a Federal hatchery in a little village at the southern end of my district called Hartsville. There has been a small appropriation made by the Department for the improvement of the Hartsville hatchery. I find by building modern ponds no more water is being used in propagating fish to the extent of 300 times as many as formerly was done, and that makes just that much more distribution for the benefit of the sportsmen not only of Massachusetts, but of adjoining States.

I am informed there are in the whole country 105 hatcheries. Of those, 90 are for the benefit of sportsmen and 15 are commercial hatcheries. Ten of the commercial hatcheries are salt-water hatcheries and are entirely commercial The other 5 are part commercial, as I understand it, and part for sportsmen as well.

The increase of fingerlings in those Government hatcheries today means a distribution of fish throughout the country for the benefit of our people, particularly the sportsmen throughout the country. So you can see there is a very general use coming from the propagation of fish through these hatcheries and great increase in the outdoor life.

My experience with the particular hatchery to which I am referring indicates that the type of employees in the Bureau of Fisheries is very high. I am surprised that the Government can secure the services of such able men as they seem to have at the salaries paid. I am familiar with one or two other hatcheries as well. It shows the interest in the actual scientific work of the hatcheries themselves on the part of the employees.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I want to confirm what the gentleman has just said with regard to the high type of employees connected with this work, and more particularly with regard to the high type of citizens who favor just this program. Some of the ablest men in the country, high officials of Government, business and professional men, and civic leaders, who are sportsmen, have written to me just to this same point—that we ought to do more to encourage this sort of wildlife for the benefit of sportsmen and for the health of our people generally. These are the men who have contacted me favoring this program. I know the rank and file of our people favor it without writing me.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the gentleman, and I thoroughly agree with his statement.

Further than that, the interest of those very men is producing a much larger number of sportsmen as a result of the establishment of fish clubs. We have sportsmen's clubs throughout my district. Practically every town has a sportsmen's club. That means for better citizenship and greater enjoyment of the great outdoors and recreational features of our communities. Of course, New England is much more thickly settled than the district from which the gentleman from Arizona comes.

Perhaps it would not be out of place to call to the attention of the House a general statement in connection with this matter.

Referring to the amount recommended by the Appropriations Committee for the maintenance and operation of fish-cultural stations, Bureau of Fisheries, Department of the Interior, I note the following:

Limitation of salaries in the field force, $464,690.
Operation and maintenance of fish-culture stations, including travel and distribution, $383,250.
Construction of new stations in Pennsylvania, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Mississippi, $75,000—

Making a total recommended by the committee of $922,940.

I want to call attention to the item of $383,250 for the operation and maintenance of the stations, including travel and distribution. By "distribution" is meant that at a hatchery such as the one I speak of, where one or more trucks are provided by the Government, the fish are actually delivered where the sportsmen want them to be delivered, rather than the sportsmen being called upon to travel long distances and go to the hatcheries themselves.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. This distribution means that the sportsmen's clubs throughout an area will take the contents of the trucks or cans of fish brought to them by the hatchery officials and keep them perhaps for 6 months or a year in smaller ponds, rather than distributing them through the brooks, and in that way increase the quantity that are actually available for the sportsmen later on. In other words, they mature beyond the fingerling stage before being actually put into the brooks or ponds for the sportsmen to reach, which, of course, is a very excellent thing for the increased production, as well as for the increased possibilities of pleasure for the sportsmen.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that certainly the most highly advertised fish hatchery in the world is in my home town of Tupelo, Miss. I find there, and I believe it is the same in other hatcheries, that they not only haul these fish out in trucks occasionally but they ship them in cans and lay them down at the lake or pond or stream where the receiver wants to use them. These are distributed at Government expense to those who apply for them.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is exactly in conformity with what I was endeavoring to say.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The fact that the gentleman from Mississippi is interested in names is evidenced by his inquiry the other day with respect to how Hot Springs got its name. The fish hatchery in my district is named Spearfish. The gentleman, of course, would have no difficulty in recognizing how it secured its name.

Mr. RANKIN. By the way, I want to say to the gentleman from South Dakota that I understood the other day our ducks had gone up there during this cold weather. I hope he returns them now since the weather has cleared up. [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the general benefit of the fish-cultural appropriation the following figures, I am sure, will be interesting.

During the fiscal year 1941, 11 new fish-cultural stations will be operated, for which the committee is allowing an increase over the 1940 figure of $16,060. I note that the bureau's facilities have been greatly expanded over 1940, not only by the establishment of new stations but also through increased facilities covering pond construction and modernization of the stations for the purpose of rearing the small fry to larger fingerling sizes for distribution. This naturally requires a greater expenditure for fish food and the bureau's request for an increase in this item of $37,500 has been reduced to $8,000.

To show you why an increase in the fish-food item is needed, during the fiscal year 1938, 10,723 applications for fish were received by the Bureau. In 1939, 12,585 applications were received. To supply these applications required an output of over 8,000,000,000 fish and eggs. Of this total, 84,400,000 were fingerling fish. These fish were produced at approximately 90 game-fish hatcheries. It has been estimated by reliable authorities that there are 15,000,000 anglers in the United States, and that during the past year they spent approximately $500,000,000 for fishing tackle, accessories, and other incidental expenses in connection with a fishing trip.

Never in the history of the Bureau have the demands been so great for game fish for stocking purposes. This may be ascribed, in part, to a large number of reservoirs and lakes which have been established throughout the country through the use of emergency funds.

If the people of this country, living some distance from the sources of commercial fish—such as the Great Lakes, Pacific and Atlantic Ocean, are to be given fresh fish, the Bureau of Fisheries must maintain the streams through an adequate stocking program, which requires the production of larger fingerling fishes, and more funds for fish food for their production. So, it will be seen that this activity is well worth the expense that is involved.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] on his coming around to our way of thinking on this question of fish hatcheries.

Mr. TREADWAY. I preceded the gentleman, I might say.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand the gentleman preceded me on this floor, but his education began 39 years ago, when one of my distinguished predecessors, Hon. John M. Allen, better known as Private John Allen, made the most outstanding address on fish hatcheries ever made in this body, and one that literally immortalized him.

It resulted in the creation of the fish hatchery at Tupelo, which in turn has resulted in making Mississippi the leading bass State of the Union, as I am informed by the Bureau of Fisheries.

I have signed more fish applications, probably, than any other man in either House of Congress because of the operation of this fish hatchery at Tupelo; and, for the amount of money spent on it, I know of no enterprise that has been worth more to the masses of the people of that area. I am not talking about the sportsmen particularly, for our sportsmen can go to the Gulf coast where fishing is really a luxury, but almost every farmer in the district, it seems to me, now has a small pond or a small lake that he has stocked with fish, either bass, bream, or crappies from this fish hatchery.

Here is a record of the proceedings on that day, February 20, 1901, when this Tupelo hatchery was established, as a result of Mr. Allen's address:

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 45 of the bill, and after line 20 insert the following amendment, which the Clerk will read; and then I ask unanimous consent for 20 minutes to speak to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Page 45, at the end of line 20, insert 'for the establishment of a fish hatchery and fish-culture station at the town of Tupelo, State of Mississippi, $20,000.' "

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to this paragraph for the purpose of considering the amendment?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to granting to the gentleman from Mississippi 20 minutes to discuss the amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I do not deem it necessary to take up 20 minutes' time of this Committee to pass this amendment, but as this fish hatchery is to be established at Tupelo, and I find among some people in the country—even some newspapermen, who are supposed to impart information to others, and some gentlemen who have been elected to Congress, and who tell me that they have not only been to school but gone through college—so much ignorance about Tupelo that I think I ought—in justice to them, not to Tupelo—to enlighten them some on this subject. [Laughter.]

If I were willing to avail myself of all the traditions and many well authenticated but not absolutely accurate historical suspicions, I might invest this subject with much more historical and romantic interest. But I propose to confine my remarks to well-authenticated facts, ignoring such traditions, believed by many of our people to be true, as that when Christopher Columbus had his interview with Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain, that in his efforts to persuade them to back him in his expedition that led to the discovery of America, he assured them that an all-wise Creator, creating a world like this, was bound to have made somewhere near its center such a place as Tupelo. [Laughter.]

The first authentic account we have of the section of country that will one day be included in the corporate limits of Tupelo is that the great Indian chief, Chicksa, from whom that great and warlike tribe, the Chickasaw Indians, took its name, was west of the great Mississippi River, and that he, with his followers, followed a pole guided and supported by invisible hands across the Mississippi River to the vicinity of Tupelo. There, we are informed, the pole stopped, stood upright, planted in the ground, and there the Chickasaw Indians made their home. No people, Mr. Chairman, were ever directed by a wise Providence to a fairer land. 'Twas in the rolling woodland just north of one of the most beautiful prairies on which the eye of man or beast ever rested. The country abounded with all sorts of game, the streams were full of fishes, and on this continent there was no more enticing place for this poetic race of the forest. Here the Chickasaws grew to be, as they are to this time, one of the greatest and most powerful of the Indian tribes.

In 1513 the knightly Ponce de Leon landed upon the coast of Florida, and perverted history has it that he started out to look for the fountain of youth and limitless gold fields, when in truth and in fact he really started to look for Tupelo. [Laughter.] You are all familiar with the disaster that overtook his expedition. Later, in 1540, the great and adventurous discoverer, Hernando de Soto, landed his expedition on the coast of Florida, and finally succeeded in reaching and discovering for the first time by a white man Tupelo. [Laughter.]

Here he stopped in the midst of the Chickasaws until attacked by them and driven west to what is now the city of Memphis, where he discovered the great Mississippi River.

The Chickasaws were then left in peaceable possession, so far as the white man was concerned, of this beautiful section for nearly 200 years, when, in 1736, Bienville, with his expedition, came up from Florida, and D'Artaguette from the Illinois, attempted to meet and take from the Chickasaws what is now Tupelo. D'Artaguette got there before Bienville and was defeated by the Chickasaws. He and almost all of his expedition perished at their hands. Bienville arrived later, was also defeated and driven back, with great loss to his expedition; and now, in laying out and grading avenues and boulevards for Tupelo, the bones, spurs, weapons, epaulets, etc., of the slain of these ill-fated expeditions are plowed up. [Laughter.]

This is something of the early history of the place about which we find so much ignorance. My colleague, General Catchings, told me not many days ago that some newspaperman had asked him if there really was such a place as Tupelo. [Great laughter.]

I do not assert that all of these historical events to which I have referred took place immediately in the town of Tupelo, but they were in that vicinity and were on territory that we expect to have incorporated into the city some day. To come down to a later period, those of you who know anything of the history of your country will remember the contentions and contest that lasted for many years between the French, English, and Spanish Governments for the ownership of the Mississippi territory. I am informed by those familiar with the real designs of those great nations at that time that the real motive of all of them was the ownership of Tupelo. [Great laughter.]

Finally, the United States, appreciating the importance of the position, took advantage of their dissensions and acquired Tupelo. [Renewed laughter.]

About the year 1848 it became a matter of great concern to the great Northwest to secure a market for their products, so they gave aid and encouragement to the building of the northern end of what is now the Mobile & Ohio Railroad. The city of Mobile, on the Gulf, recognizing also the great advantages of direct connection with Tupelo, helped along this enterprise, and the road was built from Mobile to Tupelo. [Laughter.]

Everything went on very well until about 1861, when the South concluded to secede from the Union. I am reliably informed that when Horace Greeley and others sought Mr. Lincoln and asked him to "let the wayward sisters depart in peace," he shook his head and said, "No; this secession takes from the United States Tupelo [laughter], and we will not submit to it." And it was to rescue to the Union this town that brought on the war. [Renewed laughter.]

The armies of the Union were first directed against the capital of the Confederacy at Richmond, Va., but some obstructions were thrown in the way of that army at Bull Run, and they were persuaded to return to Washington. Another great army was then marshaled under the command of General Grant, who landed at Pittsburg Landing, on the Tennessee River, and began his operations against Tupelo. [Laughter.]

Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston and myself met General Grant's army at Shiloh [laughter], and for most of the first day we had a real good time with them, and but for General Johnston being killed and me being scattered on the evening of that day there is no knowing what might have happened or how the history of this country might have been changed. [Great laughter.]

Suffice it to say I retired on Corinth, and when we were there, sorely pressed, President Davis ordered General Beauregard to fall back to Tupelo and there make a great and desperate stand for the life of the Confederacy. And it seems that Generals Grant and Halleck were so much impressed with the dogged determination of the Confederate Army to defend Tupelo to the death of the last man that they turned away in other directions. [Laughter.] Later, General Sturgis started from Memphis with a well-equipped army with a view of capturing Tupelo and breaking the backbone of the Confederacy. But on the road down there, when he had gotten within a few miles of Tupelo, General Forrest, that great cavalry commander, appreciating what the loss of Tupelo would mean to the Confederacy, met Sturgis at Brices Crossroads, took from him all of his artillery and wagons, sent him back to Memphis without an organized company and with the remnant of his army in about one-fourth of the time that had been consumed by forced marches in going down.

But Mr. Lincoln seemed never to have lost sight of the importance of Tupelo to the Union, and he marshaled another army under that able commander, Gen. A. J. Smith, and started them to capture Tupelo. Gen. Stephen D. Lee and General Forrest, with their commands, were sent to intercept him, but in maneuvering for positions General Smith got between Forrest and Lee and Tupelo and succeeded in capturing the town; and in an effort to dislodge him from there the desperate and bloody battle of Harrisburg, which is in the suburbs of Tupelo, was fought, in which nobody had any decided advantage, but General Smith evacuated the town and went back to Memphis. But the very fact that Tupelo had fallen seems to have broken the spirit of the Confederates, and we never did much good after that. [Great laughter.]

You will find, Mr. Chairman, in the Congressional Library a book the title of which is "Tupelo." It was written by a northern Presbyterian preacher and school teacher, who happened to be down in that section when the war began. I remember him very well. This book treats of his trials and tribulations about Tupelo, where he was arrested, imprisoned, and would have been shot but for his timely escape from prison; and, as I remember the substance, as he puts it, of his offense was a suspicion that he entertained secret doubts as to the divine origin and right of African slavery.

After the close of the war, when we had returned to our peaceful avocations, one of our brightest and most far-sighted young men, having in mind the great future as well as the great past of this town, settled in Tupelo, and afterward became a Member of this body and is now about terminating a great career of 16 years here. What this Nation and this House owes to Tupelo for this contribution I leave for others to say. My modesty forbids my speaking of it. [Laughter.] Some 15 years ago Kansas City and Memphis, appreciating the fact that if they ever hoped to do any good as cities they must have direct connection with Tupelo, built a railroad from Kansas City, through Memphis, to Tupelo, Birmingham, realizing that with all of its marvelous resources they could never be developed and properly distributed without direct railroad connection with Tupelo, saw to it that the road was built from Birmingham to Tupelo.

Mr. Chairman, during the discussion on the river and harbor bill in this House recently I heard so many statistics as to the tonnage of the various cities that were seeking appropriations in that bill that it stimulated me to inquire into the tonnage at Tupelo, and I find that during last year there were about 4,000,000 tons of freight passed through Tupelo. It was only the other day you saw in great headlines in all of our newspapers that the Southern Railroad had purchased the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, running from St. Louis to Mobile, through Tupelo.

The president of the Southern road was in Washington a few days later, and I met him for the first time, and in a conversation I had with him I gathered the reason for this purchase. It was that the Southern system had already about 7,000 miles of railroad, which had cost them hundreds of millions of dollars; they found this great system, after all this expenditure, practically useless to them, because they had no direct connection or terminal facilities at Tupelo. They therefore spent many millions more for 900 miles of railroad that would take them into Tueplo and give them good terminal facilities there. [Great laughter.]

Many of you gentlemen have never been to Tupelo. I hope none of you entertain any idea of dying without going there. I should hate to have it said of any Member of this Congress—for all of whom I have such a kindly feeling—that they did not aspire to visit Tupelo before they died. [Laughter.] I extend you all an invitation to come and promise you a royal welcome. Come and go with me on College Hill some evening and see one of our Tupelo sunsets. [Laughter.]

Come and see one of our southern, silvery, Tupelo moons! I think it is the only place in the South where we have the same beautiful moons we had before the war. [Laughter.] I have often been asked about the size of Tupelo. I confess I have not been able to get the exact figures from the last census. The tabulating machines do not seem to have been able to work it out yet; but I can say, Mr. Chairman, that by sufficiently extending the corporate limits of our town we can accommodate a population larger than the city of London. [Laughter.] The truth is that our lands about Tupelo have been so valuable for agricultural purposes that we have not yielded them up for building a city as rapidly as we should have done. [Laughter.]

I can say, Mr. Chairman, that while there are larger places than Tupelo, I do not think there is any other place just exactly like it. Tupelo is very near, if not exactly, in the center of the world. The horizon seems about the same distance in every direction. [Laughter.] The sun, when doing business on regular schedule, comes right over the town, and sometimes gives us a hot time in the old town. It is a great place for the investment of capital, where it will be welcomed and protected. Come early, gentlemen, and avoid the rush!

This, Mr. Chairman, is a proposition to establish there a fish hatchery. We have the ideal place for a fish hatchery. Why, sir, fish will travel over land for miles to get into the water we have at Tupelo. Thousands and millions of unborn fish are clamoring to this Congress today for an opportunity to be hatched at the Tupelo hatchery. [Loud laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say in conclusion that if there is a Member here who wishes to have his name connected by future generations with that of Judas Iscariot and Benedict Arnold, if he wishes to have himself and his posterity pointed at with scorn, if he desires to be despised by men and shunned by women, let him vote against this amendment and he will secure all this infamous notoriety. [Loud laughter and applause.]

Needless to say the amendment was unanimously adopted.

When Mr. Allen made that speech, you will note that the House literally roared with laughter and applause. When we look back now over 39 years and see how this movement has grown, we realize that Private John Allen was contributing to the development of a great national enterprise.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I wish simply to add that I realize the long period the gentleman's predecessor served here and the distinguished work that he did. However, in the first session I served in the Sixty-third Congress, I introduced a bill donating to the Federal Government, on behalf of a constituent, the hatchery to which I have referred in my district. It was a donation to the Federal Government, not a purchase by the Federal Government.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Massachusetts rendered a great service to the people of that area when he did it, and I congratulate him.

But I could not let this opportunity pass without calling attention to the services of the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, the Honorable John M. Allen, who, as I said, was known throughout the length and breadth of the land in those days as Private John Allen. He was one of the great leaders of his day and generation and one of the greatest wits who ever occupied a seat in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein the address by John Allen to which I referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman to extend his own remarks will be granted. The gentleman will have to submit the balance of his request in the House.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

BITUMINOUS COAL DIVISION

Salaries and expenses: For all necessary expenditures of the Bituminous Coal Division in carrying out the purposes of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, approved April 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 72), including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings which, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, are necessary for the efficient discharge of the responsibilities of the Division; contract stenographic reporting services; stationery and office supplies; purchase, rental, exchange, operation, maintenance, and repair of reproducing, photographing, and other such equipment, typewriters, calculating machines, mechanical tabulating equipment, and other office appliances and labor-saving devices; printing and binding; witness fees and fees and mileage in accordance with section 8 of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937; not to exceed $4,500 for hire, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, including one for use in the District of Columbia; garage rentals; miscellaneous items, including those for public instruction and information deemed necessary; and not to exceed $1,800 for purchase and exchange of newspapers, lawbooks, reference books, and periodicals, $2,187,800: Provided, That the first paragraph of subsection "(e)" of part II of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 (50 Stat. 72), is amended by inserting at the end of such paragraph and before the period the following: ": Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to a sale of bituminous coal for the exclusive use of the United States or of any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of any of them."

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proviso on page 8, beginning in line 7 and ending in line 14.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Does a member of the committee not have the first opportunity to make a point of order against the whole paragraph? If so, I make a point of order against the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, a member of the committee, or any other Member of the Committee of the Whole, would have a right to make a point of order against the whole paragraph(even though a previous point of order had been made to a part of the paragraph.

Mr. RICH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the whole paragraph on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] or the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment comes under the Holman rule. Eight percent of all the coal handled by this Commission will be used by the Federal, State, and city governments throughout the country. About 35,000,000 tons of coal will be used, and it will cost the Federal, State, and city governments approximately $3,850,000. It will cost the Federal Government alone $1,100,000.

The appropriation in this bill is $2,187,800 for the administration of the act. It will not be necessary for the Commission to handle about 8 percent of all the coal coming under the Bituminous Coal Act if this amendment is agreed to. It is hard to say whether or not it will save $187,000, which would be about 8 percent of the total amount allowed in the bill for administering the act. In my opinion it will certainly save from $20,000 to $100,000. If that is so, it surely is germane to the act, and it will save the different cities, States, and the Federal Government over $3,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I feel the amendment is germane and the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. May I ask which point of order the gentleman is arguing, the point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] or the point of order raised by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. EDMISTON]?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH[made the same point of order as the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. EDMISTON].

Mr. KELLER. No. He made a point of order against the whole paragraph.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am making a statement in reference to the paragraph beginning on page 8, line 7, a point of order against which was first raised by the gentleman from West Virginia, and I thought afterward included in the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. The gentleman states that this paragraph is germane because of its effect on the Federal Government and municipalities so far as savings are concerned.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It will cut down the cost of administering the act.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. But inferentially the gentleman admits, if this act does become effective, it will cost the taxpayers of this country and the consuming public millions of dollars?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No. If my amendment is carried, it will not cost the Federal Government or States anything.

The gentleman is not in favor of the act in the first place. The gentleman wants to knock out the entire act.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then the gentleman is not in sympathy with the coal miners.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I want to amend the act so that it will be workable.

Mr. EDMISTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. EDMISTON. If this provision stays in the act, certainly the gentleman does not think that will help the Bituminous Coal Act or the Guffey Coal Act. It will wreck the thing if that amendment stays in there.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It will not wreck it. The savings will amount to about $3,850,000 for the States and Federal Government. In some of the cities it will cost them $1,000 a day, in some others $500, and in still others $400 a day. It is going to cost the Federal Government $1,100,000 if it must pay this tax. I am in sympathy with the act itself and I supported it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLER. What are we talking about? We have a point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] which applies to the entire paragraph involving the Bituminous Coal Commission and we are having a discussion on something entirely different.

The CHAIRMAN. Permit the Chair to state that the first point of order was made to the proviso. Of course, if the point of order is good with reference to the proviso, it is good so far as the whole paragraph is concerned. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, that this item is legislation is specifically set out in the language between lines 7 and 10 on page 8 in that it proposes to add a paragraph to subsection (e) of part 2 of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937.

The Holman rule provides:

> Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto—
>
> Referring to appropriation bills—
> changing existing law be in order except such as being germane shall retrench expenditures by reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by reduction of the amount of money covered by the bill.

The language carried here does none of those things which are covered by the Holman rule. It is not in any way in order, nor does it appear that the language in any way effects a saving to the Treasury of the United States. Under these circumstances it is not legislation in line with the Holman rule, but quite the contrary, and the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Assuming that 35,000,000 tons of coal are taken out of the act, will not that cut down the cost of administering the act?

Mr. TABER. Why, the proper way to cut down the cost of administering the act is to sustain the point of order and leave the language out of the bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman answer the question; will it not cut down the cost of administering the act?

Mr. TABER. When we have to deal with one particular type of coal under one provision and another type under the other, it will cost four times as much to administer the act.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If we cut out 35,000,000 tons, 8 percent of the total coming under the provision, will it not cut down the cost of administration?

Mr. TABER. No; it will increase the cost, because it will involve more detail and work.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It will not.

Mr. MAY and Mr. EDMISTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. MAY. I should like to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. In support of the point of order?

Mr. MAY. In support of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that in fairness he should first hear from the gentleman from West Virginia, who made the point of order.

The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, the proviso on page 8, lines 7 to 14, is certainly very clearly, to any reasonable mind, legislation on an appropriation bill. Members have only to read the proviso to see that it is legislation on an appropriation bill. As to the application of the Holman rule, as the gentleman from New York has said, even though the language is germane, the provision saves no money. As a matter of fact, it will cost the Government a great deal of money if this language remains in the bill. In my opinion, if this language stays in the bill, all the work the Commission has done in an effort to fix some 350,000 different prices in this country will have to be done over again. Further, are we not a great legislative body if we pass a bill, make it a law of this land, and then by a proviso like this exempt all political subdivisions of the country so that the law would apply to everyone but the political subdivisions?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] made the statement that he voted for this bill. Now he wants to destroy it by exempting the political subdivisions. He is letting the Government do what he does not want the people of this country to do.

Mr. EDMISTON. He is doing just that, and letting every political subdivision of this country be a purchaser of bootleg coal.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If the gentleman will permit me to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania, was he in favor of the act?

Mr. RICH. No. I voted against it because I knew it was wrong in the first place. I am going to vote against it now.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Certainly. I am in favor of the act, but I believe it is unconstitutional to tax the State and city governments.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from West Virginia makes the point of order against the language appearing in the proviso in lines 7 to 14, inclusive, on page 8, that it is legislation on an appropriation bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes a similar point of order against the entire paragraph beginning in line 10 on page 7 and ending in line 14 on page 8. Of course, if the point of order made by the gentleman from West Virginia as to the proviso is sustained, the point of order also having been made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the entire paragraph, the result would be that the point of order would be good as to the entire paragraph.

The gentlemen speaking in opposition to the point of order have endeavored to justify the provision appearing in the bill to which reference has been made on the ground that it comes within the provisions of the so-called Holman rule. The Chair invites attention to the second sentence of clause 2 of rule XXI, commonly known and referred to as the Holman rule, which reads as follows:

> Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

The Chair also invites attention to page 56 of Cannon's Procedure in the House of Representatives, and quotes as follows:

MUST SHOW RETRENCHMENT ON ITS FACE

It must affirmatively appear upon the face of the bill that the proposition, if enacted, will retrench expenditures.

A retrenchment of expenditure relied upon to bring a proposition within the exception to the rule prohibiting legislation on an appropriation bill must be apparent from its terms, and a retrenchment conjectural or speculative in its application, or requiring further legislation to effectuate, is not admissible.

The Chair also invites attention to another precedent directly in point to a proper consideration of the question here presented, section 1530, volume VII of Cannon's Precedents, quoting:

The reduction of expenditure relied upon to bring a proposition within the exception to the rule prohibiting legislation on an appropriation bill must appear as a certain and necessary result and not as a probable or possible contingency.

The language of the proviso to which the point of order is made is as follows:

Provided, That the first paragraph of subsection "(e)" of part II of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 (50 Stat. 72), is amended by inserting at the end of such paragraph and before the period the following: "Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to a sale of bituminous coal for the exclusive use of the United States or of any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of any of them."

It seems to the Chair that this language is legislation on a general appropriation bill. The very language itself clearly shows that the purpose sought to be accomplished is the amendment of existing law. Therefore, as it appears so clearly that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, under the provision of the rule to which the Chair has referred and based upon the previous decisions and precedents here cited, the Chair feels that this provision does not properly come within that provision of clause 2 of rule XXI, known as the Holman rule.

The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from West Virginia as to the proviso, and likewise sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the entire paragraph. The entire paragraph will go out on the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: On page 7, beginning in line 10, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Salaries and expenses: For all necessary expenditures of the Bituminous Coal Division in carrying out the purposes of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, approved April 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 72), including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings which, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, are necessary for the efficient discharge of the responsibilities of the Division; contract stenographic reporting services; stationery and office supplies; purchase, rental, exchange, operation, maintenance, and repair of reproducing, photographing, and other such equipment, typewriters, calculating machines, mechanical tabulating equipment, and other office appliances and labor-saving devices; printing and binding; witness fees and fees and mileage in accordance with section 8 of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937; not to exceed $4,500 for hire, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles including one for use in the District of Columbia; garage rentals; miscellaneous items, including those for public instruction and information deemed necessary; and not to exceed $1,800 for purchase and exchange of newspapers, lawbooks, reference books, and periodicals, $2,187,800."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I think it is obvious that this amendment as it now stands contains no legislation. I shall not take the time of the Committee to discuss it at this time.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The only thing this amendment does is to reinsert a portion of the paragraph to which a point of order was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], and the bill is exactly as written down to the proviso on page 8.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania to the amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: In the last line of the gentleman's amendment, after the word "periodicals", strike out "$2,187,800" and insert "$1,187,800."

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, so that I may explain the purpose and significance of this amendment to the Committee, I would like to relate a brief history of the legislation pertaining to the bituminous-coal industry. The first attempt to regulate bituminous coal came in 1933, under the N. I. R. A., which act was declared unconstitutional in 1935. Following this the first Bituminous Coal Act was passed in 1935 and declared unconstitutional in 1936, and the legislation under which we are operating today was passed in April of 1937, nearly 3 years ago.

I cite these facts to emphasize that since 1933 we have been accumulating records and data, all of which could have been used as a basis for a price-fixing program had the Bituminous Coal Commission, now a Division of the Department of the Interior, been working effectively.

I voted for the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, hoping it might possibly bring some order to an industry which was in comparative distress, but we have learned from experience since the passage of that act in April 1937 that the legislation itself contains unworkable provisions. Furthermore, there has been obvious maladministration of that legislation, which is well known to most of the Members of this House.

Now, I come from a large bituminous coal district. If any benefits had resulted from this legislation I would be on the floor this afternoon fighting for the full amount of this appropriation. If this meant anything constructive to the coal operators or the coal miners of my district I would be working for this appropriation and not against it.

Mr EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Not at this point, but I will be pleased to yield in a moment.

I ask the membership of this House to pause for a moment before we throw good dollars after bad. Before we appropriate any more money to be wasted—and money has been wasted during the past 5 years on this ill-starred legislation—we should study the record and take account of facts.

The purpose of the Bituminous Coal Act was twofold, first to fix prices, and second to regulate the bituminous-coal industry. During the whole history of this legislation not a single price has been fixed except for one brief period in 1938, and those prices were thrown out 2 months later because they had been arrived at illegally by the Commission. As far as regulating the industry is concerned, it has been plunged from comparative disorder into absolute chaos. Bureaucrats want to control, not regulate. Nothing has been accomplished to benefit the bituminous-coal industry under this legislation. After 5 long years at an estimated cost to the industry and to the people of $20,000,000 the results are zero.

I want to quote from the hearings at page 128, where the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] asked this question:

The question is, What have you accomplished both for the operators and the miners in that time?

The answer was:

Mr. GRAY. Nothing, except the attempt to set the prices, which is now almost accomplished.

Mr. Chairman, refer to the hearings on this legislation during the past 4 years and you will find where that statement "We are about to establish minimum prices," has been made every year since the adoption of the legislation. We are still waiting for that phantom schedule. It is just around that mythical corner today as it was 3 years ago.

Former profitable mines are losing money today; more mines in America are closed today than before the passage of this act in April 1937, and more miners are out of work today than there were then. Does that record warrant confidence, or the further appropriation of good dollars?

Here is the history of bituminous coal since the passage of this vitiating legislation.

Overcome these facts if you can: In 1936 the industry lost slightly in excess of $12,000,000; in 1937, the first year of this legislation, the industry lost $37,000,000; in 1938, the industry lost $60,000,000; and in 1939, the figures are not yet available, but the loss will approximate the losses of 1938. Can the proponents of the Coal Act speak with assurance when they are face to face with such a record? One reason for these losses is the 30-day restrictive contract clause, and I wish you would give me your attention for a moment on this provision. The producers of bituminous coal under the provisions of the Coal Act can contract with consumers for a limited period of only 30 days. You know that large consumers, depending on uninterrupted production schedules and cost schedules, cannot afford to contract for 30-day periods only. We have driven consumers who have previously purchased bituminous coal into the arms of competing fuels. Furthermore, the expense of selling coal every 30 days has been prohibitive. Common sense suggests that.

Price-fixing alone has always been unworkable. We are mocking the experience of history when we try to assure any industry a profit by Government edict, a thing which has never been accomplished unless the Government has owned that particular industry outright. Prices today on coal are based on production costs, and those costs depend on wages and taxes, insurance and State legislation—all of which are dynamic factors. They may change from day to day. Yet after a period of months, we have established in one area alone 500,000 minimum coal prices.

Think of that—500,000 minimum prices, and those prices may be completely changed tomorrow morning, or even before they are made effective, by one slight alteration in the wage structure or in the insurance rates in the coal industry. Is there any human agency that can possibly administer 500,000 complex prices in just one area alone—and there are several areas in this country?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Not now. So today's prices may be obsolete tomorrow morning, and there is going to be constant confusion in this industry even if minimum prices are established. Read what the Consumers' Counsel said—that agency of the Bituminous Commission which was established to protect the consumer. Read what our own agency said of this legislation, and it is contained in its report to Congress of December 27, 1938:

> It is impossible to believe that a police organization—
>
> Meaning the Bituminous Coal Commission—
> will be successful in enforcing regulations and compelling observance of decisions which attempt to put so many prices into effect.

Many of you have no coal mines or miners in your districts, but you all have consumers of bituminous coal. I want you to look on page 71 of the hearings, in which it is stated by Mr. Kirgis, of the Consumers' Counsel, that once these minimum prices are established the coal bill of our people will jump $44,000,000 a year. If you have consumers in your district who can stand that higher cost of living, if the unemployed in your district can afford to pay more for their coal, if the working people in your district can afford to do so, then, by all means, vote against my amendment. My conviction is that the consumers of America are already saddled with too heavy costs of living. This Congress cannot afford to impose higher prices on them for such a fundamental necessity as coal. It is just a matter of robbing Peter to pay Paul, trying to help one economic group at the expense of another. It just is not fair. And it is not good economics.

I wish you would refer to the statement by our colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Anton Johnson, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 23, wherein he states that he has received protests from three large communities in his district because of the increased costs to the citizens of his communities, if these proposed prices are once established.

Mr. Chairman, this matter is not an isolated case. There is a principle involved in this whole legislation. It is for us to decide now whether we are going to arrest the onward march of bureaucracy; whether we are going to veer away from that dangerous tendency we have been following in recent years. We must determine whether we are going to stand by a system of free enterprise as against regulation; reasonable industrial freedom as against bureaucratic dictatorship. On page 28 of the hearings I think the attitude of Mr. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, is clearly revealed when in answer to a question he states:

> Most of this coal goes into interstate commerce. It would work for uniformity, and I think Federal inspection and supervision and other things would be equally or better handled by the Federal Government than by the State. It removes it from local influence.

It is up to us to decide whether we wish to scrap State rights and State regulation and concentrate all power here in the hands of a Federal bureaucracy. When we do that there will, of course, be no democracy here in America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the amendment which he has offered, the effect of which is plain to every Member of the House. It is simply to scuttle the Bituminous Coal Commission.

I grant that the Bituminous Coal Commission has not functioned the way many of us had hoped it might, but there have been several million dollars invested in an effort to try to get it to do what a great many of us believed would be a godsend to the coal industry. We are assured now that they have complied with the legal requirements on price fixing and that those prices will be forthcoming in the very near future. Having invested several million dollars in this matter, certainly we do not want to scuttle the ship before we have given it a trial, to see whether it will work or not.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN], I know, does represent a large bituminous coal producing district. He said, "What good has this act done for the coal industry?" It will do a great deal of good for the coal industry when these prices are fixed. Let me tell you that since we have had the Bituminous Coal Act we have had peace in the coal industry. We have had no bloodshed, and the miners have been working for a living wage. When these prices are fixed the operators will make a fair profit on their production.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I cannot yield. The gentleman did not yield to me.

These things have come out of the industry. We all know the past history of the coal industry—the strife and turmoil and bloodshed for years. Since the enactment of the N. I. R. A. and the Bituminous Coal Commission we have had no bloodshed in the coal industry.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Up in our section there has been a great deal of opposition to the Bituminous Coal Commission because of the fear that in setting these prices you are talking about they are going to make it so high that we cannot afford to use that type of coal up there, and as a result at the present time there is a move on foot to borrow $11,000,000 through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of running a gas pipe line from the Kansas gas fields, and gas will be substituted for coal. What is the gentleman's answer to that?

Mr. EDMISTON. The gentleman will find that when he gets his gas up there from Kansas that unless an entirely unreasonable price is fixed on coal, it cannot compete with coal.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I think the gentleman should tell the House that this money is all collected from the coal operators by a special tax, and none of it comes out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. EDMISTON. That is true. Members of the committee will point that out later. But 1-cent-a-ton tax, paid by the producer, the coal operator, will at the end of this fiscal year have paid more money into the Treasury than all of this has cost the Government.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. These coal operators pay the tax, but they pass it on to the consumer, do they not?

Mr. EDMISTON. Well, does not the consumer always pay all the taxes?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Is it not true that the reason why the act has not been put into effect is because of the cases in the courts that have been held up?

Mr. EDMISTON. Of course, the court threw out the prices that they did establish and made them do it in a different way; that has taken this time. You can all imagine how much time it takes to fix 400,000 prices on anything.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I am deeply interested in the coal question by reason of the many coal miners in my district, but I think the gentleman has confused many Members. The gentleman mentioned a moment ago that the Bituminous Coal Commission has brought peace to the coal industry. How did the Bituminous Coal Commission bring peace to the industry?

Mr. EDMISTON. Because under price fixing the operator can pay a fair, decent, living, American wage to the miner, and he does not have the old strife and turmoil and bloodshed that he had in the olden days. He believes that prices will be fixed and he can make a legitimate profit.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. But there has been no price fixed.

Mr. EDMISTON. Eighty percent of the coal operators are trying to comply with what they want when the prices are fixed. They are trying to anticipate it and do it on that basis.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Until prices are fixed the industry will have to depend on agreements already negotiated between the producers and the miners?

Mr. EDMISTON. That is right.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Therefore the Bituminous Coal Commission has had nothing to do with peace in the industry.

Mr. EDMISTON. The Bituminous Coal Division has had a great deal to do with peace in the coal fields since its establishment.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNS. What do I understand by "the fixing of 400,000 different prices"?

Mr. EDMISTON. They have to fix the price of coal for each mine to each market to which that mine ships its coal. You can readily see how many prices there would be for one mine. One mine may operate two or three different veins of coal, and the price will have to be fixed for each seam of coal. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in Pennsylvania we used to have 800,000 miners; today we have about 400,000.

Mr. Chairman, I am interested in seeing that the miners of Pennsylvania have jobs. What is the result if they do not? We have to find something else for them to do. I do not want to do anything that would in any way interfere with the Pennsylvania miners, although I have very, very few in my district.

The bituminous-coal code requires the mine operators to come under its provisions or pay a penalty of 19½ percent. You will see on page 125 of the hearings where I asked Mr. Gray whether they would compel them to come under the code. He said no, they are not compelled to, but any mine operator who would not come under the act would be a fool, because he has to pay only 1 penny a ton if he comes under the act, but if he does not then he is fined 19½ percent. They drive them into it, yet Mr. Gray says they are not compelled to come in.

All I have to say is that a 19½-percent fine would compel anyone to come under a code. What is the result? They have gone around to every mine operator in Pennsylvania and told him that if he did not come under he would be fined 19½ percent. Well they will all come under the act to avoid the penalty.

What is the result of operations under the Bituminous Coal Commission? In 5 years we have poured $10,000,000 into this Commission. When it was a 5-man board they were always at loggerheads and fighting each other every time they came before our subcommittee. Not once were they in harmony as to what they wanted. It was terrible. I must admit though that it is a whole lot better under the management of Mr. Gray than it was under the 5-man board.

If the Commission required all the money provided under this item of the bill to operate their established program for 1 year I would not object to it, but I think it could easily be cut down by $1,000,000 and the carrying out of the purpose of the Bituminous Coal Act would not be interfered with one iota. We could thus save $1,000,000. I think it is only wise that the committee adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Does the gentleman feel that after having expended the tremendous amount of money that has already been expended it is good economy to prevent putting into effect the very thing we desired when we first passed the act?

Mr. RICH. I tried to explain how I felt about that. After 5 years of effort and $10,000,000 expense they have not even fixed the price of coal. It is ridiculous. I know it is said the price of coal will be published on the 1st of April. The basic principle being established, and everybody being signed up, it is simply ridiculous to believe that they cannot properly function with the amount of money that would be left in the bill if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] is adopted. I feel confident they will still have sufficient money. It will not destroy the act; it will help it and eliminate a lot of political leeches, who are of no service to the Department.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that from a purely economic standpoint in order to fix prices you must control production also? And is it not further true that this bureaucracy in Washington is trying to control production at the mine and that the next step will be outright ownership?

Mr. RICH. Absolutely, and it will do very great damage and injury to the coal-mining industry. I hope that the coal industry of Pennsylvania, instead of going backward, will go ahead so we can give our miners work. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have been trying for some time to get an opportunity to debate this amendment, but the Committee has not seen fit to give me a chance to be recognized. Unless assured that I shall have 5 minutes, I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Permit the Chair to state that the Clerk has furnished the Chair with a list showing the following gentlemen as seeking recognition on this amendment: Messrs. MAY, KELLER, LEAVY, JOHNS, REECE of Tennessee, and JOHNSON of Oklahoma.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the splendid and able arguments made by the two gentlemen from Pennsylvania would be apropos were we still operating under the seven-man board that had a lot of trouble, legal and otherwise. But that board is a thing of the past. It does seem that a lot of prejudice still is held here against the present set-up because Members disliked the old Coal Commission.

I do not think I am unfair when I say that the gentleman's argument is about the same as he made last year against the seven-man board. A year ago, when the members of that board appeared before our committee, they were divided as to policy and were not in accord. Some of them were said not to be on speaking terms. That situation, however, no longer obtains. But the present Director, Mr. Howard Gray, is doing a good job and I think every member of the committee who heard his testimony realizes and appreciates he is doing an outstanding work. Harmony and efficiency has replaced chaos and inefficiency.

I want to call the attention of the members of the committee to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations has been able to cut this appropriation $1,312,000 below the figure appropriated last year for the seven-man board. I am glad to say to the Members that they have already eliminated a large part of the personnel and other expenses. After this has been done and after hearing the evidence, the committee slashed another $200,000 from the appropriation and we feel that the bill has been reduced about as much as possible and still maintain efficiency.

Mr. Chairman, I speak as one who has no coal in his district. Moreover, it is well known that I voted against the original bill establishing the Bituminous Coal Commission. But we have it now, the law is functioning, and it is doing a good job. We heard no protests, except from one Member of Congress. We did not hear a protest from a single coal miner or coal operator. Not one of them appeared before our committee and asked that the appropriation be eliminated or reduced.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. We did not ask any coal operators to appear.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; neither did we ask 50 Members of Congress to come before the committee, either; but some 50 of them appeared before our committee, and all, save 1, asked for increased appropriations.

We have reduced this item as far as we feel it can be reduced and at the same time efficiently function. Let me call attention to the fact that 1 year hence this law expires. If you eliminate a million dollars from this bill, you will simply be saying, "We are not going to wait a year. We do not propose to give Mr. Gray and his set-up an opportunity to make good. We are going to do it now just in order to show we did not like that seven-man board that preceded him."

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] is one of my good friends. I have gone into his own district more than once and have been delighted to speak for him. He is an able and valuable Member of this body. He appeared before our committee and repeatedly said he was against the bill, and he is against the appropriation for the Coal Division. All of us know of his personal feelings on the matter. Members who are against it, who are not willing to give the new Director any chance at all; then, I submit, that they ought to vote against any appropriation; but certainly they should not cripple the bill by voting for the pending amendment. But those who are willing to give Mr. Gray and his organization a chance to make good, as they are already doing, then, may I ask you to vote down the Allen amendment?

Mr. RICH. We appropriated last year over $3,000,000, and he has up to the 1st of July to spend the unexpended portion of that appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is right.

Mr. RICH. He is going to have the price of coal on April 1. By the 1st of July he can cut down his force, and it would be good business to do that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. This bill proposes to cut the appropriation down about one-third. This bill, I again remind Members, represents a reduction of more than $1,300,000 below what they had last year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to talk about the feature of this bill that affects as much, if not more, the State of Pennsylvania than any other State in the Union. Pennsylvania in population is a large State, and in coal production it stands number one, or did until West Virginia exceeded it. Kentucky comes about third. I happen to have been engaged in the coal business long enough to learn that the problem of price-fixing is a most difficult one. First of all you are up against about 6 or 7 different grades of coal; then you are up against numerous kinds of coal; and when a commission is dealing with a great industry as basic as the coal industry is, an industry that covers 37 of the 48 States, it has a stupendous problem. May I say that I do not believe in fixing prices and the only way I can justify my vote against the amendment is to say that I have never believed in spending, as some have asserted here, $10,000,000 in an effort to complete a job with a fixed objective, and then cut off a million dollars to keep it from being performed in the end.

I was a little amazed that my colleague from West Virgina [Mr. EDMISTON] said this involved a job of fixing some 400,000 different prices. When you figure there are seven grades of coal, all selling at different prices, going into three or four different markets and into a multitude of different uses, you can appreciate what a difficult problem it is. It may never be accomplished. But inasmuch as the money comes out of the pockets of the coal producers, I think it would be unwise of the Congress to undertake to nullify a statute which we ourselves enacted by withdrawing an appropriation to make it effective.

May I say further that there is no industry in this country that pays unskilled labor higher wages than the coal industry—and I mean by unskilled labor the ordinary coal loader who takes a pick and shovel and goes into the mine and loads the coal. When you say that they cannot fix the price of coal, it means that in the State of Pennsylvania, where there are some 400,000 men making their living by loading coal, you are, in effect, saying that they will not get credit for what we know in the coal mines as bug dust, which comes from the cutter bar of the machine. About 6 inches of the coal goes back into the gob, as we term it, and the miner gets no credit for that. If there is a price fixed on that and a price can be found, it will enable the coal loader to have in his pay check at the end of the half of the month credit for the bug dust that he has never heretofore received, and I want to say on behalf of the 30,000 coal loaders who live in the eight great counties of my district that I would like to see them get credit for it. I am not going to vote to cut the throat and assassinate the legislation that they have sponsored by withdrawing the appropriation, legislation enacted by the Congress.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is anxious to have his miners work. The only way that his miners can have jobs is to have the operators sell coal.

Mr. MAY. That is right.

Mr. RICH. If you increase the price of coal so that coal competes with oil, then you are going to put coal out of business, and the consumers will all use oil. You will not be able to increase the wages of your men, who you say get high wages now, if they mine something that the operators cannot sell, and you will do your miners an injustice.

Mr. MAY. In the oil business you do not have half a dozen different kinds of oil coming out of the same well. In the coal industry you do have different grades of coal coming out of the same mine. The only purpose of the fixing of prices is to make profitable the under grades of the coal by providing, not a high price but a stabilized uniform price in particular markets. If prices can be stabilized and thereby bring about a stabilized and steady year-round market, that means steady employment for the coal miners and steady and profitable business for the merchants and other business interests in thousands of communities where coal is produced. That is the kind of business I want. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE].

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I believe, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, it is generally admitted the Bituminous Coal Division, as it is now operating under the Interior Department, is doing a good job and is conscientiously trying to carry out the purposes of the act, and will do so unless handicapped by inadequate funds. The amount provided in this bill is more than $1,000,000 less than the old Commission used in the previous year and the amount is some $200,000 less than the estimate of the Budget Bureau, and the Budget estimate was less than the estimate of the Coal Division. The amount collected by the 1-cent tax levied under the act well exceeds the amount provided for its administration. It amounted to about $3,750,000 in 1939 and it is expected this year to be something like $4,000,000. Thus the amount to be collected from the tax imposed is substantially more than the appropriation recommended. The purpose of this tax, though not expressly so stated in the act, is to defray the cost of administering it and not for the purpose of general revenue.

In my opinion, it is unfair to the coal industry, who pays the tax, and to those charged with the responsibility of administering the act, not to provide a sufficient amount of the tax revenue to properly carry out its purposes. This is particularly true during the period when the act is being put into operation, which is the case during this period. The coal industry wants the act given a fair trial. This cannot be done unless the Division is given an adequate appropriation during the rest of the year. Unless this is done we will never know whether the act can be made to function in the interest of the coal industry, in the interest of the employees, and in the interest of the public. If we are not going to provide sufficient money to ascertain whether that purpose of the act can be carried out, then I say we ought to eliminate the entire item at this time. We will never be able to find out if it is able to function in the interest of the public and the industry unless we give it sufficient money to carry out the purposes of the act. The appropriation should be governed by the requirements as estimated by the Division unless those estimates are shown to be erroneous. I think myself we ought to have provided the money which the Division felt it should have in order to function properly, since its estimates were not shown to be erroneous. Certainly the committee went far enough when it reduced the estimate of the Budget Bureau by $200,000. The Division should not be handicapped by lack of money so that the act will not have a fair trial in its operation.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. We have had this Commission set up for 4 years and have given them $10,000,000, but they have been fighting all the time and have not even fixed the prices of coal. After spending $10,000,000 they say they will have the price schedule ready by the 1st of April. Does not the gentleman believe they ought to be able to function and do what it was intended they do without having all these men on the pay roll, who were not required even when they were making up this price schedule?

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. The old Coal Commission had a very difficult problem to face. I presume none of us feel that it functioned as well as it should have, but it encountered difficulties, some of which were legal. After it was ready, at one time, to promulgate prices, due to interpretations by the Court, it was found necessary to withdraw proposed schedules and start anew with reference to the determination of prices. Regardless of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania may say about the old Commission, he admits the Division is now doing a much better job, and it is generally felt that it is doing an excellent job. I think those in charge of its administration should be commended. They certainly should have our cooperation after we have given them this responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, it would be very unfortunate if this amendment should be adopted. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I agree heartily with what the gentleman who just preceded me had to say. He has given a very fair, a very sensible, and a very rational statement in regard to the entire matter.

Referring to my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN], let me suggest that under the N. R. A. the great John Morrow companies did make money. They can make it again when we have proper control of the industry, and they will do it. It happens, however, to be an outfit that has never believed that anything the present administration has ever done or ever will do is any good at all, and therefore it is "agin it" whether it has any sense to it or not. Let me suggest to the young gentleman himself that if he believes this act is unworkable, instead of trying to sabotage the act he should bring to this body proper amendments to make it workable.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. No. The gentleman would not yield to me and I cannot yield to him—the gentleman had twice as much time as I am getting—although I would like to beat the gentleman in his own argument, because he cannot defend his position.

There is only one object sought by this amendment, and that is to sabotage the entire program that this act has provided for.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Is not this an indirect attempt to kill this piece of legislation?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Is it not a fact that there is no demand from either the operators or the miners to repeal the Bituminous Coal Act?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion.

If any man who thinks the task of setting the prices of coal is an easy one will look into it just slightly, he will find that it is one of the most difficult problems we have ever undertaken. I also am against all price fixing if the problems involved can be solved otherwise.

I want to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] raised the question as to whether the farmers in his section of the country should pay higher prices for heat, for coal. My understanding is that we all want fair prices for the farmers. I know I want fair prices for mine, and I think everybody else wants fair prices for their farmers. But I also want fair prices for the coal producers and coal miners, and I think everybody who has coal production in his district wants the same thing. The truth of the matter is that what we are really trying to do here is to set up such conditions as will bring about fair prices for everybody. That is a national idea we are seeking to solve.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman for a question only.

Mr. MAY. Is not the situation that we have here very much like the man who gets a house built up to the roof and then plasters it and goes off and leaves it?

Mr. KELLER. That is exactly what would be the effect of adopting this amendment.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Is it not possible that this Board will ultimately develop a set of facts through the work they have been doing which will solve the problem?

Mr. KELLER. Exactly; and I want to suggest that since the gentlemen from Pennsylvania who have interested themselves in this discussion have pointed out that the drift up at the Coal Commission at the present time is toward nationalization of the mines, I would call attention to the fact that unless we can find a solution for this problem somewhere along the line we are working on we will be drifting toward the very thing that has taken place in Europe, and that is nationalization of the coal mines. And I commend that to both the gentlemen for their study and consideration.

I am hopeful we can work out a plan that will enable us to retrieve the fortunes of the soft-coal industry and save it from any nationalization. But I am not going to close my eyes to what has taken place in other countries where the same conditions have preceded a nationalization of the mines. I insistently suggest to both of the gentlemen that they study that subject and investigate both the conditions precedent and the conditions following the nationalization of mines in Europe.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield in connection with this matter?

Mr. KELLER. For a question, please.

Mr. ALEXANDER. In connection with the building of this gas pipe line from the Kansas gas fields to the northwest section of the country, and this question the gentleman is bringing up of the higher price level for bituminous coal, it seems to me that the two do not jibe. You cannot spend this Government money——

Mr. KELLER. I yielded for a question. I cannot yield for a long statement.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Can you spend this $11,000,000 that the Government is going to spend to run this gas pipe line from the Kansas fields to the northwest and then raise the price of coal and continue to compete?

Mr. KELLER. You want a fair price for your farm products, and so do I, and that is what we are trying to get all along, and therefore it is a national question and not a local one.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. I would like to ask the gentleman this question. If the gentleman is so interested in the miner, how can he figure that by appropriating for the Tennessee Valley Authority—and the gentleman has voted for practically everything they wanted down there—he is helping the miners of Illinois and bringing about an increased demand for coal?

Mr. KELLER. I know the answer to that, if you will let me make it, and it is an answer just to your liking, and here it is. Before the T. V. A. came in we had no yardstick for measuring the price of power to industry. But by having T. V. A. we got a yardstick and it is a success and it does not hurt the miners of Illinois or any others, but gives them the opportunity of doing a lot better job than they would otherwise have been able to do. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, I have listened this afternoon to a great deal of talk about the operators of the coal mines, and I am reminded of a happening a few years ago at a convention where the late Will Rogers was to speak. He listened to the presiding officer introducing everybody who was on the stage and finally, when he got up to speak, he said:

> Now, I have listened to this old, bald-headed man over here introduce everybody on the stage, and now, if it would not take too much time, I would like to introduce the audience.

[Applause.]

So, if it will not take too much time here I would like to say something about the people back home; something about the effect on the dealer and the man with a family who has to buy this coal, and also the man who is operating a business. They would like to know something about what is going on.

I was amazed this afternoon, and have been ever since I have been in Congress, to hear the debates on this bituminous-coal law. Sitting here, a few moments ago, I asked the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] whether he was in the United States Senate when Bob La Follette asked to have the railroads valued, saying we would then have a basis for fixing freight rates and passenger rates. I remember when that started out, the Senator said it would cost about $5,000,000, and that they would get the value very soon, and we would then know just what to do in fixing rates. The fact of the matter is, it took 20 years before they were valued, and instead of costing $5,000,000 it cost about $25,000,000, and by the time they got the railroads valued, of course, the valuation was no good because conditions had changed so that they were of no value.

We have been fixing the price, or trying to fix the price, of coal. Somebody said here that there are approximately 500,000 prices already fixed. It is amazing that we should sit around here and expect any business to properly function with 500,000 different prices on 1 commodity alone. We have increased the pay roll of the Federal Government over 400,000 people in the last 6 or 7 years, and it will take 400,000 more people to check up on these prices, if they are fixed, to see that they are enforced.

I have had quite a number of letters from people back home who are selling coal. They would like to enter into a contract to buy some coal, but they do not know whether the prices will be reasonable or whether they will be fixed on the 1st of April at a sum that would enable them to safely deal in coal or not. No doubt they are arranging now so that they can safely do business on the assumption that the prices are to be fixed higher at that time. That being true, many of the people are assuming that these prices are already in effect—that they have already been fixed—because they have been increasing each year. If we are going to increase the price of coal so that it will amount to $44,000,000 a year more, we should think very seriously about this proposition, and I am afraid that by the time these prices are fixed the first of those 500,000 prices will be out of date and that we will have to fix some more.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNS. Yes.

Mr. MAY. I hope my colleague did not understand me to say that we were going to fix higher prices. What I had in mind was to fix regular prices so that the mines could operate, not on a seasonal basis, such as they do in cold weather and then slow up in hot weather, but so that they could operate the year round, so that the employment and the business would be regular.

Mr. JOHNS. I do not think the gentleman said anything about raising the prices, but it was stated here that it would increase the price to the consumer about $44,000,000 a year.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit, Mr. Kirgis, of the Consumers' Counsel, very definitely stated in the hearings that it will increase the price to the consumers $44,000,000 a year. Of course, the dealer will be compelled to raise his price to the consumer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I think I can approach this troublesome question in reference to the bituminous-coal industry in quite an impersonal and open-minded manner. My district does not produce a single pound of coal and there is not any prospect of its ever producing any coal, but as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having in charge the Interior Department appropriation bill, I had a part in writing the bill; and if gentlemen will turn to the hearings, they will find that as a subcommittee we gave this whole subject matter a real going over, and we were all of the opinion that in the early stages of its organization they had shortcomings, but this is an excellent agency now. It would be unwise at this late hour to attempt to cut them off, and also we were of the opinion that it is not within the province of our subcommittee to nullify a legislative act of the whole Congress that provided the coal legislation. I do not know whether it is good legislation or otherwise. Nevertheless, it is the law of the land, and this Commission has been functioning for several years. The Supreme Court held the first act unconstitutional. This act has been held constitutional, and on April 1 of this year, within the next 30 days, they are going to fix prices. Whether we approve this amendment or not, they will collect from the American public during this next year, unless we repeal the whole act, $4,000,000. We as a committee ask you to appropriate the sum of $2,187,000. They had $3,500,000 last year. The Bureau of the Budget cut them $1,100,000, and the committee, after long, careful, and earnest consideration, made another cut of $200,000. I think we made a mistake when we did that. I contend that it would be just as wise to cut the whole appropriation out as to say to this organization, "We will cut your appropriation half in two." The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] appeared before our committee and made a very thorough, careful, and intelligent statement. I asked him if he would place in the record the names of the companies and the operators that oppose the act, and he did that. He gave us some 90 operators. There are 13,500 operators in the United States affected by the act. My colleague from Pennsylvania gave us 90. As soon as I had those I made some further inquiry to ascertain if they were extensive producers, and where they were located, and these are some of the facts that I discovered. A lot of them are what they call strip-mine operators, who operate under different conditions from those who operate in shaft mining. I find this concerning these operators:

One of them—William H. Cooke, of Walter Bledsoe & Co., Terre Haute, Ind.—is an attorney, and not a coal operator at all.

J. T. M. Stoneroad, president, Carnegie Coal Corporation, Pittsburgh, Pa., has sold all of his interest and is no longer identified with that company.

C. F. Richardson, of the West Kentucky Coal Co., Sturgis, Ky., is dead.

R. J. Cotts, president, Hitchman Coal & Coke Co., Wheeling, W. Va., sent me this telegram earlier, which I want to read into the RECORD to show you that the coal industry itself is not in opposition to this legislation or this appropriation.

Mr. Cotts says:

On page 1188 of part 1, Interior Department appropriation bill for 1941, the name of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co., of Wheeling, W. Va., is listed as a company being drastically opposed to the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937. Mr. Cotts is no longer with this company, and I, as president of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co., of Wheeling, W. Va., specifically request that the name of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co., of Wheeling, W. Va., be removed from this list, as we are without question in favor of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. LEAVY. My time has practically expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I was asked by the gentleman to include in the record at the time of the hearings letters from those companies who had opposed it. If those men have died in the meantime, I have no control over an act of God.

Mr. LEAVY. I have just presented you a telegram from one of the big operators who repudiates the fact that his name should be included in this list.

I hope that the committee will vote down the amendment. Let us not destroy this agency just when we have an opportunity to find out what they can do. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 73, noes 83.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania and Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 88, noes 74.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all expenses necessary to enable the Bonneville Power Administrator to exercise and perform the powers and duties imposed upon him by the act "to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of the Bonneville project, for navigation, and for other purposes," approved August 20, 1937 (50 Stat. 731), including personal services, travel expenses, purchase and exchange of equipment, printing and binding, and purchase and exchange (including one at not to exceed $1,200), maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $5,650,000, of which amount $8,200 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia and $641,800 shall be available for expenses of marketing and transmission facilities, and administrative costs in connection therewith: Provided, That this appropriation and the unexpended balances of appropriations and allotments heretofore made for the construction of the power distribution system shall be available until expended and shall be accounted for as one fund entitled "Construction, Operation, and Maintenance, Bonneville Power Transmission System."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Page 12, line 24, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation or the unexpended balances of any appropriation or allotment which may be available for the construction of transmission lines shall be available for the construction of the Pasco-Colfax transmission line or the Pasco-Pendleton transmission line."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the attention of the Committee, in the interest of economy, for just a little, because the amendment which is on the desk at the present time proposes to prohibit and interdict the use of any funds for the construction of two proposed transmission lines which will cost about $4,000,000.

I have no quarrel particularly with the Bonneville Power Administration. It has been installed. They have two generators operating. They expect to put two more generators into operation sometime around the beginning of 1941. So there is no use crying over whether or not it was a good venture or a bad venture. But the fact remains that there is no sense in the Congress providing funds for the expansion of transmission facilities for the wholesale distribution of power in areas that are now supplied, or where the proposal is to spend the taxpayers' money without any thought or any possibility of ever securing a return on the investment.

Now, follow this briefly: If you will let your mind dwell on the upper northwest corner of the United States of America, you will find two States that form somewhat of a rectangle—Washington on top and Oregon down below. Over on the east side, bounding the States on the east, is the State of Idaho, with the long panhandle extending all the way from the lower boundary of Oregon to the upper boundary of Washington. What they propose to do with $2,600,000 in this bill is to build a line from a little town called Pasco, with a population of 7,000, over to another small town called Colfax, and then across the line to Lewiston, Idaho. There are a number of reasons, in my judgment, why it should not be done.

It is going to be a 145-mile line, and it is going to cost $2,600,000. The need for power, or the outlets for the sale of power are not to be found there. So when you seek to amortize this investment from the standpoint of depreciation and an interest return, you are not going to be able to get the money back.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me proceed, please.

That is the objection I have to it. It is the old story that was started by Columbus, which came first, the hen or the egg. That has never been satisfactorily demonstrated that I know of. But what they are doing here is to extend power lines out into sparsely populated areas in the speculative hope that there will be customers, so they will get their power cheaper within those areas, but the people in the more populous centers must pay the bill on an average rate.

There is included also $1,400,000 for a line from a little town called Pasco to a town across the border in Oregon, the town of Pendleton, a distance of 65 miles. Pendleton is a town of 7,000 people. The average electric bill in that area will be around $3.50 per capita. Finally, you may expect they will extend the line another 50 miles down to La Grande, Oreg., and they will ask for another $1,000,000. So, for approximately 115 miles of line in this direction, we will have another $2,500,000 invested.

You must appreciate that Bonneville is in the nature of a sales organization. It sells its power wholesale, not retail. Consequently, it has got to sell power to municipalities or public-utility districts organized under the law or to large industries such as the newly proposed aluminum company that is coming into that area. But if you are going to spend $1,400,000 on the line from Pasco to Pendleton, you are going to get back at the very most about $40,000 gross. But that is not all. Pendleton has a power plant. They are operating under contracts that probably cannot be canceled overnight. So you spend $1,000,000 of the taxpayers' money for a 65-mile line into a town of 7,000 population through an area that is sparsely populated; that is wheat country and no good place to find an outlet for power.

It is also proposed to send $2,600,000 to go across to Lewiston, Idaho, where they do not want Bonneville power. As I remember, the Governor of Idaho and others indicated definitely that they did not want the line. They have some hydro or some reclamation projects in their own State that they would like to develop. Consequently they do not want Bonneville power.

I for one can see absolutely no justification for authorizing or making available funds for building a line into Lewiston, Idaho, or for going down into Oregon to the town of Pendleton.

There is another reason why I am opposed to this. If we authorize the line to Pendleton, then in a year or so they will extend the line down to La Grande, in the district of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE]. I do not know what the situation is down there, but I have been informed that they have a reclamation project proposed down there that some day they might want to develop power of their own down around La Grande. La Grande is a town of about 7,000 or 8,000 people. The gross revenue we could expect from there would be around $30,000 or $35,000, and you cannot amortize this kind of expenditure, charging off depreciation and interest on invested capital, and ever recover or recapture the investment for the taxpayers. So as a purely balance-sheet proposition it occurs to me that this is a speculative undertaking, and it ought to be stricken from the bill, and it will be if this amendment is adopted. It should not be undertaken until the Bonneville administration can justify on a market-outlet basis that there is some reasonable hope over a period of time of recapturing the investment that is now proposed to be made of money belonging to the people of the United States of America.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Are these cities the gentleman just mentioned already supplied with electricity by private concerns?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; by private companies. Now, I hold no brief for the power companies out there. I suppose some of them are operating some plants, possibly not as efficiently as they should, and maybe their rates are not quite as low as they ought to be; I do not know. It has been testified, however, that in this particular area they have got rates so low that if you add the interest on the investment you will be on a T. V. A. basis.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman has not, of course, had the privilege of reading the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs on the tax situation in Tennessee, but I want to say to the gentleman that the State of Tennessee is practically destroyed from a revenue standpoint. Public-health activities are being suspended, and schools are going to be suspended unless something is done about it. If we go out around the Columbia River and start to take business away from private utilities they will be faced with the same situation cut there.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The problem of tax displacement will not arise in the Bonneville area in the same proportion that it did in the Tennessee Valley area.

I do not approach this question from the standpoint of tax displacement, but I say that in a sparsely settled country like this, with so few people, they ought to wait a little while to see whether there is justification for expending $4,000,000 on a line that under no conceivable circumstances can ever return the investment. It is only a common-sense, sound, business approach to the problem involving the expenditure of this money; therefore we ought to interdict the expansion and the construction of these two lines in that area.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I understand that the Bonneville Authority is selling the Mellon interests electricity at 3 mills. Can the gentleman tell me what the ordinary people buy this electricity for?

Mr. DIRKSEN. They have a varying rate out there. They have a gross rate that is based on kilowatt-year usage. They have been talking about 2 mills per kilowatt-hour, but that does not enter into the picture, in my judgment. I say that before we expend $1,400,000 to go 65 miles with a line to a town of 7,000 people, which at the very most can only return from $30,000 to $35,000 in aggregate power revenues, we ought to take a piece of paper and pencil and figure out in a very substantial way to see where we are coming out so far as a Federal investment is concerned, and we will not come out. When we remember that the prohibition on the Bonneville Power Administration is that they have to sell their power to public-utility districts, to municipalities, and to large industries, not small consumers, it will be seen that they have to find an outlet through towns and public-utility districts. In this particular area, Pendleton, for instance, voted not to come into a county utility district, and other communities in that area have voted these P. U. D.'s down. As a result, I see no hope of ever recapturing this money, and it occurs to me that is a question we should consider before we load the Federal Treasury with another $4,000,000 of expense.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if we can determine how many Members want to speak on this amendment.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I want 10 minutes to reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I ask for 10 minutes.

Mr. LEAVY. I shall have to object to 10 minutes. Each Member may have 5 minutes.

Mr. PIERCE. He saw fit to abuse my country for 10 minutes and I want to tell the facts.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, we cannot finish this bill if all Members take 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 50 minutes, and that the committee be given 8 minutes in which to close the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY]?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, unless I can get 5 minutes I shall object.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Washington if his request might not be limited to this particular amendment? I know of two other amendments to be offered to the paragraph as a whole on this side of the House.

Mr. LEAVY. I am anxious to expedite the consideration of this bill, which contains 144 pages. Unless we expedite its consideration, we will spend an unreasonable time on it. How much additional time does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think we ought to have 15 or 20 minutes in addition.

Mr. LEAVY. Can the gentleman get along with 10 minutes?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Ten minutes on each of two amendments. Cannot the gentleman limit his request to the pending amendment?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY]?

Mr. WIGGLSEWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour and 10 minutes, the last 10 minutes to be reserved for the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY]?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it is rather difficult for us who are interested in this particular item to agree to limit debate when we do not know what the two other amendments are. If we can find out, we may not object.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, further reserving the right to object, may it be understood that 20 minutes of the time will be reserved for the other two amendments, so that all three amendments will not be taken up together?

Mr. LEAVY. The unanimous-consent request was made with the understanding that 20 minutes would be reserved for the consideration of the two amendments referred to by the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modified request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY], that al debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour and 10 minutes, 20 minutes of which time shall be used for the two amendments to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] referred?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments to this paragraph close in 1 hour and 10 minutes, the last 10 minutes to be allotted to the committee, and 20 minutes of that time to be given to the consideration of two amendments that have been suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, the Chair has the following list of Members requesting time within the time fixed: The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL], the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, there are living today a quarter of a million people in eastern Oregon and southeastern Washington. At one time I owned and managed the electric power company and the transmission lines connected with the distribution system at La Grande, a small segment of the country under question. I sold that company more than 30 years ago. At that time I was collecting $5,000 a month and had an income of $60,000 a year. The company was sold to the big fellows for $300,000. Talk about income, why, there is plenty of income there.

I will thank the gentleman from Illinois to give me his attention. I listened to him and listened to his clear misstatements. I am entirely familiar with the propaganda of the power companies which he put over in a clear way.

The company that now controls us is a part of Electric Bond & Share. Ours is a rich field for the sale of electric current at low, reasonable rates. That company is selling its electric energy in our country at nearly three times the rate that is being charged in Tacoma or west of the mountains. These power companies are charging extortionate rates.

In the territory to which the gentleman would deny Bonneville current there are several R. E. A. organizations which have as many as 1,000 customers that want to take power from Bonneville. When the districts organized by the R. E. A. want power they now buy of the Pacific Light & Power Co. which is controlled by the Electric Bond & Share. They pay three times the rate they would pay for power from Bonneville.

The cost of these transmission lines will all be repaid within the time limit. No other part of the country is paying the excessive electric rates the Inland Empire is paying. There are possibly sections in there that are solely wheat-raising sections, but there are also large sections of that area that are susceptible of close irrigation, and people will live there by the thousands. They are flocking in now. The quarter of a million now in that country will be a million within a short time. I have given fifty-odd years of my life to that country, and I know about it.

There has been talk about duplicating the lines. The power that comes in there now comes over a 66,000-volt line. The line now contemplated is a 110,000-volt line. Over a 110,000-volt line you will get four to five times as much power as you can get over a 66,000-volt line. The 66,000-volt line means a 15- to 18-percent loss. A 110,000-volt line with a 100-mile transmission means a 5- or 6-percent loss. So there is a vast difference between the proposed Bonneville lines and those now in use. The lines that are there now are all low-voltage lines.

This transmission line should be built because there is no better field anywhere in the country than right there for the sale of electric energy. There is nothing better you can do for the people than to give them Bonneville power, for which there is an eager and a ready market. How much power are we taking now? Precious little. About one-half the farmers are being served, not over that, and they are paying an extortionate rate for the service they are now getting. If they could have Bonneville power, they would take all the line could give them in that territory, and within the time limit the project would pay out. These sections of Oregon and Washington are on the Columbia River and are entitled to Bonneville power. Very naturally, the Electric Bond & Share wants to keep the territory for themselves.

Pendleton is a city of 8,000 people; La Grande has 10,000; and there are other growing, prosperous cities. Public-utility districts are already being formed everywhere. It is in the air. Why should all the Bonneville current flow west?

The propelling force behind the move to cut the Bonneville transmission and marketing appropriation is the Electric Bond & Share Holding Co. This holding company has three operating companies serving that part of Oregon and Washington east of the Cascade Mountains.

In eastern Oregon residential bills for the small consumer using up to 100 kilowatt-hours per month are, on the average, 2.61 times as high as similar Tacoma bills. The eastern Oregon stove and water-heater consumer pays two and thirty-nine one-hundredths times as much as a like consumer does in Tacoma. In southeastern Washington these ratios are 2.10 and 2.03.

Rural cooperatives in this section are paying the private companies at least 2.5 to 2.8, the Bonneville wholesale tariff. A few cooperatives in this section are paying up to three times the Bonneville price for wholesale current. With 100-kilowatt-hour metered use, the difference between present purchased wholesale price and Bonneville wholesale rates represents $12.50 per farm per year. With the increased use of drudgery-relieving appliances, each farm would save $25 per year in the wholesale price alone.

No wonder the Bond & Share group is using every possible effort to kill Bonneville appropriations and thereby keep cheap power out of the eastern part of these two States. The Bond & Share representatives admit that this is their purpose. A careful reading of the testimony before the committee discloses the efforts of the private-power overlords in trying to strangle the rural and domestic consumers of this great section.

Every device known to the business is being used in this effort. False issues are raised to cloud the actual facts.

Eastern Oregon and southeastern Washington have a population of 248,000 people, 91,000 of this total live on farms. This eastern region is devoid of fuels. It is also lacking in installed hydro capacity. The installed hydro capacity of southeastern Washington and eastern Oregon is represented by 26,300 kilowatts. This installed capacity gives a ratio of 105 kilowatts per thousand population.

If rates were as low and use as great as in other parts of these two States, there would be immediate area deficiency of 63,700 kilowatts of installed capacity. This figure represents the immediate potential market of this eastern country if all the available farms were served and the electric rates were lowered. From the experience in other sections of both States, under similar conditions, there will be in a few years a deficiency of 99,500 kilowatts of capacity. If initially only 50 percent of this potential market is reached, the revenue accruing from the lines serving this area will be $875,000 per year. This revenue would warrant a present expenditure on a return basis of $3,500,000, which is below the Budget estimate for proposed eastern lines. With the lowering of rates this revenue will be doubled in a few years. The lines that were set out in the Budget estimate are actually less than conditions and earnings justify for this accessible well-farmed area. In the eastern counties of my district 42 to 72 percent of the occupied farms do not have electricity. The average cash income of these eastern unserved farms is in excess of the State average. This section has an unserved farm population of 45,000 people and an immediate rural market for 15,000 kilowatts. The population of this section is increasing rapidly and will continue to do so because of the irrigation projects under way and changes in the type of farming. Sugar beets, peas for canneries, dairies, and seed production are being substituted for the large wheat farms. People are moving at a high rate into this area from the Dust Bowl.

Notwithstanding a regional lack of fuels and a deficiency in hydro capacity, the area is served from long, low-capacity transmission lines. These lines transport power great distances, at comparative low voltage, from the Yakima, Lewiston, and Spokane areas. From these sources there are only two feed lines into northeastern Oregon, namely, from Pasco and Walla Walla into Pendleton. These lines are 66,000-volt lines with conductors known in the trade as single Zero copper. The average transmitted distance from the power sources over these lines is some 115 miles and the nominal capacity of such lines at this voltage is low. For the farmers and the residential consumers of eastern Oregon to secure lower rates, larger line capacity will be necessary. The existing private lines have only one-fourth to one-fifth of the capacity required to adequately serve this area if our farmers and our people are to secure service at low rates. It seems to be the policy of the private companies to install low-capacity transmission lines in order to keep the rates up.

In southeastern Washington and contiguous territory there are 12 newly formed but successful rural R. E. A. cooperatives. These cooperatives have, within the last 8 months, built over 1,500 miles of farm lines. These cooperatives are purchasing temporarily from the private power companies until low-priced Bonneville current is brought to them. No wonder the Electric Bond & Share desires to keep Bonneville transmission lines away from this eastern market. No wonder our farmers in this eastern country are crying for the erection of Bonneville lines. Is not Congress large enough to tell the Bond & Share operators that we know how to run this Nation's business? Do we have to sit up and take our orders from these overlords, who have so padded their capital structures that the properties in question have the highest book value per customer of any private utility in America? When you vote on these reducing amendments, remember that they were inspired by the Electric Bond & Share Co. for the sole purpose of keeping low-priced current away from our eastern farmers.

These lines were in last year's Budget, and should have been built, as they were included in last year's appropriations which passed the Congress. Now, again, the appropriation for the lines is included and evasion of the clear intent of the law will no longer be possible.

Mr. Chairman, I ask my friends in this House to vote down this amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL] is entitled to recognition for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve my time, if I may, to speak on the other amendment which is more important than this one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] is entitled to recognition for 5 minutes.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have my time on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the statement of the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] as to the insignificance of this proposed project and the unimportance of the country to be served. He refers to the small town of Pasco. I wonder if he knows where or what Pasco is. I wonder if he knows that Pasco is the junction point at the confluence of the mighty Snake and Columbia Rivers and one of the great railroad centers of the Northwest. The gentleman talks about the small town of Lewiston. I am wondering if he knows just where Lewiston, Idaho, is, and what it stands for. I wonder if he knows that Lewiston is at the confluence of the Clearwater and the Snake Rivers and is one of the important commercial centers in Idaho. And when the resources of the immense country tributary to the junction of these rivers is developed will be a great industrial center.

I am wondering if he knows that the greatest stand of timber owned by the Federal Government is in the country tributary to Lewiston, up the Clearwater River, up the Salmon River, and up the Snake River. I am wondering if he knows that the greatest undeveloped section of the United States is in this area of the Northwest which is tributary to the Snake, the Clearwater, and the great Salmon River drainage basin.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. HILL. Did not the gentleman hear the gentleman from Illinois state two or three times that he did not know about this thing? The gentleman made that statement and evidently he does not know anything about it.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It is just like the statement that Proctor Knott made at one time here about Duluth, which turned out to be one of the greatest producing sections of the country.

I would like to remind the gentleman from Illinois that there are 30 miles of iron deposits in the Clearwater country behind Lewiston. I would like to remind the gentleman from Illinois that the West has to come East for its iron products, but with electricity and electric smelting we can produce our own iron and develop our own country, build up western industries, and be a market for the things that they produce in the East.

I would like for the gentleman from Illinois to know something about the proposed development of this country and the need for electric energy and cheap power. I want to substantiate what my good friend from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] said. We need high-tension power lines to transmit cheap electricity.

I have here a map of Idaho and I call your attention to the location of Lewiston and to the location of this great forest section owned by the Federal Government. All that timber is waiting to be manufactured by cheap power. We want to build pulp and fiber mills, we want to develop that country and continue on the path of progress in this country, and the utilization of the power of Bonneville and the transmission of that power to this great area of Federal-owned resources is a great step forward.

This is a conservation measure. This is a constructive measure, and it will do more good and be of more benefit to the United States, and particularly to the Federal Government, than anything this Congress can do; and do not forget that it will repay every dollar that is expended. This is a reimbursible project. It is a development project, and it is a utilization of a big investment that has been made at Bonneville, and I earnestly urge that the Committee vote down this amendment and do the thing that was originally intended to be done, and develop our own resources and bring revenue to our Federal Government by utilizing the timber and the minerals in all this great undeveloped country that is tributary to Lewiston in the States of Idaho, Oregon, and Washington. Providing transmission lines for this power will be a great forward step.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Is it not true that that country today is yielding a revenue to the Bond & Share of $1,000,000 a year, and that is right now?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Idaho yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In response to the gentleman's recurrent questions, may I say to him that I think I do know, and I also know how to take a piece of paper, irrespective of whether it is in Oregon, Illinois, or Florida, or Texas, and figure out what an investment has to earn before the taxpayers can come out with a whole skin.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I will say to the gentleman that Mr. Proctor Knott, in talking about building a bridge at Duluth many years ago, presented the same theory that the gentleman from Illinois is presenting here now, and the day will come when we will develop this country, and it will take its place as a great producing section of the United States comparable with the country in Pennsylvania and the gentleman's whisky-producing section of Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Why does not the gentleman tell the House how many people are out there?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It is not a question of how many people are there. It is the development of our country and the people it will bring there.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is in favor of the Government developing cheap electricity. Is he in favor of the Government producing cheap silver or mining cheap silver?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I am in favor of anything that will develop our country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] for 5 minutes.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, if I may, I desire to yield my time to the gentleman from Oregon, Governor PIERCE, later in the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of the Dirksen amendment not merely on the ground of economy but because of a proposition that I think is involved in this legislation that is of vital importance and reaches to the very heart of the program. I have had just a few years' acquaintance with my distinguished and amiable friends on the committee, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] and the gentleman from Oregon, Governor PIERCE. They are very excellent and able Members of this House and very fine gentlemen. Anything I say about this proposition is not personal, nor is it particularly with any delight in differing from them.

I oppose this legislation upon the fundamental belief that there are two schools of thought in this country, one that believes in the capitalistic system and one that, whether it believes in the capitalistic system or the socialistic system, is promoting and supporting a program that will ultimately lead to the socialization of the electrical industry throughout this country. That is the ground principally on which I oppose this program. That is based upon my study of the subject for several years, plus my last 2 months of dealing with the conditions that have been brought about in the States of Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia, and in other States of the South, by reason of the Congress allowing the Government to buy out and take over private utilities and put them into Government operation. I say to you now that, in my judgment, there has not been a more serious problem for the people of Tennessee and surrounding States since the days of reconstruction than they have in those States now. It means that unless Congress does something about it—and I do not know what it is going to do in the matter—for the next year these Southern States are going to be largely compelled to discontinue public-health activities, to largely discontinue their schools, because of the withdrawal of private properties from taxation. If anyone can tell me that the Federal Government by subsidizing a proposition like Bonneville, that goes out and builds transmission lines and authorizes it to go into the markets and take away from private facilities the markets they have, is not going to create a similar condition in the Northwest to that which we have in Tennessee, I would like to have him explain that.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I am sorry, but I have only 5 minutes.

On page 266 of the hearings on this bill there is set forth a letter sent to the committee by Dr. Thompson, secretary of the Public Ownership League of America. I suppose everybody here knows what that is and knows that there are a few estimable gentlemen in this House who are sponsors of that program. This gentleman who wrote this letter to the committee was up in Oregon at the time. Here is what he says:

> As a matter of fact, I am now in Portland helping in this work in a general way and incidentally, along the same lines, endeavoring to stimulate our public-ownership organizations throughout the Northwest and Pacific States.

What they mean to do is not merely to take over a few towns around Bonneville, but they are going to take over the States of Washington, Oregon, and California, and when they do that, then the Congress will be asked to refund in taxes removed possibly $75,000,000 or $100,000,000 that are now being paid by private utilities in that area, and when they do that they socialize the electrical industry and abandon the capitalistic system.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, before this Congress adjourns we should establish a blind school for Republicans, in which to train their candidates, and we should also provide a special dispensation so that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] and a few other Democrats who are still wandering around in the dark can attend. [Laughter.]

I want this blind school for these Republicans and a few benighted Democrats who are still fighting the T. V. A., the R. E. A., and the rest of our power program, so they can learn to read the Braille system, because their platforms will have to be published in Braille, as they are evidently going to hold their conventions and other political meetings in the dark.

In addition to their records here in opposing every effort to bring cheap electricity to the American people, they evidently desire to keep the farmers in the dark. I have just read three platforms proposed by three candidates for the nomination for the Presidency on the Republican ticket, one by Mr. Taft, of Ohio; one by a Mr. Gannett, who lives in New York State, I believe; and one by Mr. Dewey, who also lives in New York. They go into great detail about what they are going to do for the farmer. I should say what they propose to do to, instead of for, the farmer—because they propose to go back to the old system of plundering the farmers of this country through high protective tariffs for the benefit of big industries and other special interests—but they evidently propose to leave him in a complete black-out so far as rural electrification is concerned.

Not a single one of them mentions rural electrification a single time, the one thing in which the farmers of this country are most vitally interested. I am going to show some of the conditions that prevail in your States before this Congress adjourns, and especially the conditions in the district of the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], who seems to devote about all his time to fighting the T. V. A., the greatest development that ever came to the people of Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MAY. Aside from the fact that I have cheap electric lights in my home, which I think the gentleman is going to talk about, I want to ask him if he has read Norman Thomas' socialist platform on the public utilities?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I have not; I am not interested in it. But I am familiar with the electric light and power rates in the district represented by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]. They are so high as to amount to almost a complete black-out. For instance, a merchant in his home town of Prestonsburg, Ky., pays as high as 9 cents per kilowatt for electricity, or did when the last report was issued a month ago. He has to pay $9 for 100 kilowatt-hours, which in my town, Tupelo, Miss., would cost him $2.50. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] says he has cheap electricity in his home. He may have for all I know. But the rest of the people of his district are overcharged on an average of 100 percent or more. And I think if he will investigate his light and power bills he will find that he is being overcharged to the same extent.

As to his commercial consumers; that is, the merchants, hotel, restaurant, and filling-station operators, professional men, and others who have to pay commercial rates for their electricity, the record shows that they pay about the highest rates in Prestonsburg and surrounding towns of any place in America.

The commercial rates in Prestonsburg, Allen City, Dwale, Martin, Lackey, Paintsville, West Van Lear, Blackey, Neon, Seco, Whitesburg, Salyersville, Dolan, Hazard, Elkhorn, Pikeville, and Hellier are as follows:

Applicable to commercial consumers for lighting purposes, with incidental power permitted

	Cents per kilowatt-hour
First 100 kilowatt-hours	9
Next 100 kilowatt-hours	8
Next 200 kilowatt-hours	6
Next 1,100 kilowatt-hours	5
All over 1,500 kilowatt-hours	4

Now, here are the commercial rates for the same class of consumers in my home town of Tupelo, Miss.:

	Cents per kilowatt-hour
First 150 kilowatt-hours a month	2.5
Next 350 kilowatt-hours a month	2
Next 1,500 kilowatt-hours a month	1
All over 2,000 kilowatt-hours a month	0.8

Now, let us compare these rates and see how bad the commercial consumers in these towns in his home district are overcharged. We will just use his town and mine, Prestonsburg, Ky., and Tupelo, Miss.

	Kilowatt-hours
	50	100	200	400	600	1,000	1,500	2,000	4,000	6,000
Prestonsburg, Ky.	$4.50	$9.00	$17.00	$29.00	$39.00	$59.00	$84.00	$104.00	$184.00	$264.00
Tupelo, Miss.	1.25	2.50	4.75	8.75	11.75	15.75	20.75	25.75	41.75	57.75
Difference	3.25	6.50	12.25	20.25	27.25	43.25	63.25	78.25	142.25	206.25

These commercial consumers seem to just pay rent to the power company to get to do business in their own establishments.

Remember that Prestonsburg and every other town in the gentleman's district is within the distribution radius of the T. V. A. at Norris Dam. Remember, also, that electricity can be generated anywhere in his district, with coal produced right at home, and distributed to the ultimate consumers at the T. V. A. yardstick rates, or at the rates prevailing in Tupelo, Miss., if not lower, with ample returns on legitimate investments.

But the trouble is the coal barons and the Power Trust are working hand in glove. They are not interested in the ultimate consumers of either coal or electricity; what they are after is to wring from the consumers of both coal and electricity every penny the traffic will bear.

At a later date I hope to take up the rates in that area—residential, commercial, and industrial—and show how those people are plundered by exorbitant overcharges for electricity for all purposes.

The opposition will probably come back at me with the same old misleading statement about taxes. But the facts are that the municipal plant at Tupelo pays a larger percentage of its gross revenues in taxes than does the Kentucky & West Virginia Power Co. that operates in this particular area.

The people of Kentucky were overcharged $8,914,000 in 1938, which was $3,400,000 more than the value of the entire wheat crop of Kentucky for that year. The commercial consumers alone in Kentucky were overcharged $2,934,000, and if they had all paid the exorbitant rates charged the people in this particular area their overcharges would have amounted to a great deal more.

I am glad to support the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] in opposition to efforts now being made to cripple the Bonneville project, one of the greatest blessings that has ever come to the people in that great northwestern section of the country.

Those people who are to benefit from Bonneville throughout the coming years will owe a lasting debt of gratitude to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon for his services in helping to bring this development about and to provide the means of transmitting the power generated at Bonneville to the ultimate consumers, and especially to the farmers throughout that section of the country.

I have often said of him—and I say it again—that in my humble judgment he has rendered those people the greatest service of any man his State has sent to Washington, in your day and mine.

This attempt to cut down the appropriation for Bonneville is nothing in God's world but playing into the hands of the Power Trust, one of the worst monopolies this country has ever seen—one that is robbing the ultimate consumers of electricity in practically every State of this Union and pouring out all of this propaganda about how the T. V. A. is injuring the people of Tennessee. There is nothing at all in their statements, absolutely nothing. Simply because we have asked for a reallocation of the small amount of 12½ percent that is already charged to the wholesale purchasers of electricity generated by the T. V. A., merely because those counties whose lands have been flooded ask for a reallocation of those funds, asked that instead of paying them to the States the T. V. A. be authorized to pay them back to these counties to take the place of the taxes they would have received on these lands that have been flooded, and gradually let them down until they can pay off the outstanding bonds especially in their school districts—because of the request for this correction, these enemies of the T. V. A. come out with a great hullabaloo of propaganda to the effect that Tennessee is being ruined by the T. V. A. If there is any man in this House or elsewhere who ought to know better, he is the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]. [Applause.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I just wanted to observe that the people on the Pacific coast in the section I come from, the city of Los Angeles, have had for years a publicly owned bureau of municipal light and power, and our rates have been reduced seven times since 1929. We would not give it up for anything.

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly not. If you will look at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 2238, you will find a speech that I made on Friday, in which I take up the municipal plants of the various States of the Union. I show that they can all generate and distribute power as low as the T. V. A. rates, or lower. But instead of that they rise here and try to destroy Bonneville, try to destroy the T. V. A., try to destroy Grand Coulee, try to destroy rural electrification, and all the rest of these other beneficient projects. When you do that you are helping a ruthless octopus, or monopoly, that is wringing from the American people overcharges for electric lights and power amounting to as much as $1,000,000,000 a year, aiding that ruthless monopoly to hold your people in Egyptian bondage.

You have got to meet this issue, every one of you. This is the fight of the American people against the corrupt interests that have robbed and plundered them through electric light and power rates for the last 40 years. Thank God the time has come when they are able to defend themselves, and their weapon this year will be the ballot. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If I had in mind crippling this program my amendment would have been worded to stop any power lines going into Tacoma or Seattle or Salem or other places. This has been limited to two over on the eastern side, and there is not a soul who has stood up on the Democratic side and, by dollars and cents, made out a case. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE] has confessed the case. He says it is speculative. That is why that amendment should be adopted. If you want to match figures, I will put them down on paper any time. We picked out two lines to show you that you cannot justify them by the figures of the English language. I defy anybody on that side to justify it on a dollars-and-cents basis. Why did not the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] talk on the amendment instead of making a grand speech about power?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further.

This amendment is offered not for the purpose of crippling Bonneville, but for the purpose of protecting it from those people who would load it up with expenditures that it cannot carry and produce upon. There is no such thing as anyone on the floor that I know of thinking for a minute of protecting the interest of power companies. I do not know anything about them.

Every time anyone comes out here and tells the truth about some of these projects, someone who does not debate the real issues that are before us comes out and hollers about the power companies. Now, let us see what there is to this situation and whether we can afford to go on and spend money putting up power lines that will not produce.

These people already have contracts with the Aluminum Co. of America for 32,000-kilowatt capacity at $17.50 per year per 100 kilowatts. Now, what does this mean? This means 1¼ mills per kilowatt; and the best that the Reclamation Service could figure to produce electricity and sell it for at Boulder Dam was 2¼ mills per kilowatt. They are hardly going to break even on that proposition. When are we going to show any sense; when are we going to be honest with the American people? Or are we going to holler about the power companies? Let me say to you that every dollar of this deficit that comes from charging less than the stuff costs is going to be taken out of the American taxpayers. It is not going to be a benefit to the American people.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Let me cite a few more figures. I want the gentleman to learn something about his project. The hearings show that the cost of these transmission lines and power installation would run $50,000,000. You have got to figure on a basis of 16 or 17 years' obsolescence and depreciation. This means a charge of $3,000,000 a year. You have got to figure interest at 3½ percent. This means $1,760,000, or a total in these two items of $4,777,000.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. When I get through.

The allocated cost of the dam is $50,000,000, according to their own figures. The interest on that is $1,750,000, and they are required to depreciate it in 40 years, under the law. This depreciation item amounts to $1,250,000 annually. These items on the dam amount to $3,000,000 annually, or the total on the dam and the transmission lines amounts to $7,777,000 annually. They claim in their set-up in the hearings a possible income of $9,000,000. Let me say to you that on the basis of operating as they say, 85,000 kilowatts, or one-fifth of the total capacity of 440,000 kilowatts, this 85,000 kilowatts producing $55,000 a month, or $660,000 a year, shows a total possible net income from full operation of $3,300,000. Where are we? Let me tell you, we want to think twice about extending power lines where we cannot afford to carry them. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] is entitled to recognition for 10 minutes.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to divide this time and reserve 5 minutes of it to answer arguments on other amendments that may be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, it sometimes appears to me to be rather a discouraging situation to stand in the Well of this House and talk to my colleagues upon a matter on which they entertain either such partial views on the one side or such bitter prejudices on the other. Argument and persuasion has little weight or consideration with many of them.

As to whether or not the Bonneville project should have been undertaken is certainly water over the dam. It is a great navigation project, it is a great flood-control project, and thousands of tons of freight now moving through the locks there and the region below the dam on to the sea is safe from the floods that it suffered in previous years.

The Government in its design saw fit to plan for 10 generating units and then the Congress set up the Bonneville administration. As a result of that we have gone along—there has been a fight each year—but $23,000,000 has been appropriated or allocated for transmission lines. We found curselves last year with this great undertaking capable of generating 86,000 kilowatts of electrical energy in its first 2 units and ready to sell at 2 mills a kilowatt-hour, but we could not carry it away as we had no lines. We secured an appropriation that made it possible to carry energy as far as Portland and a little beyond; and this year the receipts are over $1,000,000. With but 2 generating units in and complete, on sales made in the next fiscal year, less than 20 percent in production, the receipts will be $2,200,000.

Coming to the gentleman's amendment, shall we restrict the construction of these two lines referred to in the amendment? And I grant that is a debatable question, as is every question, upon which honest minds differ, but I assume that there is not a man or woman in this House, I care not how intelligent he or she may be, that can pass an honest judgment upon that issue without having some knowledge of the facts. I cannot see how anyone would want to do that. At least you ought to read some 100 or 150 pages of the hearings detailing facts on this matter. My good friend from Illinois says we start from the little town of Pasco. Pasco is a town of 5,000, with another 2,000 just across the river at Kennewick—7,000 people. One hundred and fifty thousand people live within 50 or 60 miles up the Yakima Valley. This line goes to Walla Walla. Walla Walla is a city of some 20,000 people located in the center of a rich irrigated section where almost another 20,000 live. The line also goes through Milton and Freewater, 2 other towns there with some 2,000 people. Each 10 or 20 acres of land is maintaining a family in that region, where there is ample water for irrigation.

At Pendleton there are 7,000 or 8,000 people. Through that region traversed by this line there are a large number of new R. E. A.'s.

From Walla Walla the line as projected goes to Lewistown, which is just on the State line between Washington and Idaho on the Snake River at the confluence of the Snake and the Clearwater Rivers.

That is the only point that these projected lines touch Idaho at all. It then goes northwestward toward Colfax and Spokane, in one of the richest agricultural countries in America, a county that 10 years ago boasted of the greatest per capita agricultural wealth of any one of the 3,000 counties in this country. There they reach hundreds of farmers who, until R. E. A. came into the picture, had no service. I grant that probably they will take some of the present consumers of the Washington Power Co. that is now serving the region, but that company never had these customers till the Government built R. E. A. lines, and the rates from the private company are about two and one-half times what Bonneville power will cost. An examination of these hearings will show, and I say this regardless of your belief in reference to public or private power, that Bonneville will pay out not in 40 years but within the next 20 years, even at 2 mills per kilowatt-hour. If you want to assume, and if you can get any happiness and satisfaction out of it, that the Republicans are going to gain control of this Congress in 1941, you certainly want to be able to have this project in which some fifty or sixty million dollars have been invested made as usable as possible.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment should be voted down unless you just want to cripple this great undertaking now and later on give it away.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the gentleman from Washington has made the best speech for my amendment of anyone, because he says the building of these two particular lines is debatable at this time, and that is the reason my amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. LEAVY. Yes; but everything here is debatable—few things in this life are susceptible of absolute proof. It is not a concession that the gentleman is right or that I am wrong, merely because I admit a known fact. Through the years to come both Bonneville and Grand Coulee will bring blessings and happiness to millions, and unless in some foolish moment we turn them over to selfish interests, they will stand out as a great monument to the memory of all who had vision to assist in their creation. Let us defeat this crippling amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 49, noes 63.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. LEAVY and Mr. DIRKSEN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 70, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WIGGLESWORTH: Page 12, line 24, after the word "system", strike out the period, insert a colon and the words "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for salaries or expenses of any persons engaging in activities contrary to or in violation of section 9 (a) of the act of August 2, 1939, Public, No. 252, Seventy-Sixth Congress, or of the rules and regulations issued thereunder by the United States Civil Service Commission, Form 1982, November 1939."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. How much time will be permitted on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] gave notice that two amendments would be offered and under the limitation of time, 20 minutes were reserved for the consideration of those two amendments.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I am informed only one amendment will be submitted.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, one of the two amendments will not be offered and I assume 20 minutes will be available.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, there will be 20 minutes on this amendment, and the Chair will endeavor to recognize two Members for the amendment and two against the amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple amendment. I think it is almost self-explanatory. It merely provides that no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the salary or expenses of any person on the rolls of this agency engaging in activities in violation of the Hatch Act or of the regulations of the Civil Service Commission issued under that act. I offer this amendment, Mr. Chairman, in light of the testimony commencing at page 264 of the hearings on this bill.

The record indicates that considerable evidence was brought to the attention of the committee indicating activities on the part of Bonneville personnel which are forbidden under the Hatch Act. These activities included the carrying on of a propaganda campaign, participating in elections, and carrying on electioneering activities for the organization of public-utility districts.

The bulk of this evidence seems to have been excluded from the record. A sample of it, however, appears in a letter signed by Dr. Carl D. Thompson. Dr. Thompson is stated to be a Socialist, a magazine owner and secretary or president of the Public Ownership League of America. At the time of the activity referred to, Dr. Thompson was not only serving the Public Ownership League of America but Bonneville, being carried on the rolls of the latter at a salary of $5,600.

When Dr. Raver, the administrator at Bonneville, was asked if it did not occur to him that the activities referred to were in violation of the Hatch Act and other applicable laws, he replied in effect, that until the act was changed and he was specifically directed not to do so, he intended to continue that kind of policy.

If Bonneville activities are within the law, adoption of this amendment can do no harm. If they are in violation of the Hatch Act or the Civil Service Commission regulations, the proposed amendment will certainly be helpful.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. I have conferred with the minority members of the committee and they are perfectly willing to accept this amendment. They will have no opposition to offer to it. I am wondering if the majority members of the committee would be willing to likewise agree to the amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Would not the same personnel come under the Hatch Act?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I assume they would.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Why is it necessary to pass an amendment then if they come under the Hatch Act?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I may say to the gentleman that I think it clarifies the situation and makes compliance with the Hatch Act doubly sure if we put in a provision of this kind.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman expect to go further than the Hatch Act?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. No; the amendment simply enforces the Hatch Act.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not unnecessary to pass such an amendment if they are covered by the Hatch Act?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. No. I believe this gives better assurance that the will of Congress will be carried into effect than if the amendment is not adopted.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I should like to know, if I may, from the members of the committee on the majority side, if there is any objection to accepting this amendment and obviating the necessity for further debate on it.

Mr. LEAVY. As near as I can understand it in a hurried manner, I believe there would be objection. I am fearful that the amendment is so broad that if a charge were made or if a fact were found that one of the thousand employees had violated the Hatch Act it would tie up the entire appropriation. Any employee who violates that act is now covered by the law, and this would seem to me to be mere surplusage.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. May I say to the gentleman from Washington that no such result as he suggests should follow from the amendment. In the case he suggests, it would simply serve to deny the payment of salary or expenses to the particular individual.

Mr. RANKIN. That is what the amendment says.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. That is what it is intended to say.

Mr. RANKIN. It would apply only to those who violate the law.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. That is right.

Mr. RANKIN. It would not apply to those who do not violate the law.

Mr. LEAVY. As far as I am personally concerned, I would have no objection because it is mere surplusage at most. That protection already prevails, if such is needed. Such a person would be subject to immediate discharge under the Hatch Act. This is just using words where we do not need them, except to satisfy somebody.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It may be that that is what the law states, but it is questionable whether or not that practice has been carried into effect.

Mr. LEAVY. I grant that there was some question raised by a member of the subcommittee on that point about an employee a year ago. If the gentleman will check the record he will find that it was before the Hatch Act was ever enacted that the complaint that appears in these hearings was made. However, there is no complaint that this agency anywhere has violated the Hatch Act since it has gone into effect.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am not sure.

Mr. LEAVY. If the gentleman will check the record I believe he will find I am correct.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Do I understand that the chairman will accept the amendment?

Mr. LEAVY. I am not authorized to speak for the committee as a whole, but it just appears to me that it would be a safer course to give us an opportunity to study the effect of the proffered amendment before accepting it. It cannot possibly strengthen the situation. The gentleman seeks protection where we already have a law. The gentleman is just seeking to reenact for a single appropriation a provision of the law already existing.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. It makes the situation very much more clear. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to ask a question of the gentleman from Massachusetts about this amendment. Can the gentleman inform me whether or not if this amendment is adopted it will prevent any of the employees or operators of the private power interests from participating in political activities?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The gentleman knows very well that those employees are not on the Federal pay roll. The Hatch Act has no application to them whatever.

Mr. HOOK. That is just exactly my contention, that when you take away from the rights of the employees of the Federal Government or State employees as well the right to participate in questions that are interesting to them with respect to their government, you place in the hands of the private interests, the private monopolies, the right to control this Government. When you do that you have placed this Government in the very position Germany was when Hitler went in as dictator. When Hitler assumed power as chancellor in Germany his first step was to take away from the people the right to participate in political activity. The next thing that was done was to enact a law outlawing every other party except the National Socialist Party. They thereby set up their dictatorship. It is my contention that when you place in the hands of the private monopolies the right to participate in political activities and take away the right of others so to do, you are dangerously attacking democracy in this Nation. When you do that you are going dangerously close to the proposition of wiping out the two great parties in this Nation. I say that as long as we have Republicans and as long as we have Democrats we will not have any rotten "isms" in this country, but if we go along with the principle that is being advanced by the Hatch Act, no matter how laudable it may be, we are going a long way toward the end of eliminating those two great parties; and God forbid that that occur. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WIGGLESWORTH) there were—ayes 61, noes 83.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. LEAVY and Mr. WIGGLESWORTH.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 83, noes 86.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

BONNEVILLE PROJECT FULLY JUSTIFIED

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, Bonneville is in my district in Oregon; that is, the Oregon side of the Bonneville project; and I reserved time to speak on the other amendment on the subject which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] stated he would offer, but which was not presented. In my judgment, the other amendment would have been more detrimental to the Bonneville project than the one presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], which we have just considered. For this reason I reserved time to speak on the other amendment.

I do not want to take your time for any extended discussion, now that this matter has been decided, but I do want to speak very briefly on one or two matters in connection with the Bonneville project.

On the opening day—March 5—when we considered this bill in general debate, I spoke at some length on the Bonneville project, which you will find in the RECORD of day before yesterday. The main consideration, of course, with reference to Bonneville is whether or not it is justified. As you will note, it is now completed, so far as the dam is concerned. Two of the operating units of the power project are in operation, two more will be in operation early in 1941, and two more in 1942, which will leave four to be completed later. Unfortunately, we did not have transmission facilities completed at the time the two first units of the power project itself were finished, and it was only last December 1 that we finally completed the first transmission line connecting the Bonneville plant with the Portland territory. For this reason the project has not had an opportunity to justify itself financially by reason of the fact we have had no marketing facilities.

The bill before us today for the Interior Department is to keep in step with the building of these power units as they come into production so that we may have transmission facilities available at the time the power is ready for distribution. We do not want to make the mistake we made before.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. Is it not true that the income right there at Bonneville now is $100,000 a month and over the lines are going 79,000 kilowatts with a possible generation of 86,000, and the income this year will be around $1,000,000, next year $2,000,000; and 60 percent completed it will be over $5,000,000, and fully completed it will be $9,000,000 even at the present rate?

Mr. ANGELL. I think the gentleman is substantially correct. As I understand the figures, $1,000,000 will be received from the project next year, the following year $2,200,000, and, eventually, when the whole 10 units are in operation there will be approximately $9,350,000 a year of revenue coming in from the project. Amortization with interest at 3½ percent to retire the entire cost in 40 years, requires only $4,060,000 a year, so that after paying operation and upkeep, there will be left $3,399,549 each year above what is necessary to retire the investment. So the project will be a self-supporting one, and I think it very definitely is justified under the facts as we have them now.

As has been said, a contract has been entered into with the Aluminum Co. of America, which will last for 20 years and will bring in during the term of the contract $10,000,000, and only recently it was reported as shown in the Christian Science Monitor, which I saw on my desk yesterday, that an additional contract has been entered into with the Sierra Iron Co. which eventually will consume 32,500 kilowatts a year, which is practically the same amount that is provided under the contract with the Aluminum Co. of America. So these two projects alone ultimately will bring in $1,000,000 a year or almost one-fourth of the revenue required to pay the interest and retire the investment, not considering the immense value of the remaining power that will be available under the project when it is fully completed.

I would also like to call your attention to the fact, however, that under the generic law as we passed it preference must be given to public bodies and cooperatives. Section 4a of the law provides:

> In order to insure that the facilities for the generation of electrical energy at the Bonneville project shall be operated for the benefit of the general public, and particularly the domestic and rural consumers, the Administrator shall at all times, in disposing of electrical energy generated at said project, give preference and priority to public bodies and cooperatives.

This is a direct mandate from Congress to the Administrator as to how he shall dispose of this energy.

LOW RATES TO CONSUMERS

Mr. Chairman, as a result of the energizing of the transmission line to Portland, the city of Portland on October 15, 1939, put into effect a rate reduction which Administrator Raver states is approximately 20 percent.

The organic act provides that 50 percent of Bonneville power shall be reserved until 1942 for public bodies and agencies. It is the underlying policy of the law that the lowest possible rates to consumers shall be established. This is for the purpose of protecting domestic users, farmers, and the small users throughout the entire territory. It also contemplates furnishing the lowest commercial rates for industrial enterprises consistent with the profitable operation of the project.

Since this reduction was made, the State, through the public utilities commissioner, has made a further reduction in the rate.

The Nineteenth Annual Report of the Federal Power Commission, 1939, shows that rate reductions for electric energy averaged forty-six and one-half million dollars annually in the 3½-year period from July 1, 1934, to December 31, 1937, and that the production of electric energy reached an all-time high in 1939. I desire to quote briefly from this report:

> The total savings resulting from electric-rate reductions for the 3½-year period from July 1, 1934, to December 31, 1937, it was estimated, amounted to $162,761,490, an average of $46,500,000 per year. These figures represent merely a total of the separate annual savings based on average consumption per customer for periods prior to rate changes as reported by utilities, and as such do not reflect a cumulative total of all savings given—do not include savings on increases in the average consumption per customer which usually follow a rate reduction.
> The savings to the customers of privately owned utilities for all services during the period, it is noteworthy, equaled 6.4 percent of the estimated total revenues of such utilities in 1934, as against 5.1 percent in the case of the publicly owned system. Though privately owned utilities in nearly all instances reduced their average typical bills more than publicly owned systems, the average typical bills of publicly owned utilities, as has already been noted, remain generally below those of privately owned utilities.

POWER SALES PROGRESS

One hundred and nineteen applications for power, totaling 643,489 kilowatts, have been received by the Administrator of the Bonneville project. Of these 119 applications, 42 are from public-utility districts, 16 from municipalities, 29 from R. E. A. cooperatives, and 21 from drainage districts. Public applications total 108 and represent 446,529 kilowatts. Applications have also been received from 6 private utilities totaling 66,900 kilowatts. Five from industries totaling 130,060 kilowatts have filed power applications.

Thirty-nine applications totaling 92,671 kilowatts are ready for service connections. Feasibility reports have been completed on 24 applications, totaling 128,521 kilowatts and 21 contracts totaling 77,710 kilowatts have been submitted. Thirteen contracts have been executed totaling 59,110 kilowatts. All of this information on applications and contracts covers prime power only. In addition the project has authority to sell dump power which is power subject to recall to satisfy firm contracts. This power under filed tariffs sells for 2½ mills per kilowatt-hour, which is below the bare fuel costs of existing steam plants in the Bonneville area. Contracts have been executed with the private utilities to furnish dump power and the Portland companies have taken nearly 70,009 kilowatts of such energy. Therefore, it is fair to say that the sum of the firm power business in sight plus the market for dump power exceeds the present installed capacity. The load-development possibilities of the project have been estimated by the Marketing Division in excess of 250,000 kilowatts by 1941 and 450,000 kilowatts in 1942. Comparing these load possibilities with the construction schedule given above it will be seen that a power shortage will exist in the Northwest during 1941 and possibly 1942.

EARNING POWER OF THE PROJECT

The earning power of the project is set out on page 74, table 8, of the annual report. The Administrator estimates that each kilowatt of capacity will earn on an average $18.36 per kilowatt-year, which will give a gross revenue on the completion of the plant of $9,350,000. The investment in transmission, transformer, and operating facilities for Bonneville alone will represent an outlay of $36,288,000. This investment represents only projected lines in the Bonneville-Coulee area, which will be allocated solely to the delivery of Bonneville current.

Based on the Federal Power Commission's allocation, the Army engineers have estimated that the completed investment in dam, power plant, and switch yard will represent $50,293,885. It will be noted that this is some 8 or 10 million dollars in excess of the original estimate by the Power Commission. The Power Commission's estimate was based on lower capacity. Since that time, as a result of experience with units 1 and 2, the Army engineers have concluded that the capacity can be expanded over the original estimated figure of some 430,000 kilowatts. The first two units installed have a rated capacity of 43,200 kilowatts each but units 3, 4, 5, and 6 are larger, being in the neighborhood of 52,000 kilowatts each.

The amortization and interest charges, based on 40-year repayment at 3½-percent interest, will run $4,060,000 per year and the combined operating expenses, together with maintenance and depreciation, will amount to $1,890,451. This will leave a net of $7,459,549 for fixed charges which is an 8.6-percent return on the Government's investment in power facilities or $3,399,549 in excess of the operating, maintenance, and fixed charges. Therefore when the plant is completed, the revenues under existing rates will retire the investment in a shorter period than 40 years besides taking care of all costs and deficiencies during the load-building period.

BONNEVILLE'S RECORD—INSTALLED CAPACITY AND PLANT-COMPLETION SCHEDULE

Mr. Chairman, two generating units are installed and operating. This represents a total capacity of 86,400 kilowatts. These two units have been designated No. 1 and No. 2. Funds to install and complete units 3, 4, 5, and 6 have been provided, save the $800,000 item, which passed the House recently. The second step of the program planned by the Army engineers contemplates that units 3 and 4 will be ready for service by June 1941. At that time the installed capacity will be 194,400 kilowatts. The Administrator anticipates that he will be crowded for capacity by that time and has requested the Army engineers to accelerate completion of units 3 and 4 so as to have them ready for service by January 1, 1941.

Units 5 and 6 are scheduled for completion about June 1, 1942. When units 5 and 6 are completed the plant's installed capacity will be 300,000 kilowatts.

Units 5 and 6 will be subject to shut-down when the foundations for units 7 to 10, inclusive, are installed. Shutting down units 5 and 6 during such a construction period will give the plant a firm available capacity equal to the sum of the first four units, or 194,400 kilowatts.

With the installation of units 7 and 8, the plant's capacity will be 410,000 kilowatts. If funds were provided this year, the earliest completion date for units 7 and 8 would be June 1, 1943.

When units 9 and 10 are completed the plant's capacity will be 518,400 kilowatts. If funds were provided this year for initial work, the earliest completion date for units 9 and 10 would be June 1944. The lack of provision for units 7 to 10, inclusive, will delay this program possibly 1 or 2 years beyond the dates given.

FARM LOAD

The latest available studies by the Farm Journal indicate that there are 61,137 occupied farms in Oregon and 81,105 such farms in the State of Washington. In Oregon 30,303 of such farms are electrified and 30,834 farms do not have electric service. In the State of Washington 48,375 farms are electrified and 32,730 farms are not.

Eastern Oregon and eastern Washington represent a substantial farm market. In this area 12 Rural Electrification Administration projects are under construction or completed. There is a large and highly successful cooperative with about 1,500 miles of rural lines in southeastern Washington. Eastern and central Oregon and the unserved areas in the Willamette Valley are now active in organizing Rural Electrification Administration cooperatives.

Rural Electrification Administration has recently had a field representative in the State of Oregon and this representative has estimated that there are 11 unserved rural areas that can be profitably developed. These unserved areas represent a rural line mileage of 978 miles.

Under the Bonneville filed tariffs such power can be purchased at one-half cent per kilowatt-hour. This possible saving in wholesale prices represents $12.50 per farm-year for the medium user and about $25 per farm-year for the larger consumer who utilizes an electric stove and labor-saving devices. These areas have farms of large dimensions. Therefore one of the essential requisites for a successful rural enterprise is low-cost current.

In the testimony before the Interior subcommittee it was pointed out that eastern Oregon and eastern Washington are sections devoid of fuel and installed hydro capacity. The available present capacity in this eastern country per thousand population is only 28 percent of the similarly installed per capita capacity in the remaining portions of these two States. This eastern section of Oregon and Washington has a population of 248,000, of which 91,000 is rural. The possible revenue accruing from the eastern Oregon and Washington lines would be in excess of $850,000 per year, which will justify the lines proposed by the Administrator. There is an early market for 68,000 kilowatts in this region, according to the testimony.

DUPLICATION

The policy of the Bonneville administration is to avoid duplicating existing lines. Last year the question of duplication was raised on the floor, and the parallelism of the project's transmission line from Vancouver to Eugene was cited. When this question was then up, attention was called to the lack of capacity of the private parallel lines in the Willamette Valley. Since that time the position taken on the floor has been sustained by the actual contracts with the Portland General Electric Co. for delivery at Salem and a pending contract application from the Mountain States Power Co. for delivery at Eugene. These companies would not toll current over the Government lines if their lines had the available capacity or requisite reserve.

POLICY PROVISIONS

Mr. Chairman, the policy covering the transmission and marketing of Bonneville power has been set by Congress in the organic act, approved August 20, 1937. The four outstanding policy provisions of this legislation are as follows:

First. The administrator is directed to sell the power at such a rate, subject to approval by the Federal Power Commission, so that the Federal Government will be reimbursed over a reasonable period, with interest, for its investment in power facilities. The interest rate has been set by administrative action at 3½ percent and the amortization period 40 years.

Second. The administrator is directed to construct, or purchase and to operate, transmission facilities to existing and potential markets, so as to encourage the widest possible diversified use of electricity.

Third. The administrator is directed that the project is to be operated for the benefit of the general public, particularly rural and domestic consumers.

Fourth. Fifty percent of Bonneville power is reserved to 1942 for public bodies and agencies. However, in this interim the administrator has authority to sell such reserved power so long as it does not interfere with the preferential rights of public agencies.

Mr. Chairman, the article I referred to in the Christian Science Monitor is as follows:

BONNEVILLE AREA ADDS IRON PLANT TO ITS LIST

[Special to the Christian Science Monitor]

VANCOUVER, WASH., March 5, 1940.—The new industrial frontier radiating from Bonneville Dam and its abundance of cheap power, welcomed another important pioneer recently with the announcement of a pig iron production project which will use a commercially new electric process.

Second, such announcement within just a few weeks, the iron plant's choice of this section was preceded by news of a plant for production of aluminum. Both plants will be constructed near Vancouver, which is across the Columbia River from Portland, Oreg.

A contract has just been signed by the Sierra Iron Co. for Bonneville power ranging from 6,000 kilowatts the first year to 30,000 within 2 years; and by the Aluminum Co. of America for 32,500 kilowatts.

Iron ore for the projected pig-iron production will be taken from open pits just across the Columbia, near Scappoose, Oreg., say the project's sponsors. Coal will be taken from Chehalis, Wash., deposits, and limestone will come from several points in the Northwest.

COAL WILL BE USED

In spite of the use of electricity coal will still be an important factor in the iron plant's operation.

The contract for cheap Bonneville power was signed for the Sierra Iron Co. by D. H. Blotchford, president, of Los Angeles, and Paul J. Raver, Power Administrator for Bonneville Dam. The Sierra Co. is a Nevada corporation with California financing. Its contract calls for power delivery not later than June 1 this year.

Announcement of the two projects not only opens up new industrial vistas for the Pacific Northwest, but points toward immediate development of latent resources.

It has been pointed out that the Pacific coast demand is increasing for iron and steel, and that the home market would absorb a large output if mills were installed in this area.

President Roosevelt has indicated development of adequate steel capacity on the Pacific coast is a matter of great importance, and that it would be highly desirable from the standpoint of national defense.

One expert who has taken part in many surveys relating to feasibility of iron and steel production in the Pacific Northwest said investigations indicate the western market could use the production of plants of 750,000 tons annual capacity.

MATERIALS EASILY AVAILABLE

Materials, he said, should be available either close at hand or by low-cost water transportation.

Operations of the proposed iron plant will be watched with great interest by iron and steel men everywhere because of its departure from ordinary methods.

Electric smelting of iron ore has been the object of intensive research throughout the world but has made little headway, largely because of power costs and the fact that the unit size of furnaces already in use is so much larger than those required for electric use.

Furnaces to be installed by the Sierra Co. were designed by Albert E. Greene, of Seattle, metallurgist and electric furnace maker, who has done much experimental work in the use of electricity for smelting iron and manganese ores.

"Coal is used as the reducing agent," says Mr. Greene. "The coal may be of the abundant subbituminous or noncoking bituminous rank and may consist of the fines which are obtainable.

"Reduction takes place at the feed end of the furnace, with metal and slag flowing to the tapping end."

Mr. Blotchford said the Sierra Co. chose its site at Vancouver because it has access to four railway lines and ocean-borne transportation. It is also near a main auto highway.

He says his company expects the plant to develop a production of 100 tons of pig iron a day before the close of 1940, and plans, at the peak of its Bonneville contract, to produce 500 tons a day.

The first unit of the plant is scheduled to cost $120,000, and the completed plant $600,000.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Like my colleague from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL], when it appeared that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] was to offer an amendment which, in my opinion, would have prohibited the construction of transmission lines, I reserved my time in this debate for argument against that amendment. I commend now the fairness of the gentleman from Massachusetts in withdrawing that amendment, and I commend, also, the fairness of all those who have taken part in this debate.

When I spoke to the gentleman from Massachusetts and told him what, in my opinion, his amendment, if adopted, would do in the way of obstructing the further building of transmission lines, he realized that it might stop the construction of transmission lines altogether. He had no intention of stopping this work. He therefore offered to withdraw the amendment, and he did withdraw it. This generous and sportsmanlike action on the part of the gentleman from Massachusetts leaves nothing further to be said on his proposed amendment. I wish to take this opportunity, however, to say to my colleagues that they are to be congratulated for voting today to provide this $5,500,000 to continue the construction of transmission lines to carry the power from Bonneville into the areas which need and want that power. We do not contend that the Bonneville is by any means the only legitimate Federal hydroelectric power development in the United States, yet we do contend that it is a 100-percent legitimate project and that it is a 100-percent self-liquidating project. Under the provisions of the basic law this entire project must be liquidated within 40 years, and it must return a revenue of 3½ percent to the Government. The rates must be made in such a way that this project will do that, and under the system which is now in operation, that will be done.

The Bonneville project is one of the most valuable projects of its kind that can possibly be imagined. It will serve some 30,000 farms in the Willamette Valley alone. That valley has a population of over half a million people and is one of the most important agricultural areas in the United States. When the Willamette flood-control project is completed, it is estimated that at least one-third of the Bonneville power will be used for power pumping in the irrigation districts which will be created in the valley upon completion of the flood-control project.

I think that the Bonneville project is now so well understood by a majority of the Members of the House of Representatives that we will have little trouble in the future in securing whatever money is necessary to entirely complete it. This, I am sure, will redound to the benefit not only of the people who now live in the area it directly serves, but for the benefit of the people of the United States generally.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Would the gentleman be in favor of similar projects, in other States, as, for instance, the Cabinet Gorge project? Would the gentleman be for that, would he vote for it?

Mr. MOTT. I have voted for all those projects which, in the opinion of the Army engineers, have been found after careful examination and survey to be of such value to the people that benefits to be derived from them would more than compensate for the expense necessary to build them. If the gentleman's project comes within that class, I would be glad to support it.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I am glad to know the gentleman would support it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered now as read to page 80, line 5, at the end of line 4.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma that the bill be considered as read to page 80, line 5?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what is the object of that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. As I understand it, that is the agreement which has been reached. There is no objection to any item from now until page 80.

Mr. TABER. And does that mean that a point of order may lie at any point in between or that an amendment may be offered?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Of course.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment before we get to that point, on page 16, which I desire to offer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. And points of order will lie.

Mr. TABER. Anywhere between here and page 80?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. Do I understand that the gentleman's interpretation of the request is correct, that points of order will lie at any of the pages between here and page 80?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a part of the gentleman's unanimous-consent request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 16, line 3, strike out "$893,880" and insert "$750,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would reduce the bill down to the figures of the President's Budget.

Just think of me having to come here and support the President. Not a single Member on his own side of the aisle rises to support him.

There was absolutely no excuse whatever for raising this item for surveys of public lands above the Budget estimate by $143,000. All I am asking you to do is to support the President, and get down to $750,000 in line with the Budget estimate.

I am not going to say any more. I want to see whether you will do it or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, in his enthusiasm, forgot to tell that this is $100,000 below what was spent for this same purpose last year. He also forget to tell you that there are several hundred million acres of land as yet unsurveyed, and it pays its own way. As was pointed out in my opening statement, this is one of the few departments of the Government that more than pays its own way. Besides that it will give a splendid opportunity for many worthy young men to secure employment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were ayes 79 and noes 86.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order. On page 29, beginning with the last word on the page, "to," I make a point of order against the following language:

to be reimbursed under the provisions of the Act of February 14, 1920, as amended (25 U. S. C. 413), except that reimbursement shall not be required for expenditures in connection with Indian lands for which no production or compensatory royalty accrues, or for expenditures in excess of 10 percent of such royalties accruing from mineral-lease operations within any reservation or agency jurisdiction.

My point of order is that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, we concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the language on page 67, after the figures "$400,000", down to and including the word "created", in line 12, as follows:

and in addition thereto the Secretary of the Interior may incur obligations and enter into a contract or contracts not exceeding the total amount of $815,000, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof, and appropriations hereafter made for continuing construction of the project shall be available for the purpose of discharging the obligation or obligations so created.

It is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. We concede the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language on page 13, beginning in line 17, after "$141,000," down to and including "$100" at the end of line 3 on page 14, which language reads as follows:

of which amount not exceeding $10,000 shall be available for expenditure in the discretion of the High Commissioner for maintenance of his household and such other purposes as he may deem proper: Provided, That the salary of the legal adviser and the financial expert shall not exceed the annual rate of $10,000 and $9,000 each, respectively: Provided further, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5) shall not apply to any purchase or service rendered under this appropriation when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed the sum of $100.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. We have passed that point, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman speaks too late.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the reservation was made that we could make points of order all the way through.

The CHAIRMAN. The unanimous-consent agreement was from that point where the Clerk had been reading, on through to page 80.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. We had passed that point.

Mr. TABER. No. The Clerk had not read that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The point of order undoubtedly comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised by the Clerk that he had concluded the reading of page 12, and therefore the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] is made in time.

Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I would like to know what lines the gentleman from Minnesota refers to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Starting after "$141,000", in line 17, on page 13, and going through the balance of that entire section, through line 3, on page 14.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I do not care to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] makes a point of order to the language appearing on page 13 as indicated by him. The language appearing in line 17, after "$141,000", on through the next four lines, was held subject to a point of order on April 21, 1938.

Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order to that and the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. My understanding is that the point of order did not strike out the whole paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Beginning on line 17, page 13, with the word "of", on through the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: On page 21, line 20, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available to conduct elections in any reservation or on any matter which has been previously voted upon there unless 2 years have elapsed."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. There is no objection to the amendment from this side of the aisle.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

INDIAN TRIBAL ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered merely proposes that none of the funds in this appropriation may be used to conduct elections on a matter on any reservation when that reservation has held an election on the same question within 2 years. It proposes to give the Indians and the Indian Office that much of a breathing spell from the turmoil and feelings that these elections generate, also, and quite important, the expense.

Under the provisions of the Wheeler-Howard Act—that is, the act of June 18, 1934—elections may be held on charter, constitution, and so forth, whenever 30 percent of the eligible members of a tribe so petition. This is true, regardless, at present, of how recently or how frequently the Indians on that reservation may have expressed themselves on the subject.

Every election costs money. It costs the Government money. This appropriation item of $74,540 proves that. It also costs the Indians money who want to oppose the proposed action, and it probably costs something to the individual Indians who work with Government money.

It would seem that when a specific matter comes up and is voted on decisively once in 2 years, that that should be often enough. That is the time intervening between the general elections for Members of Congress.

My amendment, as worded, would not prevent elections to amend a constitution or charter once adopted, provided that the amendment proposed had not been voted upon within 2 years. A different subject matter could be the subject of a new election. But the amendment is intended to prevent, and would prevent, elections more frequently than once in 2 years on a subject matter or question upon which an election had been held.

My attention has been directed to the need of such a provision by the repeated elections on some of the Sioux reservations where elections are held over and over with the same result. It is all right to pass upon a question more than once, but when it has been thoroughly considered, the people are entitled to a little rest to see if conditions change before they have the fuss of another election.

The question may be asked how another election can be held unless the people ask for it. That means nothing. It is easy to get signers for a petition. That is true as a general proposition. It is easier to sign than to offend the circulator. That is particularly true when an Indian is approached with a petition which he knows will pass through the hands of some agency official who may be passing on his rations, loans, grants, or other benefits. The individual will sign or not sign according to the standing which he thinks it will give him at the office, and so would you. Every Member of this House knows well the difference between a record vote and a mere voice vote. One puts you on the spot and the other does not.

So the Indian signs the petition, but when he votes in a secret ballot, he votes his convictions. That is why petitions can be obtained calling for repeated elections at which the votes for a proposition will not equal the signers on the petition.

The result is bad feeling, wasted time, wasted effort, and wasted money, Government money and Indian money. My amendment is designed to prevent this. An election on a given subject once in 2 years is often enough. Those who understand the Indian country, I am sure, will agree that this amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROBINSON of Utah: On page 80, line 5, after the word "Utah", strike out "$750,000" and insert "$1,250,000."

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, there was a Budget estimate for this amount submitted by the Bureau of the Budget. Through a mistake the proper amount was not included in the bill. This amendment is offered to correct the mistake.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The committee has agreed to accept the amendment because of the Budget estimate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that the committee has accepted the amendment. There was a Budget estimate for the full amount.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I wish to supplement my remarks by reading at this time a communication from the President of the United States transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1941 in the amount of $500,000 for the Provo River, Utah, reclamation project.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 5, 1940.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith for the consideration of Congress a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1941 in the amount of $500,000.

The details of this estimate, the necessity therefor, and the reasons for its transmission at this time are set forth in the letter of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, transmitted herewith, with whose comments and observations thereon I concur.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, D. C., March 5, 1940.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith for your consideration a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1941 in the amount of $500,000 as follows:

BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

Reclamation fund, special fund: Provo River project, Utah: For an additional amount for continuation of construction, $500,000, from the reclamation fund, special fund, fiscal year 1941, to remain available until expended (43 U. S. C. 373A; 53 Stat. 717)---------- $500,000

This estimate is to provide for beginning the construction of the Duchesne tunnel, a unit of the Provo River project estimated to cost approximately $2,000,000 and requiring about 4 years to complete.

The Provo River project, in addition to providing water for irrigation, will also furnish a supplemental water supply for Salt Lake City, Utah. The entire project will cost about $15,774,000, of which $5,415,000 has been provided to date. The city has contracted to pay about 40 percent of the cost of the Deer Creek division and practically the entire cost of the aqueduct. These two features will cost $7,600,000 and $5,800,000, respectively. The Duchesne tunnel, 5.5 miles long, and having a capacity of 325 second-feet, will divert water from the upper tributaries of the Duchesne River in the Colorado River watershed to the Provo River for storage in the Deer Creek Reservoir. Water so stored is to be used to augment the municipal water supply of Salt Lake City. Unless this diversion is made, the water stored in the Deer Creek Reservoir will be insufficient to meet the demands of Salt Lake City.

It is estimated that the Deer Creek Dam will be completed in May 1942 and work is in progress on the tunnels and conduit to carry the water into Salt Lake City.

While the original estimate of $750,000 contained in the 1941 Budget for continuation of the Provo project contemplated work on the Duchesne tunnel, it has now developed, that this $750,000 will all be required to meet contractual obligations for other features of the construction program. Favorable weather conditions and a longer construction season have permitted the contractors to progress more rapidly than originally contemplated. Unless funds are made available for beginning the construction of the Duchesne tunnel, it will be impossible for Salt Lake City to derive any benefits from the other units of construction now in progress.

The foregoing estimate is required to meet contingencies which have arisen since the transmission of the 1941 Budget and its approval is recommended.

Respectfully,

HAROLD D. SMITH,
Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, before the bill, H. R. 8745, making appropriations for Interior Department for fiscal year 1941 passes, I wish to make a statement showing that an additional appropriation will be necessary for carrying on the construction of reclamation projects now being financed from the revolving fund.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to refer to the statement of Commissioner Page on page 356 of the hearings under subtitle "Estimates for 1941."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma asked Mr. Page the following question:

How much did you ask the Budget for?

Mr. PAGE. $67,000,000 plus.

This bill provides approximately $20,000,000 less than the amount required.

Mr. Page is a very conservative and efficient officer of the Government, and when he asked for $67,000,000 I am certain he needed every penny he asked for.

However, to satisfy myself, I checked the hearings and other data, and I find a list of 14 medium-sized projects approved and under construction, as follows:

	Amount needed to complete
Gila, Ariz.	$15,907,589
Colorado-Big Thompson	47,088,000
Boise, Idaho, Arrowrock division	9,191,789
Boise, Idaho, Payette division	4,213,000
Grand Valley, Idaho, Upper Snake	19,725,000
Lugert-Altus, Okla.	5,300,000
Deschutes, Oreg.	5,824,000
Klamath, Oreg.	603,000
Tucumcari, N. Mex.	5,155,000
Provo, Utah	9,609,000
Yakima, Wash.	6,515,000
Kendrick, Wyo.	1,968,000
Shoshone, Wyo.	2,300,000
Riverton, Wyo.	3,448,000
Total	136,847,378

The projects to which I am calling your attention are not the large new power projects being financed from the General Treasury. They are the smaller reclamation projects under construction from the revolving fund.

Projects with thousands of people already making their homes and living on the land and more thousands of homes in the cities and villages within the area.

These projects are largely supplemental water projects where the Federal Government already has a substantial investment which is being rapidly repaid by the settlers.

To complete these projects costing approximately $137,000,000 on a 5-year-average basis will require annual appropriations of twenty-seven or twenty-eight million dollars.

The bill under consideration allows about $6,000,000 or $22,000,000 less than required on a normal construction basis.

We talk a lot about "economy," but we seem to be able to find the money to build a couple of battleships every year at a cost of over $100,000,000 each.

On a 5-year-construction basis we will spend for 10 battleships 10 times the amount we need to complete all of the major reclamation projects of the West outside of the power projects which have already justified their construction by returning costs to the General Treasury at the rate of many millions per year in excess of original estimates.

Gentlemen, what is the use of building battleships if we are to neglect our internal situation? Why, I ask you, continue to build battleships at a cost of $100,000,000 each and neglect to complete a necessary piece of work when we know that the life of a battleship is only a little over 20 years?

The present European war will exhaust every nation that under any circumstance would attack the United States.

Gentlemen, I am serving notice now that as chairman of the Irrigation and Reclamation Committee of this House, I intend to propose legislation that will provide the necessary funds to complete the projects on the list mentioned and other necessary projects.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be considered as read down to line 17 on page 113 with the understanding that points of order may be raised, or amendments offered, to any paragraph between page 80 and line 17, on page 113.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RICH: Page 113, line 3, after the word "Budget", insert ": Provided further, That no part of the foregoing appropriations for the National Park Service shall be available for the payment of salaries or expenses of any employee of the National Park Service assigned to duties in connection with the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial in St. Louis, Mo."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, there is no objection from the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: On page 111, line 20, add the following paragraph:

"Recreational administration areas: For administration, protection, and maintenance, including not exceeding $10,000 for the maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicle, $250,000: Provided, That the National Park Service is authorized to retain the services of the project managers without reference to civil-service laws until the United States Civil Service Commission establishes appropriate registers of eligibles for such positions as are otherwise filled by civil-service employees."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offer at this time concerns recreational demonstration areas located in 23 States with a total area of approximately 400,000 acres.

The amount of $250,000 specified in the amendment is necessary if these areas or public parks are to remain in operation for the fiscal year 1941.

The Federal Government spent large sums in developing these recreational areas in more than 20 States, and up until this time no item has been included in the Interior Department appropriations for the administration, protection, and operation of these parks. Each year the necessary money has been supplied from the emergency relief appropriations. This item rightfully belongs in the Interior Department budget because the National Park Service has supervision over these Federal-developed parks.

At this very moment there is no assurance that emergency relief funds will be available for this purpose after July 1, and since the Government has no legal authority to deed these parks to the States or other political subdivisions, due to the President's vetoing such a measure last year, they clearly become the responsibility of the Federal Government.

There are 52 of these areas located in 23 States, and, for the information of my colleagues, I submit the following States in which these parks are located:

Alabama	1
Maine	2
New Mexico	1
Pennsylvania	5
Tennessee	3
Indiana	2
North Dakota	1
California	1
Georgia	3
Maryland	1
New Hampshire	1
Rhode Island	1
Virginia	10
Michigan	2
South Dakota	1
Oregon	1
Kentucky	1
Missouri	3
North Carolina	1
South Carolina	8
Illinois	1
Minnesota	1
Oklahoma	1

During the past year 319,419 persons used the camping facilities of these parks, while 972,842 persons were day visitors, or a total of 1,292,261 persons.

The cost per capita was 16 cents which is small in comparison to the many benefits derived from the use of these recreational areas.

Gentlemen, in asking support for this amendment I do so conscious of the fact that thousands of our fellow Americans look to these parks for recreation and relaxation during the summer season.

In my own district Blue Knob National Park offers to the average family a day's outing, while the camping facilities are enjoyed by young and old alike.

The Girl Scouts of Cumberland, Md., and Altoona, Pa., and the Y. W. C. A. of Johnstown, Pa., located in the district of my good friend and colleague from Pennsylvania, HARVE TIBBOTT, have formed an organization known as the Blue Knob Camp Association, paying the annual rental fee charged by the Department of the Interior.

Last year 19,091 persons used the facilities of this park, of which 14,023 were day visitors while 5,068 were campers.

This park is typical of the other areas referred to and I hope that the Members of this House will stop to consider what these areas mean to thousands of our citizens who seek the many natural advantages that the great outdoors affords through the use of these Federal-developed parks.

I feel certain that in weighing the many benefits resulting from the operation of these areas you will be moved to give favorable consideration to this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The gentleman is closely connected with ex-service organizations. I want to say to him that American Legion posts in my State have written to me to the same effect, and I imagine other ex-service organizations as well are interested. Of course, those who have contacted me had in mind those areas nearest home.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The veteran organizations are interested in these parks throughout the country because of their great desire to give to the American people the advantages of outdoor life.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has made a very excellent address, and I personally feel very kindly toward recreational areas; but I call attention to the fact there is no Budget estimate for it and there is no authorizing legislation. For these reasons I feel constrained to make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] desire to be heard?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman if it is not true that the Interior Department included in the budget it sent to the Budget Bureau an item covering these recreational areas?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am not sure. We have no way of knowing what the Interior Department did. I think I can assure the gentlemen, however, that the Park Service is very favorable toward these recreational areas, and I am sure every member of the committee feels that way about it.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman states the Interior Department sent an estimate to the Budget for this item and still there is no legislation authorizing it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No. I said the Interior Department feels very kindly and very favorable to it.

Mr. MOTT. The Department did send up an estimate, did it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] makes a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

The Chair has examined the amendment and it appears clearly to the Chair that the proviso included in the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill; therefore the point of order is sustained.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Page 111, after line 20, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission. Any unexpended balances of funds available for obligations for the Mount Rushmore National Memorial on June 30, 1940, shall hereby continue available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for the same purposes for which such funds were originally appropriated and under the same conditions and limitations with respect thereto."

MOUNT RUSHMORE MEMORIAL

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered continues the availability after June 30 of any funds now appropriated to the Mount Rushmore Memorial Commission, which may be unexpended on that date. Existing conditions or requirements as to their use are continued by the wording of the amendment.

It is true, as the printed hearings show, that when the sculptor-engineer, Gutzon Borglum, appeared before the appropriations committee a year ago he promised "to complete the work" with the funds requested by June 30, 1940. The funds were appropriated, $75,000 to be immediately available and $175,000 to be available during the current fiscal year.

The Commission budgeted the work and funds, but obviously, in a work of that character, combining the art of sculpturing with the science of engineering, it is quite possible that time and money may not come out evenly on June 30 next. The Secretary of the Commission advises me that a small balance of funds may be on hand which could be expended before that date, but would be spent more orderly if it could be used after that date. Bad weather or break-downs in machinery may interfere with the work as programmed.

Congress, we hope, will have adjourned by June 30. It would be unfortunate, if on that date, some part of the work programmed with these funds were not finished and the money already appropriated should revert to the Treasury where it could not be touched until Congress meets again in January. I have explained the amendment to the members of the subcommittee, and they have said it is acceptable to them.

Many Members of Congress ask me about Mount Rushmore. Increasingly it is recognized that this is America's greatest memorial. On it, the Government has spent only a fraction of what has been spent on other memorials of far less significance, grandeur, and permanence. Probably many of you saw the Washington head on the cover of the Saturday Evening Post a couple of weeks ago. I invite and urge you all to see the memorial itself, with the heads of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt, in the Black Hills of South Dakota, at your earliest opportunity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, there is no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to correct the total, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: Page 81, line 3, strike out "$6,697,000" and insert "$7,197,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: Page 81, line 16, strike out "$6,599,600" and insert "$8,099,600."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, that is just a correction of the total?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. When the gentleman from Minnesota submitted a point of order it struck out the $141,000 on page 13?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota was to the language following the figures cited by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As I understand it, it is not now in order to offer an amendment to that section of the bill, pro forma or otherwise?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. That part of the bill has been passed, and another unanimous-consent request has been agreed to since then.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD relating to page 13.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to address my remarks to the phase of this bill which has to do with some of our island possessions and territories. In hurriedly glancing through the testimony submitted by Governor Cramer in connection with the Virgin Islands I find some of the information which I desire, but apparently some of it is not available. The Governor states, on page 1002 of the hearings:

> I was up here for 4 months last year trying to get favorable action, but, unfortunately, did not succeed in doing so. We want to be given the same treatment that Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands get with respect to internal-revenue taxes collected on our products.

Just prior to that the Governor was commenting on the proposition of getting benefit payments for sugar growers in the Virgin Islands under the Sugar Act of 1937. He also referred to certain refunds or cancelations of what I believe they term there as export taxes. I understand that in addition to the Governor being in Washington a delegation from the Virgin Islands was here for several months last year attempting to get some very mild legislation approved which would help them in working out their economy. I believe a bill—H. R. 4773—is now pending before the Ways and Means Committee. As one who takes a little bit of interest in the offshore areas, I hope the Ways and Means Committee will see fit to favorably report at this session of the Congress the bill to which the Governor referred and the one to which I referred, and which any Member of the House can get full information on if he will inquire of the Ways and Means Committee. The legislation should be enacted this session, and I urge upon our acting chairman today that he press the Ways and Means Committee to favorably report the bill at an early date. It would greatly help the islanders.

The Governor speaks about spending 4 months here in Washington. On page 998 of the hearings, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], commenting on the ownership of the Virgin Islands Co., asked this question:

> Then you and the Secretary of the Interior and the other stockholders own the plant?
>
> Governor CRAMER. No, sir; we no not; because we signed a trust agreement which was to the effect that we would never get anything out of the company. Everything coming out of it was intended to be used for the rehabilitation of the people of the Virgin Islands.
>
> Mr. RICH. It does not look like anybody else will get anything out of it, from the financial reports you give. Can you give us a statement for the Virgin Islands Co. for this year? You said you could give it.
> Governor CRAMER. I did not say I could give it, but I said I will try to get it.

Mr. Chairman, the Members of this House are entitled at all times to have submitted to them the operating statements and balance sheets of all our companies with such sweeping charters as that held by the Virgin Islands Co. There is a lot of information I should like to have, as a Member of this House and as one who sits on the Insular Affairs Committee, pertaining to the very operations of the company here referred to. I am informed that the Governor of the Virgin Islands spends most all of his time out of the islands and the greater part of it in the city of Washington.

Businessmen and other citizens of the islands feel that the Governor spends too great a proportion of his time away from the islands. With the Virgin Islands Co. playing such an important part in the economy of the people, they are justified in being concerned about their privately owned business, which must compete, directly or indirectly, with the Government-owned operation. Naturally, they desire to have the Governor available most of the time, so that appeals and petitions and perhaps complaints may be filed with him personally.

I do not have access to the Governor, as do members of the Appropriations Committee, otherwise I would certainly use a lot of my energy in attempting to get full and detailed information with reference to exactly what has happened in connection with the rehabilitation program into which we have poured a lot of money, and as a result of which very little relief, if any, has come to the people down there. On the one hand, we pour money into the islands and on the other we impose wage and hour restrictions, export taxes, and other barriers to their economic and social progress, all of which renders them more unable to help themselves. This occurs because the Members of this body do not thoroughly understand the situation in the islands. I sincerely trust we will mend our ways. I believe the Committee on Appropriations will be rendering a great service if it will insist on the Governor's furnishing detailed information in connection with the condition of the Virgin Islands Co. and in line with this testimony.

We have on our hands at the present time two staggering problems, one much greater than the other, of course. The larger one is in Puerto Rico and the smaller one in the Virgin Islands. I believe it is somewhat of a tragedy that we are not closer to the economic problems and the social problems of those two areas. In my opinion, as a Member of this House who has not been here very long, we pay too little attention to what takes place in the offshore areas. I believe we are not familiar enough with the social and economic problems of Puerto Rico, in particular, as well as the Virgin Islands. The Governor of the Virgin Islands points out what tremendous difficulties they have there as the result of the droughts which visit that area from time to time. In recent months, as a matter of fact for the last 2 years, they have had a recurrence of a disastrous drought there. Those people still operate more or less under the old Danish law. We purchased the islands from Denmark years ago.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 additional minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I believe we can help them help themselves tremendously by paying some attention to a further revamping of the organic law. We could also very appropriately give further consideration to the situation in Puerto Rico, which at the moment is very bad and, in my opinion, growing worse every day. I think our Insular Affairs Committee could very constructively be more active than it is. I do not want to be too critical of the Governor or the people of the Virgin Islands as long as I personally feel that part of the blame rests on the shoulders of the Members of this body.

This also applies to Puerto Rico. I believe we have been guilty of a terrible injustice to the Puerto Ricans in connection with our Wages and Hours Act. I believe our attempt to solve the sugar problem has been unfair to Puerto Rico. I believe our reciprocal-trade agreements have been unfair to Puerto Rico. I believe many other sins of omission and commission which can be traced to the floor of this House have contributed to the social and economic unrest of the Puerto Ricans. Some day we shall have to answer for them.

In that area there is a population of about 1,800,000, or, say, not more than 2,000,000, which is increasing, I am informed, at the rate of more than 35,000 per annum. They have unbelievable poverty down there. Of course, we also have plenty of poverty in the United States. Their legislative bodies cannot act independently of the Congress. We have aided the building of a political status for the Puerto Ricans which is most disadvantageous to them. We have built a type of commercial agriculture exclusively suitable for exportation. We have contributed to a curtailment of subsistence farming, encouraged absentee ownership, promoted a system which compels the people to import practically their entire subsistence and materially added to their cost of living. New sources of employment are conspicuous by their absence, although the population rapidly increases. Their productive possibilities tend to vanish; their resources are coming to naught; the people grow poorer and poorer; a collective restlessness grows; discontent arises, and entirely too many of the people are plunged into despair. There is imposed upon us a greater responsibility from a trustee standpoint, because we are more or less responsible for their keeping. Every year we contribute heavily to their treasury, but at the same time, in my opinion, we could do a much better job in the way of constructive assistance than we do at the present time.

I should like now to make a few comments upon the Philippine situation. We have here, I understand, an appropriation of approximately $141,000 to pay the expenses of the High Commissioner of the Philippines. God only knows what will happen in connection with the Philippines. Their independence is on the way. Personally, I do not believe the Filipinos want independence—I mean the people who are capable of thinking—but, nevertheless, we have said to them that they will get independence. I personally feel that the people of this country are determined to give them their independence.

What is to be our program in continuing to subsidize the Filipino economy as a result of direct remittances which we make to their treasury from year to year? It is my understanding that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] will discuss this same proposition very shortly, and I shall not intrude on his comments.

COCONUT-OIL EXCISE-TAX ACCUMULATIONS

It is my understanding that the aggregate of the coconut-oil excise-tax accumulations up to December 31, 1938, amounted to some $73,928,012.77, and that in this figure there is included an overcredit of $1,200,000, leaving a balance of $72,728,012.77 as of the last-mentioned date; that for the year—12 months—of 1939 there accrued $17,468,379.22, and for January 1940 there accrued the sum of $1,302,898.77—an altogether total to February 1, 1940, of, let us say, $91,500,000. This, even the Filipinos must admit, is a pretty sum to be deposited in their favor.

SUGAR EXCISE-TAX ACCUMULATIONS

Section 503 of the Sugar Act of September 1, 1937—Public, 414, Seventy-fifth Congress—authorizes to be appropriated an amount equal to the amount of the taxes collected or accrued under title IV of the above-mentioned act on sugars produced from sugarcane grown in the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands which are manufactured in or brought into the United States on or prior to June 30, 1941, minus the costs of collecting such taxes and the estimates of amounts of refunds required to be made with respect to such taxes for transfer to the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines for the purpose of financing a program of economic adjustment in the Philippines, the transfer to be made under such terms and conditions as the President of the United States may prescribe; provided that no part of the appropriations authorized shall be paid directly or indirectly for the production or processing of sugarcane in the Philippine Islands. The tax imposed under title IV, section 402 (a) (1), amounts to 50 cents per 100 pounds on 96° raw sugar, or, say, 53½ cents per 100 pounds on refined white sugar. The 1940 sugar marketing quota set by the Secretary of Agriculture and applicable to the Philippine Islands amounts to—February 23, 1940 release—1,003,783 short tons raw value, and, calculating the excise tax at the rate of 50 cents per bag on raw sugar, we arrive at an approximate figure of $10,000,000 per annum. The Sugar Act has been in operation since September 1, 1937, and it is fair to assume that the excise tax will apply until June 30, 1941. On this basis, let us make a rough calculation of, say, 46 months, and at the rate of, say, $10,000,000 per annum credit to the Philippine Commonwealth. It would amount to a total of, say, $35,000,000, after deducting the expenses necessary to administer the collection and remittance of the tax on sugar.

So, Mr. Chairman, it would appear, when we take into consideration the general attitude toward the continuation of the excise tax on oil and that on sugar, that we are rapidly moving toward a fund of near one-quarter of a billion dollars to be used in connection with the economic adjustment in the Philippines before or after independence is granted. We have not only a right but a responsibility to leave no stones unturned to see that these funds thus created are used in a very proper manner and for the specific purpose of economic adjustment. It is a very unusual procedure in these days of deficits, heavy interest burdens, and rapidly growing Federal debt. If the fund is to grow to great proportions, that will impose upon us a greater degree of responsibility. If the fund's growth is to be discontinued, that will, in turn, raise serious problems for the Filipinos. In this connection, it is well for us to remember that the necessary appropriation has not yet been made for the transfer of the sugar excise-tax funds to the treasury of the Philippine Commonwealth. In due course the Congress will be called upon to approve an appropriation to permit the transfer of the sugar excise tax to the Philippine treasury, the funds to be expended, of course, in accordance with the provisions of the Independence Act, the Sugar Act and the amendments thereto, and the Revenue Act imposing the oil excise tax.

Now, let us look at another phase of the situation which has an important bearing on the whole approach and the questions and problems involved. The 1940 budget of the Philippine Commonwealth—submitted by the President of the Commonwealth to the national assembly on February 7, 1939—shows the following:

Estimated ordinary income	₱85,500,500.00
Estimated ordinary expenditures	83,406,930.00
Estimated excess of ordinary income over ordinary expenditures	2,093,570.00
Add: Estimated current surplus on July 1, 1939	28,620,096.38
Total	30,713,666.38
Deduct: Estimated extraordinary expenditures	610,000.00
Estimated current surplus on June 30, 1940	30,103,666.38

The national budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, excluding the income accruing to and the expenditures chargeable against the collections derived from the coconut-oil excise tax, it is estimated that the total collections for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, will reach the sum of ₱97,061,880, including the amount of ₱9,625,230 which the Philippine National Bank recently paid to the national government as a refund on account of fixed deposits previously written off. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, the total collections are estimated at ₱91,178,150, including the sum of ₱3,500,000 which it is expected will be realized from the Philippine National Bank as a refund on account of fixed deposits previously written off. The 1941 budget proposes a total appropriation of ₱89,149,130 for the ordinary or recurring expenditures.

Now, when Congress gives its approval to the transfer of the accumulated funds flowing from the sugar excise tax, and when this is added to the oil excise tax it will be found that annual contributions will approximate—on basis of present showing—about $27,000,000 annually. This is such a great proportion of the total annual budget—$27,000,000 as related to, say, $42,500,000, a peso being equal to 50 cents American money—that when it is expended there will be danger of inflation of prices and great dislocation of industry in the islands during the period of expansion or immediately following its discontinuance. In fact, we are playing with great forces here. Those who are familiar with the economy of the islands, the standard of living of the people, the primitive state of the people, and the country can, when they comprehend the importance of such a vast sum of money as related to ordinary expenditures of Government, fully realize the dangers inherent in the policy we are following.

PRIOR REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES

Now let us look at some of the previous figures. From the annual report, Chief, Bureau of Insular Affairs, for 1938, we find the following:

	1934	1935	1936	1937
Total revenues	$39,337,375	$41,419,640	$51,751,118	$106,240,713
Expenditures	35,359,795	37,966,596	46,183,096	54,553,918

NOTE.—It is important to keep in mind that the receipts for 1937 include $47,753,613 coconut-oil excise tax collected in the United States.

While it is difficult to obtain current figures on all these transactions, we do find from the report of the Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs that by the end of March 1938 the United States Treasury had collected $61,115,123 coconut-oil excise tax for remittance to the Philippine government, this being the sum which had accrued from May 10, 1934, to March 31, 1938. There is very little chance for the repeal of the excise-tax burden, and it would appear that for some years to come the Philippine treasury will be enriched by the flow of this excise-tax money from the United States. Now, as the excise-tax fund becomes larger and larger, and as it is augmented by the appropriations which are sure to be made to cover the accruals on the sugar excise tax, it is reasonable to assume that in due course a fund in the neighborhood of a quarter of a billion dollars, or even more, will be available for economic adjustment in the Philippines. This, my dear colleagues, certainly creates further Philippine uncertainty. In the United States we have had an example of just how planned economy works out or does not work out. We know what it means to have a vast sum of money turned over to Executive discretion. We know how leaks and fraud and waste can quickly develop. Yes; we have had some experience in using hundreds of millions of dollars making economic adjustments. Can we believe that in far-away, primitive Philippines, funds will be guarded with any greater degree of care and discretion than that which we have exercised in our continental United States? We have seen how such funds can be used for political purposes. Should we assume that this will not happen in the Philippine Islands? Personally, I shall not assume that it is not necessary for us to throw about and around these funds the greatest care that is humanly possible. In building up these vast funds we are creating great temptations for the Filipino politicos. Some day someone is very likely to look upon these accruals of excise-tax funds with great envy. Why do I say this? Because it is in keeping with the way legislative bodies operate. Revenues should always be kept within the bounds of reasonable needs. When they run sufficiently high to build up great excess funds, the temptation is there, and generally someone yields to temptation and a large percentage of the funds are squandered. For us to be parties to the building up of a great fund in the islands and then, through carelessness on our part as the Congress, to permit those funds to be squandered will be a greater disgrace to ourselves than it will be to the Filipinos who participate in a waste of the funds.

Mr. Chairman, to assist an honest man to pay his debts is a constructive step to take. On June 30, 1938, I am informed, the insular government of the Philippine Islands had bonded indebtedness outstanding in the sum of $47,041,000, this sum being included in the 10-percent limitation. In addition, there was outstanding, not included in the 10-percent limitation, the sum of $6,939,000, a grand total of $53,980,000. There were outstanding bonds of railroads, guaranteed as to interest by the Philippine government, $20,168,000. It might be a highly constructive step for the Commonwealth government to use some of the excise-tax funds for the purpose of paying off the direct and guaranteed debt of the insular government. A debt paid is an obligation discharged, while new buildings constructed add to the future burden in the form of taxes for upkeep.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Walter: On page 97, line 20, strike out "$324,500" and insert "$331,500", and strike out "$227,000" and insert "$234,000".

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the committee will offer no objection to the amendment. This item was omitted through a misunderstanding.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will yield, I am not informed as to what item this relates to.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. It relates to coal statistics in the Bureau of Economics. The item was omitted through a misunderstanding, under the impression that this work was being handled by the Bituminous Coal Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 86, line 10, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For water-conservation projects in the Great Plains, reimbursable, as authorized by the act of August 11, 1939 (Public, No. 398, 76th Cong.), $1,500,000: Provided, That the amount of these funds expended on projects, in which, or in part, on Indian reservations shall not exceed one-fifth of the amount herein made available."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this amendment will be objected to by the committee, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill from page 113 to the end of the bill may be considered as read, with the understanding that points of order and amendments may be in order to that part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language beginning in line 12 on page 114 and extending to the end of the paragraph on line 19, page 115, that it is legislation on an appropriation bill not authorized by law, and that it contains contractual legislation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No, Mr. Chairman; I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the point of order is without merit. These appropriations are specifically authorized in the act referred to in line 14, on page 114; that is to say, the Federal Highway Act of June 8, 1938. Section 8 or 9 of this act specifically authorizes appropriations for the purposes set forth in the paragraph to which objection has been made. I submit that the point of order is without merit and should be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] makes a point of order against the language beginning in line 12, on page 114, and ending in line 19, on page 115.

The Chair invites attention especially to the language appearing in the proviso beginning in line 2, on page 115, and extending through the paragraph. It appears clearly to the Chair that that is legislation on an appropriation bill, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: On page 114, line 12, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace Parkways: For continuing the construction and maintenance, under the provisions of section 8 of the act of June 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 635), of the Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace Parkways, including not exceeding $2,400, for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles, to be immediately available and remain available until expended, $2,000,000, of which amount not to exceed $50,000 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That $700,000 and any other sums received from other sources for said Natchez Trace Parkway shall be allotted and expended ratably between the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee according to mileage of said parkway in each respective State and said allotments shall be used for no other purpose."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER: On page 114, line 11, after the word "California", strike out the period and insert a comma and the following: "except in the floor of the canyon of the south fork of the Kings River."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: On page 143, after line 13, add a new section to be known as section 5, to read as follows: "No part of any appropriation contained in this act or authorized hereby to be expended shall be used to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the Government of the United States, or of any agency the majority of the stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States, whose post of duty is in continental United States, unless such person is a citizen of the United States, or a person in the service of the United States on the date of the approval of this act, who, being eligible for citizenship, had theretofore filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen or who owes allegiance to the United States."

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is similar to the amendment already adopted by the House when considering the appropriation bills for the Navy and nonmilitary functions of the War Department.

Reduced to a few words, the expenditure of the funds appropriated under this bill is restricted to the employment of only American citizens. This restriction applies only to those whose post of duty is in continental United States.

With 10,000,000 of our fellow Americans unemployed it behooves us to adopt such an amendment to aid our country in assisting our own citizens who are jobless through no fault of their own.

I respectfully request your support of the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the committee is very pleased to accept the amendment.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is similar to several amendments, in fact, to a series of amendments, we have had during this session of the Congress which make it impossible for one who is not an American citizen to be employed on any of the projects or any of the works contemplated under these appropriations. Last week we had a similar amendment with regard to the nonmilitary appropriation bill and this week we have this amendment with regard to the Interior appropriation bill.

I wonder if I could get this Congress to pause and dispassionately consider just what we have been doing to the foreign-born. I wonder if it is possible to have you lay aside your prejudices and bigotry. I wonder if it is possible to have you drop your un-American offensive against a man who is law-abiding, who is trying to become a citizen of the United States, who is trying to raise native American children as good Americans. I wonder if it is possible to have you desist from depriving him of an opportunity to earn a living for himself and for his native American family?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I think if the gentleman will read my amendment he will find that where an alien has applied for first papers and takes an oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States, he is excluded from the amendment.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And the gentleman well knows that in applying for first papers, the foreign-born is confronted with a procedure that is so difficult and lengthy that an applicant has to wait 10 months or more before receiving his declaration of intention. Often because of his inability to meet red-tape requirements he never receives his declaration of intention. Furthermore, you do not make good citizens by jamming citizenship down people's throats. American citizenship is and has been a voluntary act, and these people want to become citizens. This Congress has refused to give sufficient funds to the Naturalization Service so that it is now understaffed and the foreign-born has to suffer long periods of delay. You have refused to make naturalization a reasonable procedure. To the contrary you have made it most difficult for the foreign-born to become a citizen and now you try to starve him because he is not a citizen. These people are anxious to become citizens, but what happens? Before the average courts of the States and of the United States they are asked questions that even a United States Supreme Court judge cannot answer.

There are all kinds of impediments set before them which I have not the time to describe, and there is so much red tape involved that becoming a citizen is today a most difficult process. I make no criticism of the Naturalization Service. It is doing the best it can. Congress will not give it the funds it needs nor has this Congress ever given any thought to make the process reasonable. On the one hand we make it virtually impossible for the foreign-born to become a citizen, and on the other hand you say to him, "You are going to starve because you are not a citizen of the United States." What brand of Americanism is this? I say it is Ku Klux Klanism.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does not the gentleman think that while there are American citizens out of work, the United States Government should not employ these people who have not signified their intention to become a citizen of the United States?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. You are not going to solve the unemployment problem by depriving anybody of work. The only way to solve the unemployment problem is to provide work for everybody. Deprive any group of people of their purchasing power and you aggravate the problem of unemployment. What are you going to do with these people anyway? Are you going to shoot them down?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. We should urge them to become citizens of the United States.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. You urge them how? By making it almost impossible for them to be citizens. There was a time in the history of this country when the National Manufacturers Association sent agents to southern and eastern Europe, and to Ireland and various other places, and their agents pictured a beautiful land here and said, "Come on over—big wages, good living, hospitality, and a keen desire to help you." People believed them. They sold their few belongings and were herded into steerages. They greeted the Statute of Liberty with tears in their eyes, and their hearts were swelled with the desire to become Americans, raise their families as Americans, and to become an integral part of a great democratic Nation. No sooner had they turned their heads, they found themselves in Ellis Island. Soon they learned that the promises were fakes; that they had been induced to come here to be used as cheap labor—industrial cannon fodder of the labor exploiters.

On Ellis Island they put tags on them and they took them from Ellis Island and shipped them off to work in the mines, the roads, the mills, the sweatshops, and on the railroads. These men and women worked and worked hard, and at the end of each month instead of getting any wages, they would often be informed that after deducting their wages they still owed the company commissary money. At that time when we wanted cheap labor, it was marvelous to get these people here because we could exploit them, but since that time, since these foreign-born workers have fought for the American standard of living and have been insisting on union and trade-union rates, we no longer want them. These people helped build America. Now, that they have joined with their citizen fellow workers to help make America a happy nation of a happy people, we persecute them under the name of Americanism. This is not Americanism, it is know-nothingism. Remember, Mr. Chairman, what is going on in this House is a repetition of the vile Know Nothings, practices that existed in this country prior to 1860. This is Know Nothings legislation that we are putting in these bills day in and day out. We are practicing the Know Nothings creed, and we who are of this foreign-born stock resent deeply your persecution of our people of whom we are proud. We resent it because it is wrong.

We resent it because you are going to the limit to hound and persecute the foreign born. The other day you passed an amendment which prohibits any American family to live in any low-cost Government-financed housing project if any one member of the family is not a citizen. And you call this Americanism? I am pleading for these people because they are good Americans, even though they do not possess a certificate. I plead for their native American children. If this is Americanism, if this legislation which forces the foreign born to travel along another via Crucis is the kind of legislation of which this Congress is proud, all right. You can have it, but I am telling you that the children, relatives, and friends of the foreign born and all others who still adhere to genuine American traditions resent this Know-Nothings legislation and will remember its proponents on election day.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I shall take only a moment or two. I submit that if these people to whom reference has been made are good Americans, then they will become citizens of this country.

There is no Know Nothings legislation about this. Quite to the contrary. Out in my district one of the largest employers of labor, a private industry, some years ago voluntarily set up for itself this standard of employment. That industry required that whenever it employed new people they must be citizens, or at least must have applied for first citizenship papers. They paid the highest standard of wages of employers in that territory. The personnel manager told me that they found it to be good business, that when these people found that American citizenship meant something to them, they commenced to take an interest in their community and commenced to be better citizens and Americans. They cut loose the old ties and the United States became "our country" to them.

There can be nothing wrong in saying that when the taxpayers foot the bill to pay for employees of the United States, that we should give preference at least to American citizens or those who have declared their intention to become citizens before we employ aliens. [Applause.]

Mr. HINSHAW. Would the gentleman be willing to say whether or not United States citizens can be employed by any other government in the world?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I do not know of any such instance.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Is it not true that many of the States of the Union have similar laws forbidding public employment by the State or its subdivisions of aliens or of people who are not citizens or residents of the States?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think many States do have such legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I merely state that similar amendments have been added to nearly every bill that has been passed here. There is no objection to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 101, line 16, strike out "$2,808,460" an insert "$2,815,460."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, to say in connection with the amendment I offered a few moments ago, relative to the Kings Canyon National Park in California, that the amendment was made necessary because the bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations carried a provision that no funds for road building could be used in that park.

While it was the understanding of the committee that no roads were to be built, still the Park Service had never appeared before the committee in behalf of this park. At the time of the hearings on the Interior Department bill this area was not a national park; therefore, the National Park Service made no representations with reference to this park. Within the last day or two the bill making this area a national park has been signed. Since this bill was reported it has developed that the Park Service does want to make a few miles of entrance road. All the discussion in the committee at the time this amendment was under consideration was to the effect that according to the unofficial information no roads were contemplated and, if they were, the committee felt that a comprehensive plan of roadbuilding should not be commenced there without the matter being placed before the Committee on Appropriations. As I say, it developed afterward that the Park Service does desire to make an entrance road of a few miles and to make a turn-around and parking areas. There was no desire on the part of the committee to impede the development of this park and I believe I am correct in saying that they are unanimous for the amendment I have offered. From the Park Service I have obtained a statement of their plans of development, as follows:

ROADS AND TRAILS IN KINGS CANYON NATIONAL PARK

The allotment of roads and trails funds to the new park are necessary for these reasons:

1. From 50,000 to 75,000 automobiles may be expected to enter the South Fork Canyon during 1940. Camp roads and parking areas must be built to distribute and care for this influx or irreparable damage will be done to the vegetation and scenery. It is not expected to construct any major roads within the park or to push a road up the South Fork Canyon beyond a suitable turn-around point near Zumwalt Meadow.

2. It will be equally necessary to construct footpaths, trails, and bridle paths in the South Fork Canyon to distribute foot and saddle travel.

3. A beginning, but a small beginning, toward the above has been made by the Forest Service; but they have been faced with the indefinite status of the area and they were not confronted with the actual fact of automobile travel, as is the Park Service, because of opening of new State highway early in 1940.

4. There are over 400 miles of used trails in the park, much of which is in condition dangerous to stock, notably sections of the John Muir Trail over Glen Pass, the Middle Fork Trail from Tehipite to Simpson Meadow, the Muir Pass Trail from Little Peto Meadow to Evolution Basin. All trail use will intensify, and unless there is maintenance and improvement work they will become impassable. This is particularly the case this year as California has experienced its heaviest rains in many years.

SUMMARY

The allotment of moderate sums for minor road construction, for parking areas, for road and trail maintenance and improvement cannot operate to destroy the wilderness aspect of the park, but will preserve it from destruction by unregulated automobile traffic.

The Service and the Department of the Interior are irrevocably committed to the preservation of the Kings Canyon National Park as a wilderness park, with no additional road construction beyond that necessary to care for motor travel already brought with the South Fork Canyon. The deprivation of roads and trails funds will operate to hinder administration, protection, and maintenance, and will result in a condition which will reflect upon the Service and the Congress.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am reluctant to trespass on the indulgence and patience of the Committee at this late hour, but I should remind you that this bill carries $265,000 for the Virgin Islands, of which $90,000 is to be used to reimburse deficits in the treasuries of St. Johns, St. Thomas, and St. Croix. My only reason for alluding to it is because in another body a distinguished Member has introduced a resolution this week for the purpose of setting in motion negotiations with Great Britain and France looking to the purchase of Windward Island, Leeward Island, Bimini Island, Nassau Island, Trinidad Island, Bermuda, and a couple of bushels of other islands. The proposal is predicated upon the belief that these islands are essential to our national defense and as a means of collecting the war debts.

In view of the distressing and very vexatious experience that we have had with the Virgin Islands, reimbursing as we do today, the deficits, and in view of the fact that a similar situation exists in the other islands in the Caribbean today, I am apprehensive that Great Britain and France may undertake to accept the deal that would be offered in such a resolution. So I raise my voice against it. If they want to collect the war debt, let us start negotiating for Canada and be practical about it. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Has Uncle Sam's rum business in the Virgin Islands been operated at a profit or a loss?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would say we are producing about 80,000 gallons of Government House rum and they have a gentleman on the pay roll figuring up new recipes whereby sales may be expanded. But if you look at the hearings you will see how distressing our experience has been with the Virgin Islands and the industries there.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman knows that we went in the red to the extent of $23,000 in the Virgin Islands rum plant and we did not charge anything for taxes and we did not get anything on the $2,600,000 we have spent there. If that is a good corporation, then we know nothing about corporations.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me suggest the language in the bill itself on page 136:

For defraying the deficits in the treasuries of the municipal governments, because of current expenses, $90,000.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Is that what makes the gentleman jealous, that Government House rum?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The amount of Government House rum they make in the Virgin Islands is such a picayunish amount compared with the rum and whisky we have manufactured in the city of Peoria alone that it is not worth worrying about. [Laughter.]

On the face of it, the logic of the proposal would appear almost unassailable. It goes like this: Since the war-debtor nations have refused or neglected to pay up and since the debts are becoming cold and seemingly uncollectible, let us venture in the real-estate business on a wholesale scale and take over a score of islands as part payment. Moreover, we must protect the Panama Canal, and since many of these islands are in the proximity of the Canal, we should own them. It makes a most plausible case.

But wait. We already own the Virgin Islands. Is it not a bit strange that the real experts on national defense in the War Department, as distinguished from some of the amateur experts outside the War Department, have never made a survey of the defense possibilities of these islands, inscfar as I can learn? Is it not strange that nothing appears in the pending bill to fortify the Virgin Islands? Is it not strange also that we have not made any special effort to fortify Puerto Rico, which lies but 60 miles from the Virgin Islands? Whence comes the idea that we should accumulate a score of impoverished Caribbean Islands for defense purposes when in fact there is no showing whatsoever that they are necessary?

These are days of mobile navies and speedy planes, and it would be interesting to see by what ratiocination those who would have us go into the real-estate business can establish the contention that these islands are essential to our defense. The naval base which we established in the Virgins was withdrawn nearly 10 years ago, so that apparently the Virgin Islands do not loom so large in the plans of the Navy Department.

But this other argument; how convincing it seems. Since the war-debt nations refuse to pay, let us take what we can get. An assortment of islands to add to our insular domain would be better than no remittance at all. But would they?

We have had the Virgin Islands for 23 years, and they have been a vexation ever since. They have been dubbed "America's poorhouse." Governor Cramer himself has testified that more than $3,000,000 has been invested in land, sugar plants, factories, houses, and in a Government distillery. Other funds have been invested. Sugar has not succeeded. Government rum has scarcely succeeded. The three island governments come to us year after year as mendicants to reimburse the deficits which they incur. Emergency funds and aid of various kinds have been dumped into these islands, but all to no avail. During the period of United States ownership, the population has diminished by about 5,000, and it is fair to assume that many of them have migrated to the United States to add to our own problem of unemployment and relief. Now, some would have us venture into the acquisition of other Caribbean islands, only to become a place where additional funds from our own taxpayers might be dumped.

Back in 1917, when these islands were acquired, there was the familiar fanfare that these islands had commercial importance and strategic value. Wonder what has happened to that argument? As for commercial importance, they constitute a splendid way of adding to our national debt, our annual deficits, and to the continued maintenance of a national poorhouse.

What is true of the Virgin Islands is equally true of Puerto Rico. For more than 40 years we have administered Puerto Rico. What is the score? Every year we dump funds into Puerto Rico under the Smith-Lever Act, the Bankhead-Jones Act, and other acts to stimulate a decadent agriculture.

In round figures, the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration has received about $60,000,000 for relief and rehabilitation work. About $30,000 is spent annually in the island for enforcing prohibition. Another $50,000 has been recommended for the agricultural experiment station. Still another $128,000 was recommended for expenditure there under the Bankhead-Jones Act and another $105,000 for vocational education by the Office of Education. We also operate C. C. C. camps in the islands so that all in all, the Puerto Rican situation has been a sorry affair.

To crown our efforts, the application of the provisions of the Wage and Hour Act destroyed the needlecraft industry in Puerto Rico, made it impossible for them to compete with needlecraft imports from other low-wage countries, and the islanders are now appealing to us for additional aid.

As for its importance in national defense, let me direct attention to a bill which was introduced by Senator TYDINGS to provide a plebescite under which the Puerto Ricans might determine whether they wish to continue as a dependency or become wholly independent. All in all, this has been a tragic and costly experience for 40 years, and if the facts are fully known, I doubt that the taxpayers of this Nation would approve of any proposal to take on more grief by acquiring islands that have no defensive value and which would only constitute a further burden on the Federal Treasury.

To be sure, the national heart should never lose its charitable instincts, but there is such a thing as too much charity at the expense of the taxpayers. With the exception of Bermuda, the islands which it is proposed to bring under the folds of our flag are impoverished, unhealthy, unhappy, unimportant, and unnecessary as a part of the defense establishment of this Nation. My apprehension is that Great Britain and France in the light of their sorry experiences with these Caribbean Islands, might be only too glad to transfer them to this country for a fancy consideration and with it hand us the vexing task of doling out huge appropriations at the expense of the taxpayers of this country to maintain order and provide sustenance for the impoverished natives in these worthless tropical areas.

I, too, share the general desire to secure payment on our war debts. But in approaching that problem, let us be practical. Let us negotiate for Canada.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I will not take 5 minutes. I ask for this time only that we may close debate on this bill by looking at the doughnut instead of the hole.

This bill is of vast importance to thousands of people in this country. I could take you to my own State and show you thousands of families, literally homeless people, who have come out of sections of the country where the fertility of the soil has been exhausted, the topsoil washed or blown away, or where changes in agricultural methods have driven them from the place where they have made their farm home. Those people are looking for new homes. They are good people—old American stock. They are looking for work in the vast majority of cases—and for a new home. What they want more than anything else is a place where they can reroot themselves on the soil of America and follow the way of farming, which has been the basis of our civilization from the beginning.

This reclamation program and this public-power program are making possible the homes that those people so sorely need and which we in California especially need to have them have. This reclamation and power program is giving us a new American frontier. It means a great deal to the people of the State of California as well as from other sections of the country that we do all we can to create that frontier.

I am also deeply interested in the proposal that has been made that we conserve by a comprehensive program the water and develop the greatest practicable amount of water in the Great Plains area. That, too, is important for us of the far West who are having such difficulty in absorbing the great numbers of people who have been coming to our State in recent years.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that people who have been droughted out in the Great Plains area go to the Pacific Coast States of California, Oregon, and Washington, and thereby become a burden on the tax-relief rolls of those States?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is all too true, and it presents a great problem from the standpoint of school districts, our county hospitals, and in many other respects. Of course, under conditions of general prosperity the situation would be less difficult, but when, as now, we already have large numbers of people unemployed and in need, the added numbers make the situation more difficult.

Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak even as long as I have, but I do want to say that from the standpoint of this great human problem the Interior Department appropriation bill we are passing today is a great forward step. I regret only that it does not contain appropriations for conservation work in the Great Plains area so as to help people to stay where they are and make a good living because the life-giving water is present to make the land produce.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from California that the public power plant in Los Angeles has been more responsible than any other cause in bringing down light and power rates in California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is right and could be demonstrated in a dozen ways. Indeed the gentleman has stated the case conservatively. Like him I believe that streams and waterfalls are a gift of God to all the people to be used by all the people for the lighting of homes and the furnishing of power at cheap rates to farms and factories.

Mr. RANKIN. If the people of California were overcharged as much last year as were the people in Illinois, the home State of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] were overcharged, they would have been overcharged $100,000,000.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is right and I thank the gentleman very much for his contribution. Indeed, largely because our rates have been reduced as they have, the number of residential consumers of electric power from the bureau of light and power of Los Angeles has almost doubled since 1935.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The main reason for my withdrawing my amendment, which provided for an increase in the appropriation for conservation of water and the development of small irrigation projects on which relief labor could be used, was that I was assured that through another more effective means a larger appropriation would very likely be secured, and that should my amendment be defeated by the House it might in some way impair the chances of success of securing such larger appropriation by such means. It is imperative that we try to hold our people upon ranches by such improvements, and particularly so when relief labor can be employed, as such improvements would inure to the permanent benefit of the people and the country.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I understand.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of my point of order against the paragraph that not only appropriates $2,000,000 for these highways, but in addition thereto authorizes those in authority in the Park Service to enter into contracts to spend $2,000,000 more, and levy that much more against the taxpayers of this country. I believe the members of this committee know that this is legislation providing for contractual expenditures without legislative authority. It does not belong in an appropriation bill. The extra two million is here so that you will have that much more to spend on these projects.

Now what about the merits of this proposed legislation? This money is to be expended on two scenic highways—the Blue Ridge and the Natchez Trace Highways. One of them, when completed, will be more than 400 miles long. They call them "parkways," so as to have the excuse of securing Federal funds to pay the entire bill of construction and maintenance. I am informed that these two highways will cost about $60,000,000 or $70,000,000. In addition will be the cost of maintenance. I do not know of any place in the United States where highways of this length are built entirely at the expense of the Federal Government. No doubt they are fine scenic highways.

They traverse mountain regions in four or five Southern States. They will be used mostly by the leisure class of our people. The Congress long ago adopted a policy of matching dollars 50-50 with the local communities for building highways. Here, Uncle Sam pays the entire bill except that the States or the counties provide the land. Do you think this is either right or fair to the people of this country? You know it is not right. These particular highways were started with an allotment of W. P. A. funds by the administration. During the last 3 years Congress has been called upon to appropriate millions to keep the projects going. I maintain it is an extravagant expenditure of money and should not be allowed. If you want to build these highways, why not put them on the same basis and build them as we build highways in other parts of the country? It is favoritism, pure and simple. You know that.

If this proposition were in a bill of its own and required to stand on its own feet, on its merits, I just do not believe it would pass the House. Being only a part of a bill appropriating more than $150,000,000, for many projects in various parts of the country, it will be approved without much discussion as to its merits.

This legislation is favoritism, it is extravagant. The overburdened taxpayers of this country should not be asked to bear this extra burden. They just cannot afford it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALEXANDER: On page 143, after line 14, insert a new section to be known as section 6, to read as follows:

"No funds appropriated herein shall be expended for salaries, administrative expenses, travel, or other purposes in any Territory or former possession where refunds of excise-tax collections are being made to such Territory or former possession."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it constitutes legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the Chair please.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that this is legislation that comes within the previous rulings of the Chair, because it is a limitation and therefore comes under the Holman rule.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, it is a pure limitation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this is not germane because it refers to appropriations not covered by this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, answering the gentleman from Oklahoma I suggest that the bill carries an appropriation of $141,000 to which this amendment directly refers and therefore should be germane.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair invites attention to the fact that the bill does carry certain appropriations for the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, and insular possessions. The Chair therefore is under the impression that the amendment is germane to the provisions of the pending bill, and the Chair is of the opinion that the amendment offered is in the form of a limitation and would be in order.

The point of order is overruled.

The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to take the time of the committee at this late hour but there are two points in connection with this amendment which it seems to me are well worth not only the attention of this body but the attention of the general public.

In the first place, I think this appropriation of $141,000 for the United States High Commissioner to the Philippines, which I am aiming at, is exorbitant and excessive, and a great waste of money. In support of this contention I call attention to the fact that this amount is nearly three times what the Governor General of Canada is allowed annually for the salary of himself and expenses of his office. It is a fact, I am informed this afternoon, that the Governor General of Canada is allowed only £10,000 a year for expenses. This is less than $50,000.

The Governor General of the Commonwealth of Australia spends only £7,500, which is less than $37,000, and considerably more than $100,000 under the $141,000 we are being asked to appropriate for the United States High Commissioner to the Philippines. I submit that both Canada and Australia are far more important and larger colonial possessions than the Philippines, so on the basis of these comparisons the appropriation requested is all out of reason. The Governor General of New Zealand receives only £7,500 per annum. An equal amount from us for our Commissioner to the Philippines would be much more reasonable.

But let me call your attention to one additional fact. Not only are the Governors General of those Dominions which I have mentioned chosen by the King of England, but I am informed the Dominions pay every penny of the expenses of these Governors General, whereas we ourselves are asked to pay $141,000 to support the United States High Commissioner to the Philippines. For what purpose? If you will read the hearings you will find that the purposes are very cloudy. There seems to be very little reason, as was developed by questions in the committee.

In addition to that the appropriation that is being requested is nearly as much as requested in the previous year, although we have just spent $750,000 to build new quarters for our High Commissioner to the Philippines, which has just been completed. On a 3-percent-for-interest basis, plus 2 percent for depreciation per annum, we should be saving approximately $37,500 in order to justify the expenditure of this huge sum. But instead of that, after spending $750,000 to build palatial quarters and a house for our High Commissioner, we are saving only $4,000; as shown in the committee hearings. We might better continue to rent quarters at $16,000 plus, which we paid before. We could be saving over $20,000 on that basis per annum. O Consistency, where art thou!

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Who was the High Commissioner when the American taxpayers were called upon to spend three-quarters of a million dollars for a palace in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I believe it was one of the potential candidates for President.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Was it Mr. Paul McNutt, of Indiana?

Mr. ALEXANDER. May I say in this connection, it is not strange that our High Commissioners come back to this country prepared to carry on a campaign for the Presidency, in view of the tremendous sums which we are squandering there year after year for this useless purpose, both by way of refund of their excise tax collections amounting to many millions per year as well as this annual appropriation for the High Commissioner's establishment. Let us support this amendment and save making further mistakes in this connection. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, it is very late. I hope the gentleman will not press his request.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Texas stated, it is very late. The gentleman from Minnesota has no doubt made a study of this question. He offers an amendment here in the form of a limitation which we know is, in fact, a legislative matter that ought to be decided by a legislative committee. The Members do not know what the effect of his amendment might be. It may have a very far reaching effect. The gentleman has in mind the Philippine Islands. I would not say that he has a grudge against those people, because I do not know what his attitude is, but he offers this amendment. It may be very far reaching in its effect. The gentleman had an opportunity to appear before the committee, but he did not come before the committee. At this late hour I do not think we should be called upon to discuss and decide a very important legislative matter that might be very far reaching in its effects. Mr. Chairman, for the reasons stated, I think we should defeat the amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] went out of his way to attack the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, Hon. Paul V. McNutt. Here are his exact words, as taken down by the official stenographer:

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Who was the High Commissioner when the American taxpayers were called upon to spend three-quarters of a million dollars for a palace in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I believe it was one of the potential candidates for President.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Was it Mr. Paul McNutt, of Indiana?

Mr. ALEXANDER. May I say in this connection, it is not strange that our High Commissioners come back to this country prepared to carry on a campaign for the Presidency, in view of the tremendous sums which we are squandering there year after year for this useless purpose.

Mr. RANKIN. What an insult.

Paul McNutt never took a dollar dishonestly in his life. He never dreamed of doing such a thing. There is not a more honorable man in America, as everyone knows. Yet the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] stood here and intimated that Paul McNutt came back from the Philippines a rich man as a result of his service there. That is exactly what his words indicated, and I do not propose to let him make any such insinuation in this House and get away with it.

Paul McNutt served a great purpose in the Philippines; he discharged his duties honorably and well. He never took a dollar except the salary paid him by the Government. He really served at a loss. There is not a more honorable or a more able or a more worthy man in this Republic than Paul V. McNutt. There is not a man who stands higher in his own State. He made one of the greatest Governors Indiana ever had. He made one of the greatest national commanders the American Legion ever had. He stands high with the American people in every section of the country, as one of the ablest and most conscientious public servants this Nation ever had; and I do not propose to have the gentleman from Minnesota or anyone else stand here and in his partisan enthusiasm make such vicious and unwarranted insinuations against a man of his sterling character without a vigorous protest. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the bill close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am certainly surprised to find our good friend, the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] making the speech which he made a few moments ago, in denunciation of one of our colleagues, and accuse him of saying something in the Well of this House which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] did not say.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; he did.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In order to keep the RECORD straight, he did not, the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi to the contrary notwithstanding. The gentleman from Mississippi accused the gentleman from Minnesota of accusing Paul V. McNutt, a New Deal potential Presidential candidate, of taking money himself and being personally dishonest. When you read the RECORD tomorrow you will find that the attack on the gentleman from Minnesota by the gentleman from Mississippi is manifestly unfair, as shown by the RECORD. The gentleman from Minnesota merely stated that during the administration of Paul V. McNutt as United States High Commissioner in the Philippines, there was expended from our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury $750,000 of our American taxpayers' money to erect a magnificent palace in the Philippine Islands in which to house Mr. Paul V. McNutt, who is now a leading New Deal Presidential candidate.

Of course our New Deal brethren are liberal with the American taxpayer's money when it comes to housing programs. Yesterday they tried to appropriate several million dollars for a housing program for Uncle Sam in Alaska, after they had purchased a million dollars' worth of reindeer for him to play Santa Claus.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The important thing is this. This is no time for any Member of this House to criticize another Member because he holds certain views with reference to our program of uncertainty in the Philippine Islands. We have built up in the form of excise taxes a fund of about $90,000,000 up to date on coconut oil alone, which we are sending over there.

We have accumulated a fund, which the Committee on Appropriations, in due course of time, is going to ask us to appropriate, on sugar excise taxes, which will move the total up another $25,000,000 or $35,000,000. We are moving toward a quarter of a billion dollars to be handed to the treasury of the Philippine Islands. I am one Member of the House who is going to discuss the situation any time I get ready, regardless of what the gentleman from Mississippi may have to say.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. For the record, let us not forget the notorious Two-Percent Paul V. McNutt Political Shakedown Clubs in the State of Indiana in the United States of America. Let us not forget that our New Deal President said that one-third of the American people are ill-fed, one-third of them are ill-housed, and one-third of them are ill-clothed.

In view of this distressing condition in the United States and in view of the fact that our Federal Treasury is almost bankrupt, I believe it comes with poor grace for a New Deal leader like the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] to denounce our colleague from Minnesota for merely protesting against raiding that Treasury at the request of Paul V. McNutt, former United States High Commissioner in the Philippine Islands, to erect a palace at a cost of three-quarters of a million dollars in the Philippines.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am surprised that the gentleman from Wisconsin would be so blindly partisan as to make such a silly and absurd charge. The fact, however, that he makes such an unfounded charge is evidence that the would-be Republican leader from Wisconsin, and a lot of other members of his party are fearful that Paul McNutt might be the Democratic nominee for President. Of course neither Governor McNutt nor any other High Commissioner of the Philippines could possibly have had anything at all to do with the construction of a building in the Philippine Islands. That appropriation was made by a Congress of which the gentleman was, as I recall, a Member. The building in question is nothing like as pretentious as buildings owned by other countries there. To now charge Governor McNutt with being responsible for the construction of that building seems to be in keeping with the gentleman's idea of good sportsmanship and fair play. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he really does not feel that he ought to apologize for his uncalled-for remarks against a great American?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman wants to apologize and blame another New Deal potential Presidential candidate, Mr. Murphy, who preceded Mr. McNutt as the New Deal representative in the Philippines, we will let him do so. Let us then say that Mr. Murphy is responsible for spending $750,000 of the American taxpayers' money to build a palace in the Philippines for Mr. McNutt to live in and maintain at considerable expense to our American citizens, one-third of whom are ill-fed, ill-clothed, and ill-housed, according to our New Deal President. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN) having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 8745, the Department of the Interior appropriation bill, 1941, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the Van Zandt amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put the other amendments en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: On page 143, after line 13, add a new section to be known as section 5, to read as follows:

"No part of any appropriation contained in this act or authorized hereby to be expended shall be used to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the Government of the United States, or of any agency the majority of the stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States, whose post of duty is in continental United States unless such person is a citizen of the United States, or a person in the service of the United States on the date of the approval of this act, who, being eligible for citizenship, had theretofore filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen or who owes allegiance to the United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 153, noes 17.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present, and I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-five Members are present, a quorum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on the bill just passed may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE], who spoke on the bill, may have permission to extend his remarks and to include certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—RELIEF OF CERTAIN FORMER DISBURSING OFFICERS (H. DOC. NO. 652)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 7050, entitled "An act for the relief of certain former disbursing officers for the Civil Works Administration."

The bill would authorize and direct the Comptroller General of the United States to credit the accounts of 18 former disbursing officers of the Civil Works Administration with certain amounts specifically set forth therein, the purpose apparently being to permit the balancing and closing of the accounts of the respective disbursing officers. The bill contains no wording which would identify the outstanding items in the accounts and no other wording which would permit or enable the Comptroller General to give effect to its apparent purpose, or to do otherwise than credit these specific amounts. If all of these amounts were correct—that is, represented the present outstanding balances—the form of the bill would not be objectionable.

However, in the case of five of the accounts (Davis, McCracken, Bates, Wahlers, and Carrico) the amounts stated in the bill exceed the actual present outstanding balances and in the case of three of the accounts (Minnis, McIntosh, and Waters) the amounts are less than the present outstanding balances. With respect to the first of these two groups, the enactment of the bill in its present form would result in overcredits which might eventually entail payments, or the equivalent thereof, to the disbursing officers to the extent of such overcredits and with respect to the second group some differences would still remain outstanding. In the case of one of the accounts (Morris) the account is being reviewed in the General Accounting Office and final settlement may show an outstanding balance at variance with the amount specified in the bill.

Because of the variations in amounts, the bill, in its present form, would in large part fail to accomplish its apparent purpose and would, as hereinbefore indicated, be otherwise objectionable. Under these circumstances, and in accord with the recommendation of the Acting Comptroller General, I am withholding my approval of the bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 7, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message, together with the bill, be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock on Monday next.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I would like to inquire what the program is for next week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As far as the program has been worked out, Monday is District Day, and I have been informed by the chairman of that committee that there will be several bills. Tuesday there will be considered under a rule the so-called naval expansion bill, which will be disposed of on that day or, perhaps, Wednesday. It has not been determined yet whether the committees will be called on Wednesday or not. On Thursday the legislative appropriation bill, I am informed, will be ready for the consideration of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. On Monday there will be nothing except District business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is my understanding.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

PUBLIC DEFENDER, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 8693, to provide for the office of Public Defender for the District of Columbia, be rereferred from the Committee on the District of Columbia to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNLAWFUL USE OF BADGES, ETC.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5982, for protection against unlawful use of the badge, medal, emblem, or other insignia of veterans' organizations incorporated by act of Congress, and providing penalties for the violation thereof, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5982, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out all after "the" down to and including "sold," in line 6, and insert "manufacture or sale in interstate commerce."

Page 1, line 7, after "thereof," insert "or the reproduction thereof for commercial purposes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Chair appoints the following conferees:

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, Mr. WALTER of Pennsylvania, and Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a joint statement by myself and the Honorable ARTHUR D. HEALEY with reference to proposed amendments to the National Labor Relations Act.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole today, and to include a short article on Bonneville.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an article from Standard Statistics in relation to taxes, and to print a short statistical table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an article appearing in yesterday's Washington Daily Times, by Mr. George Rothwell Brown.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SPONGE DISEASES

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, first I compliment the Chairman and the subcommittee on the expeditious way in which they have handled this particular appropriation bill. My colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CANNON] and I had intended to offer an amendment to the Department of the Interior appropriation bill with reference to study and eradication of sponge diseases. A fungus disease has attacked sponges in the waters along the Florida coast which if unchecked will destroy more than a million dollar industry. In order to cooperate with the committee, and in order to get Budget approval, hoping to get it in time for a deficiency appropriation bill, or while this bill is before the Senate, did not offer that as an amendment, but will urge the approval by the Budget of the necessary item.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. As the gentleman knows, I have visited the area to which he refers upon his invitation. I made some investigations for the committee recently at Tarpon Springs and held some public hearings there. I know that the situation is very serious at that point, and I was hopeful that the committee would receive a Budget estimate before this bill was reported for the purpose of helping relieve the situation. I am very sympathetic with the condition to which the gentleman refers and in which he is so deeply concerned. I might add that he is to be congratulated on representing such a splendid, beautiful country and a progressive people. His district is to be congratulated upon having such a wide awake, able Representative in Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I am very grateful for that contribution and I hope the Budget will approve the item in time for inclusion at this session. The sponge industry is an important industry, giving employment to more than 700 people directly in my district. The situation is becoming more acute every day.

The entire city of Tarpon Springs is largely dependent on the products of the sponge fisheries. It competes with no other industry. The disease infesting the sponges in the Bahamas first, then spreading gradually up the coast, has depleted entire areas. Sponge fishermen are specially trained. They and their fathers and grandfathers have followed this occupation. It is the only one they know. The Bureau of Fisheries has asked for $36,650. This is not as much as the relief load of 1 month if these people are thrown out of employment. Our need is urgent. I realize the fact the House is loath to go above the Budget, so I am going to appeal to the Budget, but may have to appeal to you again because an important industry and the livelihood of many of my people are at stake. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ARNOLD, of Illinois, for 8 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. CASE of South Dakota, for 4 days, beginning Tuesday, March 12, to attend a War Department hearing at Pierre, S. Dak.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order heretofore made, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

REFORM IN GOVERNMENT—SINGLE TERM FOR THE PRESIDENT

Mr. MCLEAN. Mr. Speaker, my purpose this afternoon is to direct attention to certain reforms which I firmly believe would greatly benefit our present and future existence.

My first suggestion has to do with economy. We must face the problem of reduction in our expenditures. This can be done in two ways. First, we can stop making contributions to the States for various non-Federal activities. This will have a double purpose. It will tend toward a balanced Budget and it will retard the present-day tendency to control State affairs and individual enterprise by Federal bureaucracy, under threat of loss of Federal appropriations. And secondly, by reducing expenses of the Federal Government. I know much has been said on this subject, but I advance a new viewpoint, which should emphasize the proposition and keep it constantly before us.

We have had so much discussion lately on imports and exports and various other percentages that we certainly must have become statistically minded. Yet, I doubt if anyone will venture to suggest to what extent the functions of Congress have been taken over by the Executive. The percentage would be so large that some of us would hesitate to admit the extent to which it has gone. But we do know that the abuses of authority granted to the Executive and the bureaus and boards under him have brought about the demand for the enactment of the Walter-Logan bill, the purpose of which is to prevent any Government agency from acting as legislator, prosecutor, judge, and executioner. That the people are sensible to this situation is evidenced by the demand for the early enactment of this measure. The sort of legislation which is the order of the present day leaves very little for the attention of Congress. It contemplates the centralization of all legislative power in the Executive. For example, everybody knows, as the President told us recently, that tariff making is a congressional function. But because, as has been alleged, it is such a stupendous undertaking and because Congress is susceptible to sinister and political influences, that function has been delegated to the President. Congress has said it does not even care to be annoyed by approving the work of the Tariff Commission or those gentlemen who compose the various cloistered committees through which the destiny of American industry and agriculture must pass and which are composed of gentlemen who have a passion for anonymity. And there are other illustrations which might be used. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment the forthcoming census has a very peculiar importance, far beyond the inquisitorial features of which the public now complain.

That is its relation to the organization of this House, with so much of the functions of Congress being taken over by others, there is little or no need for such a large membership, and I am of the opinion that, in the interest of economy, the membership of the House of Representatives could be reduced to at least one-half of its present number. I sometimes think it is the purpose to destroy its usefulness completely, and there have been times when I have felt that, in effect, it had been done. But my real purpose is to suggest a reform which I have advocated for some time. As long ago as the first session of the Seventy-third Congress I introduced an amendment to the Constitution providing that the President should be elected for a term of 6 years, and be ineligible to succeed himself, and on June 20, 1937, I addressed the House on the subject, and I showed that it was not a new idea, but had been advocated from time to time, since the adoption of the Constitution. In fact, this element of their deliberations gave the Constitutional Convention much concern, and our present system is the result of a compromise and the precedent set by George Washington and followed by his successors.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have reached the point where Members of Congress admit that in at least one congressional function, Congress is incompetent to perform its stupendous tasks; that it is susceptible to sinister influences, political log rolling, and selfish interest, and we have transferred many of our functions to the Executive. It has never seemed to me that the habits of thought or the motives of men differ any, no matter with what branch of the Government they may be connected. Therefore we should clothe our public servants with such limitations and restrictions as will put them above the temptations which Congress, by its recent vote, admits.

I therefore advocate a single term for the President. It will place him above political considerations, in that he will not be influenced by the desire for reelection or the perpetuation of his party in power; it will place him above those sinister and political influences which must now seek solace and favor at his door.

My amendment suggests a term of 6 years. Some have criticized my effort because they say I can give no valid reason for 6 years, and Mr. Woodrow Wilson said, "To change the term to 6 years would increase the likelihood of its being too long without any assurance that it would, in happy cases, be long enough."

My answer to that is that there are provisions in the Constitution to take care of the first objection, and as to the second, we now have reason to believe that 7 years could be the appropriate length of time for a President to serve, because my reading of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the past few days has almost persuaded even me that in 7 years everything necessary has been accomplished under conditions such as never before existed and which will never again return.

As a matter of historic interest, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] recently reminded the House that the constitution of the Confederacy provided for a single term for its president, with ineligibility to succeed himself. It is interesting to know that the principle was thus recognized.

Mr. Speaker, there are other reasons which can be advanced in support of this change in the length of term of the President, as I have previously pointed out, and I urge the Committee on the Election of the President and Vice President to give early consideration and approval to House Joint Resolution 50, which I have introduced for that purpose. A single 6-year term filled by an Executive who knows that he will not seek reelection will be more productive than two 4-year terms which involve all of the bargaining and compromise frequently resorted to with the hope of reelection. With a single term the health of the President will be conserved, his judgment will be uninfluenced by political consideration of self-interest. There will be no possibility of neglect of duties, such as must necessarily result when a President is involved and actually engaged in a political campaign. The public welfare demands that everything possible be done to relieve the President of physical and mental strain, and place him in a position where none other than consideration of the general good will control his motives and influence his actions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

ADMIRAL RICHARDSON

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am about to discuss an unpleasant situation. I am compelled to ask your indulgence and to urge you to believe that what I have to say and shall say I am constrained by a sense of duty so to do. The situation is one that must be discussed on a plane that is above any that may involve personal relations or friendships.

The rights of American citizens are involved. The future welfare of our country is an issue.

Familiarity with, rather than ignorance of, our fundamental law, and strict adherence to the stringent but wise provisions laid down by our forebears, is necessary if not only our national integrity is to be preserved and conserved but also if our relations with foreign governments are to be based on the precepts conceived by the framers of our republican form of government.

Several weeks ago I was astounded when, in perusing the January 22, 1940, issue of the widely distributed magazine Life, I turned the page to the picture story indexed "New Commander in Chief Takes Over United States Fleet." There a full-page picture of the new CinCus, Admiral Richardson, greeted the reader. Prominently, and objectively, displayed at his left was a sclitary framed photograph; an autographed photograph of King George VI of England. The text accompanying the picture stated: "Framed photo of King George is a memento of last summer's royal visit, during which Admiral Richardson served as naval aide."

Now, it has been pointed out by others that it was grossly indiscreet of the highest ranking officer of our sea forces to display such a memento. Particularly so, coming at a time when the photograph is of one whose country is at death grips with an enemy power; even more strikingly so when our country is endeavoring to maintain a status of strict neutrality in the conflict raging overseas.

However, the clamor which has been raised following the appearance of this picture is the type of occurrence, in a minor degree, which the Founding Fathers of our Government tried to avoid thenceforth when they wrote into our fundamental, basic law—our Constitution—the following words of article I, section 9, clause 8:

> No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States, and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them, shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title, of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state.

The foregoing is explicit, but allow me to direct your attention nevertheless to Farrand's Records of the Federal Convention of 1787 (vol. II, p. 389), wherein we find the following:

> Mr. Pinkney urged the necessity of preserving foreign ministers and other officers of the United States independent of external influence and moved to insert after article VII, section 7, the clause following: "No person holding any office of profit or trust under the United States shall without the consent of the Legislature, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state," which passed nem: contrad.

And volume III, page 327, wherein the following is to be found:

> Governor Randolph. * * * The next restriction is, that no titles of nobility shall be granted by the United States. If we cast our eyes to the manner in which titles of nobility first originated we shall find this restriction founded on the same principles. These sprung from military and civil offices; both are put in the hands of the United States, and therefore I presume it to be an exception to that power.

The last restriction restrains any persons in office from accepting of any present or emolument, title, or office, from any foreign prince or state. It must have been observed before, that though the confederation had restricted Congress from exercising any powers not given them, yet they inserted it, not from any apprehension of usurpation, but for greater security. This restriction is provided to prevent corruption. All men have a natural inherent right of receiving emoluments from anyone, unless they be restrained by the regulations of the community. An accident which actually happened operated in producing the restriction. A box was presented to our Ambassador by the King of our allies.[1] It was thought proper, in order to exclude corruption and foreign influence, to prohibit anyone in office from receiving or holding any emoluments from foreign states. I believe, that if at that moment, when we were in harmony with the King of France, we had supposed that he was corrupting our Ambassador, it might have disturbed that confidence, and diminished that mutual friendship, which contributed to carry us through the war.

Moreover, allusion to this clause was made by Hamilton in No. 84 of the Federalist and undoubtedly by others of his contemporaries.

Dr. Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, tells us that the clause as to the acceptance of any present, emolument, title, or office, from any king or foreign state, "is founded in a just jealousy of foreign influence of every sort," and that "the provision is highly important, as it puts it out of the power of any officer of the Government to wear borrowed honors, which shall enhance his supposed importance abroad by a titular dignity at home."

Mr. Justice White, speaking in the case of Downes v. Bidwell (182 U. S. at 289), states:

It is impossible to conceive that where conditions are brought about to which any particular provision of the Constitution applies, its controlling influence may be frustrated by the action of any or all of the departments of the Government. Those departments, when discharging, within the limits of their constitutional power, the duties which rest on them, may, of course, deal with the subjects committed to them in such a way as to cause the matter dealt with to come under the control of provisions of the Constitution which may not have been previously applicable.

Back down through the years the advice of the Attorney General, to all of the many who have sought his legal opinion, has been that the language of the clause to which reference is made lends itself to no ambiguous construction.

As illustrative of the type of opinion given by the Attorney General advising the heads of departments in relation to their official duties, let me direct your attention to volume 24, page 116, and the following, of the Opinions of the Attorneys General, which is as follows:

GIFTS FROM FOREIGN PRINCE—OFFICER—CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

The provision of article I, section 9, clause 9, of the Constitution, which forbids the acceptance, without the consent of Congress, by any person holding any office of profit or trust under the United States, of any "present, emolument, office, or title, of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state," applies as well to a titular prince as to a reigning one; and a simple remembrance of courtesy, even if merely a photograph, falls under the inclusion of "any present of any kind whatever."

This prohibition expressly relates to official persons and does not extend, under the circumstances outlined, to a department of the Government or to governmental institutions.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
September 8, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to respond to your note of August 27, submitting for my consideration a copy of a note from the German Embassy, which communicates a list of presents bestowed by Prince Henry of Prussia on the occasion of his recent visit to this country. You ask my opinion on the question whether the constitutional provision which forbids the acceptance, without the consent of Congress, of any "present, emolument, office, or title, of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state," may be construed as applying only to a reigning prince, in which case the authority of Congress for the delivery of these presents would not be required. The presents consist of portraits given to the Navy Department, the Military Academy, and the Naval Academy, and of a photograph to each of several military and civil officers of the United States. The provision of the Constitution is as follows:

"No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no person holding any office of profit or trust under them, shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title, of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state." (Art. I, sec. 9, clause 9.)

It is evident from the brief comments on this provision, and the established practice in our diplomatic intercourse (2 Story on the Constitution, 4th edition, pp. 216, 217; 1 Wharton's International Law Digest, sec. 110, p. 757), that its language has been viewed as particularly directed against every kind of influence by foreign governments upon officers of the United States, based on our historic policies as a nation. Although it is manifest that the particular collocation of words in the Constitution, like the words "any foreign prince or state" in the neutrality statutes, refers chiefly to a foreign government and its regular executive (cf. act January 31, 1881; 21 Stat. 604), it would not, in my judgment, be sound to hold that a titular prince, even if not a reigning potentate, is not included in the constitutional prohibition. For the phrase of the provision is "any king, prince, or foreign state," and a titular prince, although not reigning, might have the function of bestowing an office or title of nobility or decoration, which would clearly fall under the prohibition. As this remark suggests generally the character of the gift, whether a present or some title of honor (although you do not suggest this point), it must be observed that even a simple remembrance of courtesy, which from motives of delicacy recognizes our policy, like the photographs in this case, falls under the inclusion of "any present * * * of any kind whatever." The act of 1881, supra, which, it is true, refers only to a foreign government uses the words "any present, decoration, or other thing."

But as the constitutional prohibition expressly and exclusively relates to official persons, it could not properly be extended, under the circumstances at all events, in my judgment, to a department of the Government and to governmental institutions.

I have the honor to answer your question in the negative.

Very respectfully,

HENRY M. HOYT,
Acting Attorney General.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

Relating specifically to this very matter is section 110 of volume I of Wharton's International Law Digest, at pages 757–759, which is as follows:

XXXIV. PRESENTS NOT ALLOWABLE

In the session of 1798 a resolution passed the Senate authorizing Mr. Thomas Pinckney to receive certain presents tendered him by the courts of Madrid and London, respectively, on the termination of his missions to those places. The resolution was rejected in the House, though a resolution was subsequently unanimously adopted stating that ground of this rejection was public policy, and disclaiming any personal reference to Mr. Pinckney. (See 5 Hildreth, U. S. 237.)

"A custom prevails among the European sovereigns, upon the conclusion of treaties, of bestowing presents of jewelry or other articles of pecuniary value upon the minister of the power with which they were negotiated. The same usage is repeated upon the minister's taking leave at the termination of his mission. In Great Britain it is usual to offer the minister, at his option, a sum of money, graduated according to his rank, or a gold box or other trinket of equal value. The acceptance of such presents by ministers of the United States is expressly forbidden by the Constitution, and even if it were not, while the United States has not adopted the custom of making such presents to the diplomatic agents of foreign powers, it can scarcely be consistent with the delicacy and reciprocity of intercourse between them for the ministers of the United States to receive such favors from foreign princes as the ministers of those powers never can receive from this Government in return. The usage, exceptionable in itself, can be tolerated only by its reciprocity. It is expected by the President that every offer of such present which may in future be made to any public minister or other officer of this Government abroad, will be respectfully but decisively declined." (Mr. J. Q. Adams, Secretary of State, to Mr. Rush, Minister at London, November 6, 1817, Manuscripts Institute of Great Britain; H. Doc. No. 302, 23d Cong., 1st sess.)

"I am directed by the President to instruct the ministers, consuls, and other diplomatic commercial agents of the United States that it is required of them that in future they will not, unless the consent of Congress shall have been previously obtained, accept, under any circumstances, presents of any kind whatever from any king, prince, or foreign state." (Mr. McLane, Secretary of State, circular, January 6, 1834. H. Doc. No. 302, 23d Cong., 1st sess.)

This document contains a report (March 4, 1834) from Mr. Archer, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in which it is stated that "the Government of the United States is the only one known to lay its agents employed in foreign intercourse under strict interdiction as regards the acceptance of presents in any form. This interdiction being in the Constitution could derive no increase of notoriety more than authority from instructions to our agents abroad."

The report goes on to say that the acceptance of presents has, notwithstanding, taken place in cases when, in oriental countries, such acceptance is a matter of invariable usage, and when "refusal of acceptance would furnish occasion for resentment, compromising oftentimes the efficacy of the agency, or it might be even the official immunities or personal security of the agent." The presents in such cases, when not perishable, have been deposited in the State Department, or, when not susceptible of such deposit (as with horses), sold, and the proceeds sent to the Treasury.

[1] Dr. Franklin is the person alluded to by Randolph. In the winter of 1856, in Philadelphia, under the roof of a venerable granddaughter of Dr. Franklin, I saw the beautiful portrait of Louis XVI, snuff-box size, presented by that King to the doctor. As the portrait is exactly such as is contained in the snuffboxes presented by crowned heads, one of which I have seen, it is probable this portrait of Louis was originally attached to the box in question, which has in the lapse of years been lost or given away by Dr. Franklin. H. B. Grigsby, History of the Virginia Federal Convention of 1788 (Virginia Historical Society Collections, vols. 9–10), page 264.

On the subject of accepting office or honors from a foreign country, we have the following:

"While recognizing to the fullest extent the eminent service of Captain Martinez, of the Chilean ship of war Meteor, in rescuing the survivors of the crew of the United States merchant ship Manchester, under circumstances of extreme distress, the uniform practice of this Government forbids the presentation to that officer, in its own name, of any tangible token of this recognition. As all officers of the United States are forbidden to receive such rewards from foreign governments for actions or services of striking merit, it is deemed delicate not to confer obligations in this respect upon foreign officers, which their governments could not, under similar circumstances, be permitted to reciprocate.

"In the mercantile marine no such difficulty exists, and Congress, as you are aware, has placed a liberal fund at the disposal of the President for the purpose of enabling him to offer suitable testimonials to those brave men who so often imperil their own lives in behalf of others" (Mr. Marcy, Secretary of State, to Mr. Starkweather, September 1, 1855. MSS. Inst., Chili).

"The Constitution of the United States provides that no person holding any office of profit or trust under the United States shall without the consent of Congress accept of any office or title of any kind whatever from any king, prince, or foreign state. The terms of this provision of the Constitution of the United States neither prevent nor authorize persons who may hold office under any one of the States from accepting an appointment under a foreign government" (Mr. Hale, Assistant Secretary of State, to Mr. Rosenberg, May 22, 1872. MSS. Dom. Let.).

"Diplomatic officers are forbidden from asking or accepting, for themselves or other persons, any presents, emolument, pecuniary favor, office, or title of any kind from any foreign government. It not unfrequently happens that diplomatic officers are tendered presents, orders, or other testimonials in acknowledgment of services rendered to foreign states or their subjects. These cannot be accepted without previous authority of Congress.

"It is thought more consonant with the character of the diplomatic representation of the United States abroad that every offer of such presents should be respectfully, but decisively, declined. This having been for several years a standing instruction to all our agents abroad, the rule is, probably, so well known as to prevent the offer of such presents in future; but it is deemed proper to call the attention of officers to the subject and to observe that should there be reason to anticipate such an offer, informal notice, given in the proper quarter, of the prohibition against accepting a direct tender thereof would avoid the apparent ungraciousness of declining a courtesy" (printed Pers. Inst., Dip. Agents, 1885).

As to accepting and giving presents, see Mr. Webster, Secretary of State, to Mr. Cushing, May 8, 1843, quoted supra, section 67.

See as to presents to the President of the United States, Senate report, Executive Document No. 23, Thirty-seventh Congress, second session.

As to presents offered to George P. Marsh, arbitrator between Italy and Switzerland on a question of boundary by those Governments, see Senate Miscellaneous Document 16, Forty-fourth Congress, first session.

As to report in favor of Mr. J. R. Hawley's acceptance of decorations from the Governments of the Netherlands and of Japan, July 15, 1882, see House Report 1652, Forty-seventh Congress, first session.

Now, I have been advised by the Justice Department that no opinion on this particular provision of the Constitution has been rendered since 28 Opinions of Attorneys General, page 598, 1911; certainly none during the past 2 years.

Moreover, a search fails to disclose any bill having been introduced the objective of which would be to secure the necessary consent of the Congress for any gifts made or to be made incident to the visit of King George to this country last year.

Although I deprecate the lack of propriety evidenced by the picture appearing in Life, I do wish to pay my respects to Admiral Richardson's forthrightness, his fearlessness, honesty, and integrity.

I wired him yesterday to the following effect:

In re January 22, 1940, issue of Life magazine, pages 24 and 25, on page 25 of which text reads, "Framed photo of King George is a memento of last summer's royal visit," important that you advise me today by wire the occasion, date, and circumstances attending presentation of photo to you by King George or his representative.

And immediately from him received the following reply:

Photograph King George was given me at Hyde Park, N. Y., by the King in person on 11th June 1939, at the conclusion of his visit to the United States, during which I was detailed by the Navy Department, at the request of the State Department, to serve as naval aide. The photograph in Life was taken while I was on shore in my apartment, occupied by my family in Long Beach, Calif.

Some of my more Anglophobic correspondents have insisted that I rise to a question of the privilege of the House, or to that of personal privilege; some have urged that I undertake to initiate impeachment proceedings. As to the first two propositions, parliamentary rules preclude me, were I so inclined. As to the last suggestion, there is neither occasion nor does necessity impel me to unduly magnify the incident.

As is politely suggested above:

It is deemed proper to call the attention of officers to the subject, and to observe that should there be reason to anticipate such an offer, informal notice, given in the proper quarter, of the prohibition against accepting a direct tender thereof would avoid the apparent ungraciousness of declining a courtesy.

May I say that the King should have been advised that he should not place the Commander in Chief in the embarrassing position of being the recipient from his hands of the memento or token involved, or of having to decline to accept the same; moreover, Admiral Richardson should not have accepted it, despite any embarrassment occasioned by a declaration on his part.

It would seem to me that this entire incident might have been avoided had not somebody bungled, and bungled badly.

SENATE

FRIDAY, MARCH 8, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord and Heavenly Father, we come to Thee as humble penitents seeking the comfort of the divine pledge of the forgiveness of our sins. Cleanse Thou our hearts from all envy, hatred, and malice, that in our thoughts, our words, and our actions we may show to each other only the spirit of courtesy and kindness as we wrestle with the problems that are pressing for solution to the advancement of Thy glory, the safety, honor, and welfare of Thy people.

Do Thou clarify our vision, gird us for our toil, direct our minds and wills, and grant that we may never lose our self-respect nor forfeit the confidence of those who trust us now because we trust in Thee. We ask it in the name of Him who came to show mankind the true and living way—Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] had the floor and expressed a desire to continue his remarks, which were then unfinished. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky, and will then yield to other Senators who may desire the floor briefly.

GREETING TO ARCHDUKES OTTO AND FELIX, OF AUSTRIA

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, we all realize, I am sure, how the fate of empires, of nations, and of families is interwoven in the history of mankind throughout the ages. There is no more tragic or outstanding example of this change in the fate of nations and families, high and low, than is the record of Austria and the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

One of the oldest and most distinguished reigning families of Europe was the House of Hapsburg. We are all familiar with what happened to the Austro-Hungarian Empire as a result of the World War, and with what has occurred in Austria in more recent years.

There is now visiting in the United States Archduke Otto, son of the last Emperor of the Austro-Hungarian Empire; and with him is his brother Felix. They are studying American principles of democracy in order that they may utilize, for the benefit of other peoples, the knowledge and information which they may obtain from our experience and our institutions.

These young men are very affable and agreeable and democratic in their manner. They are honoring us today by visiting the Senate, and they are now seated in the Vice President's box in the family gallery. I suggest, as a courtesy to these young men, that we rise and greet them.

(Thereupon the Senate rose, and the archdukes bowed their acknowledgments.)

FOREIGN PROPAGANDA

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, at the extraordinary session of Congress I submitted a resolution providing for the setting up of a committee for the purpose of studying propaganda from any source whatever for the purpose of influencing the neutral position of the United States. That resolution was referred at the extraordinary session of the Congress to the Committee on Foreign Relations and has been there since. It is my purpose at the first opportunity to press for action in that committee on the resolution. The purpose of the resolution was to learn now, instead of 20 years later, the efforts which are being put forward by the various belligerents for the purpose of obtaining favors from us, or dragging us into the war on their side of the fence, or keeping us out of war, as the case may be. In the case of the last war we waited for 20 years to learn the extent and methods of the propaganda by which we had been dragged into the war.

We learned by the publications of Sir Gilbert Parker, and more lately and more completely by the publication of the book of Professor Peterson, Propaganda for War, something of the organized effort which was made during the last war, particularly on the part of the British, in an attempt to drag us into the war. We learned from Sir Gilbert Parker, the head of the British propaganda bureau, that one of the most effective methods he pursued for the purpose of getting us into the last war was propaganda put out through the schools and colleges of the United States by contacting a segment of college professors and, in some cases, putting them on the pay roll. We also know of the effort in the direction of propaganda which was made by the British Government through paying the expenses of a large number of magazine proprietors in one case, and of newspaper publishers in another case, for extensive tours of Europe for the purpose of absorbing food, drink, and propaganda and passing the latter on to our people on their return.

In connection with that subject, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an article appearing in the New York Times of yesterday, March 7, setting forth a very insidious method of propaganda which apparently is already under way by the British by the device of undertaking to employ abroad a large number of American college professors, undoubtedly at liberal salaries, under a Government subsidy, ostensibly with a view to preparing British citizens for good service after the war, but actually for the purpose of sympathetic propaganda in this country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The article is as follows:

BRITISH MAY ASK AMERICANS' AID TO PREPARE SOLDIERS FOR CIVIL LIFE—EDUCATORS ENLISTED IN VAST SCHEME TO KEEP MEN'S MINDS ALIVE, STIMULATE CULTURAL INTERESTS, AND PROVIDE OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING

(By W. F. Leysmith)

LONDON, March 6.—American professors may soon be invited here to aid the British educational authorities in keeping the minds of men and women in the fighting services alive, retaining their interest in cultural matters, and teaching them to think.

The Pilgrim Trust has given £500 to the Central Advisory Council for Adult Education in His Majesty's Forces, the organization headed by Sir Walter Moberly, noted educator, that is cooperating with the Army, Navy, and Air Force in planning a vast scheme of tutorship eventually to extend to areas close behind the fighting fronts.

For the time being the educational corps of the three fighting services are reserving for themselves all technical and occupational training, the latter being training to fit men for civilian work after the war. Organization of lectures to enable men of the armed forces to continue their "cultural learning" as in civilian life is in the hands of Dr. Basil Yeaxlee, of Oxford, a great worker for education in the last war, and now secretary of the Central Advisory Council.

LARGE SUBSIDY IS EXPECTED

This voluntary council is composed of representatives of all British universities and adult educational bodies, such as the Workers' Educational Association and the Board of Education. Parliament is expected to vote soon a considerable sum to meet the increased cost of the fighting services' educational corps and the work of the Central Advisory Council.

The whole scheme is being devised on a far vaster scale than in the World War when, for the first 3 years or more, the education of troops was left to voluntary workers, chiefly under the organization of the Young Men's Christian Association. In fact, Dr. Yeaxlee today is directing his operations from the Y. M. C. A.'s London headquarters. He described how in the evenings troops and often many officers were crowding into Y. M. C. A. camp huts and those of the church army whenever his lectures were announced.

While the subjects of lectures are under strict control of commanding officers, Dr. Yeaxlee declares, there is no repression of ideas nor any curb on free discussion of any topic. At the same time care is taken that there shall be no propaganda for any "ism" of one extreme or the other.

The troops, as far as possible, choose their own subjects. Their request is passed by commanding officer to one or any other of 20 regional committees under Dr. Yeaxlee's control, and a lecturer is promptly found to fit the subject. For instance, a camp in the country holding a large number of searchlight operators, drawn likely enough from drab cities, sent request for a lecturer on astronomy to understand the skies the men gazed at nightly.

KNOWLEDGE OF MUSIC SOUGHT

Others have wanted to know all about Napoleon's Italian campaign or life in the Roman Army. There has been a real thirst for knowledge of good music, which many men, whiling away the hours of boredom, are now hearing over the radio for the first time. Other popular lecturers have been those on the working of democracy, how the parliamentary system works, the organization of the French Army, and illustration of the press.

As the generation born after the World War has grown up in a world talking peace, Dr. Yeaxlee has found it necessary to enlist many lecturers to explain why Europe is now at war. When these young fellows just called to the colors were at school they were taught about the League of Nations and world disarmament. After that they entered trades or professions; and, apart from an occasional glance at the headlines, many took no interest in world politics. Many, therefore, have no real knowledge of the background of the present war, and the council is doing its best to give this cross section of the Nation's youth the essential historical facts and to help them understand other nations.

"You must endeavor to explain to young troops what the American Constitution is before talking about what America does," is one of Dr. Yeaxlee's dicta.

With the possible exception of the air forces, which in recent years have built up one of the finest technical training systems in the country, the service educational corps have been rather set back since the outbreak of the war, as their comparatively small staffs have been commandeered for what ministerial chiefs held to be more urgent work, and are still on peacetime allocation. The Navy presents great educational difficulties, since few men are at shore depots for any length of time. The army in France at the moment has little spare time for education.

The Canadian contingent in Britain has built up its own organization for fitting troops to be good citizens after the war.

BERTRAND RUSSELL

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in pursuance of the remarks made by the able senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] in reference to propagandists in this country, I desire to say that several days ago I clipped from one of the New York newspapers an article headed "Bishop Hits College for Hiring Russell." The article refers to a gentleman by the name of Bertrand Russell who is today professor of philosophy at one of the universities in California. The bishop is opposing the affiliation of Mr. Russell as a professor of philsophy in the College of the City of New York.

Furthermore, I found in a newspaper an article headed "Bertrand Russell Reenters Country," which reads:

SAN DIEGO.—Bertrand Russell, British educator, who will occupy the chair of philosophy at University of California at Los Angeles, has formally reentered the United States through the Tia Juana port of entry and is entitled to remain indefinitely on a permanent residence basis. In remaining in the United States and accepting employment at the university, he does not obligate himself to become an American citizen—

And, from what the bishop says about Mr. Russell, I do not think we want him as an American citizen—but qualifies to apply for citizenship at a later date.

Before leaving Los Angeles for the Mexican town last week, Russell was quoted as saying that "I don't intend to renounce my allegiance to King George VI, but I would like very much to avail myself of the offer of the chair of philosophy made me by the university officials."

And the editors of the newspaper, in the clipping before me, have in italics at the bottom:

Well, what do you think of that? He eats our bread, draws our money, teaches our students, and says "to hell with the United States. I'm a subject of King George the VI and am going to remain so." Some gall!

I ask that the first article to which I referred be printed as a portion of my remarks, in addition to the one I have just read.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of March 1, 1940]

BISHOP HITS COLLEGE FOR HIRING RUSSELL

NEW YORK, March 1.—The College of the City of New York defended its appointment of Bertrand Russell as professor of philosophy today against the attack of Episcopal Bishop William T. Manning, who had described the British mathematician and philosopher as a "propagandist against religion and morality."

Dr. Nelson P. Mead, acting college president, said Mr. Russell was hired to teach mathematics, not morality and religion.

TEACHING IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. Russell is now teaching at the University of California at Los Angeles. His appointment here is not effective until 1941. His contributions to mathematics and philosophy are regarded as more important than his publicized views on marriage and morality.

* * * * * * *

Bishop Manning attacked the appointment in letters to New York newspapers. He asked, "What is to be said of colleges and universities which hold up before our youth as a reputable teacher of philosophy and as an example of light and learning a man who is a recognized propagandist against both religion and morality, and who specifically defends adultery?"

THE LATE EDWIN MARKHAM

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the passing of Edwin Markham, whom it was my good fortune to know, brings on a new age. The one through which he lived his 87 years hung heavily on the accent of mechanized brutality and outrageous neglect of those who toil. Markham sensed all of these social needs, and rose to champion the cause of one disheartened groups after another. His famous poem The Man With the Hoe has doubtless been repeated more frequently than any other in the meeting places of those striving for a better life.

The hungry hearts of those of us who long for peace found in him a truly noble voice. Nevertheless, he was not content, for he longed to write five or six stanzas that would disperse the armies of the world. He said:

If I had the time, the youth, the strength to write one great poem, it would be against war. If I could have one wish fulfilled, it would be for a poem that would expose the mockery, the futility, the sterility of war in such a way as to warn every man who loves the world and humanity to watch vigilantly against war.

Mr. President, the American people are proud of Edwin Markham, our great poet, whose heart never ceased to beat in deep compassion for those who toil, for the heart-weary and the oppressed. We are proud that the aged poet recently said that when death overtook him it would not find a querulous old man, but a young fellow intrigued with the greatest adventure of all.

Mr. President, Edwin Markham has gone to explore the mysteries of the dead, even as he said. He has gone to chart out a higher level of living, a nobler plane on which to dwell. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a poem that has frequently graced its pages, The Man With the Hoe, the never-to-be-forgotten lines of a great soul, Edwin Markham.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The poem is as follows:

THE MAN WITH THE HOE

Bowed by the weight of centuries he leans
Upon his hoe and gazes upon the ground,
The emptiness of ages in his face,
And on his back the burden of the world.
Who made him dead to rapture and despair,
A thing that grieves not and that never hopes,
Stolid and stunned, a brother to the ox?
Who loosened and let down this brutal jaw?
Whose was the hand that slanted back this brow?
Whose breath blew out the light within this brain?

Is this the thing the Lord God made and gave
To have dominion over sea and land;
To trace the stars and search the heavens for power;
To feel the passion of Eternity?
Is this the dream He dreamed who shaped the suns
And marked their ways upon the ancient deep?
Down all the stretch of Hell to its last gulf
There is no shape more terrible than this—
More tongued with censure of the world's blind greed—
More filled with signs and portents for the soul—
More fraught with menace to the universe.

What gulfs between him and the seraphim!
Slave of the wheel of labor, what to him
Are Plato and the swing of Pleiades?
What the long reaches of the peaks of song,
The rift of dawn, the reddening of the rose?
Through this dread shape the suffering ages look;
Time's tragedy is in that aching stoop;
Through this dread shape humanity betrayed,
Plundered, profaned, and disinherited,
Cries protest to the Judges of the World,
A protest that is also prophecy.

O masters, lords, and rulers in all lands,
Is this the handiwork you give to God,
This monstrous thing distorted and soul-quenched?
How will you ever straighten up this shape;
Touch it again with immortality;
Give back the upward looking and the light;
Rebuild in it the music and the dream;
Make right the immemorial infamies,
Perfidious wrongs, immedicable woes?

O masters, lords, and rulers in all lands,
How will the Future reckon with this Man?
How answer his brute question in that hour
When whirlwinds of rebellion shake the world?
How will it be with kingdoms and with kings—
With those who shaped him to the thing he is—
When this dumb Terror shall reply to God,
After the silence of the centuries?

—EDWIN MARKHAM.

PEARL RIVER BRIDGE, MISSISSIPPI

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3209, and ask for its passage at this time, because it is an emergency matter. The highway department of my State is being delayed in the construction of a bridge on a very important highway.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated by the clerk.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 3209) granting the consent of Congress to the Mississippi Highway Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Pearl River in the State of Mississippi.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, if granting the request of the Senator from Mississippi would displace the pending business I should be compelled to object.

Mr. BILBO. That is not the purpose. I am asking unanimous consent for the consideration and passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consideration of this bill by unanimous consent would not displace the unfinished business. The unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside pending action on the bill referred to by the Senator from Mississippi, and the regular order may be called for at any time.

Mr. HATCH. With that understanding, I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill S. 3209, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Mississippi", to insert "State", and in line 10, after "1906", to insert "and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Mississippi State Highway Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Pearl River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Carthage, Leake County, Miss., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the Mississippi State Highway Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Pearl River at or near Carthage, in the State of Mississippi."

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING ASSISTANT SURGEONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2284) to amend the act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat. 369), so as to authorize the President to appoint 100 acting assistant surgeons for temporary service, which was, on page 1, line 8, to strike out all after "30 Stat. 380)", down to and including "surgeons", in line 2 of page 2.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

FARM PROGRAM OF THOMAS E. DEWEY

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, in yesterday afternoon's Washington Daily News appeared an article giving the farm program of Tom Dewey. I would say facetiously that it is bald-faced plagarism.

His first point would be to "Establish a fair parity between agricultural prices and industrial prices."

Second, "Provide Government crop loans at reasonable levels."

Third, "Adopt a direct program of soil conservation."

Fourth, "Convert submarginal land to more economic uses."

Fifth, "Extend the farm cooperative movement."

Sixth, "Continue and extend the program for marketing agreements."

Seventh, "Preserve the American market for American agriculture."

Eighth, "Broaden research in the use of agricultural products."

Mr. President, at one time there was an old lady who was hard of hearing, and someone tried to introduce to her Mr. Throttlebottom. She said, "Heh?" The man introducing his friend said, "Mr. Throttlebottom." She said, "Heh?" He said, "Mr. Throttlebottom." She said, "I can't understand. It sounds just like he says 'Mr. Throttlebottom.'" [Laughter.] As a matter of fact, he did say "Throttlebottom."

For 7 years we have had in operation the program proposed by Mr. Dewey, and now, as though it were brand new, not only this candidate, but some other candidates, come forward with this as a farm program, offering it to the farmers as though it were a brand new, original proposal.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5982) for the protection against unlawful use of the badge, medal, emblem, or other insignia of veterans' organizations incorporated by act of Congress, and providing penalties for the violations thereof; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, Mr. WALTER, and Mr. GWYNNE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8745) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF ANTIPERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3046) to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, at the conclusion of the session yesterday I was addressing myself to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], by which he proposed that the Senate not agree to the committee amendment to the pending bill, which would be section 3 of the pending bill.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I should like to point out to the Senator that my amendment provides for the striking out of certain language. I was advised by the Chair yesterday that the effect would probably be the same if we voted on the question of the committee amendment. I am now advised that my amendment is correct insofar as the carrying out of my intention is concerned, because a vote disagreeing to the committee amendment would restore the language stricken out by the committee. Therefore I am very hopeful that the Chair will agree that my amendment is in proper order and that we may have a vote on the amendment as drafted. I shall offer a proposed slight change in the amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the issue presented, then, is whether or not the Senate shall agree to including section 3 of the bill as it now appears before the Senate. I am opposed to the amendment to section 12 of the law as it appears in the bill, and I stated yesterday some of the reasons which moved me to that conclusion.

It will be remembered by all, of course, that we already have on the statute books the original Hatch law, which makes it a criminal offense for those who are employed by and receiving their remuneration from the Federal Government to coerce, intimidate, threaten, or attempt to intimidate, threaten, or coerce any other person for the purpose of interfering with the right of such person to vote in an election at which certain defined Federal officials are to be elected.

The act also makes it unlawful for any person employed by the Federal Government to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the election of certain named Federal officials.

It also makes it unlawful for any person directly or indirectly to promise any employment in any way to any person as a consideration for any political activity of such person in any election.

The act also makes it unlawful for any person to deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive, by any means, any person of any employment on account of race, creed, color, or any political activity in support of or in opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

Likewise the act makes it unlawful for any person to solicit or to receive in any manner funds or subscriptions for any political purpose from any person known by him to be entitled to or receiving compensation, employment, or other benefits provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes.

The act makes it unlawful for any person for political purposes to disclose, or to aid or assist in disclosing, any list or names of persons receiving Federal compensation so that they may be approached for the purpose of getting political contributions.

Mr. President, those prohibitions, salutary provisions of the Hatch law, are now upon the statute books of this country. Not only that, but by the Hatch law, now on the statute books, any Federal employee is forbidden from taking any part in any election; not only a Federal election, but a State election or a local election in any State.

I am not disposed to oppose even that provision of the existing Hatch law, because obviously the Federal Government has the unqualified power and the unqualified right to limit the activities of its own employees, and, while it may go to an extent which is not called for by circumstances, it does not raise the same question which is raised by the amendment before the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. Did the Senator say that he construed the law to prohibit or prevent those affected by the act from taking part in local elections?

Mr. PEPPER. I said that the original Hatch law, which is now on the statute books, goes so far as to prohibit Federal employees from taking any part in any election, Federal or local.

Mr. STEWART. But with respect to the pending amendment to section 12 of the Hatch Act, does the Senator construe that to mean that State, county, and municipal employees cannot take part in local elections, or are they merely restricted from activities in the election of Senators, Representatives, and other national officials, so to speak?

Mr. PEPPER. The question of the able Senator from Tennessee brings me to the specific point in issue here. The statute which is now proposed by the able Senator from New Mexico goes immeasurably further than the Hatch law which is now upon the statute books of this country. It goes so far as to contain this provision, against which I primarily direct my remarks:

No such officer or employee—

Which means an officer or employee of any State or political subdivision of a State—

No such officer or employee shall take any part in political management or in political campaigns.

Mr. President, that is the vice of the provisions.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator realizes, of course, that he is not stating the full provision; they must be engaged in an activity or function to which the Federal Government contributes funds.

Mr. PEPPER. Of course; I thought that was generally understood. The law provides that when any State officer or any State employee receives any part of his or her compensation from the Federal Government, or works for an agency in the State which receives any contribution from the Federal Government, in that case no such State official or State employee can participate in any political campaign, however local it may happen to be.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The bill now before the Senate goes further than that. It provides that no official or employee of any State shall take part in a State election if he is employed in a department which is financed in whole or in part by Federal loans or grants, not that he has to receive part of his salary from them.

Mr. PEPPER. That was included in my statement, although I thank the able Senator from Indiana for his suggestion.

Mr. President, I did not deny that the Federal Congress lacked the power to pass that kind of a law, I did not question the jurisdiction of the Federal Government to prescribe those limitations upon the activities of those who are even partially the beneficiaries of Federal funds, even though indirectly so, but I did strongly question the policy of the Federal Government's laying down any such precedent for the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, I presume we all know that there seems to be some inherent tendency in the minds and hearts of human beings to abuse a power which may be possessed by them. It is regrettable that a tendency of that character exists in the human attitude; but our whole history and our whole experience teaches us that when a power admittedly exists we have to be extremely cautious against its abuse by human beings.

I have before me a vivid illustration of what I say. The United States Government, of course, has not only the power but the duty to enforce Federal law and to punish the violation of Federal law. For that purpose it is perfectly permissible, it is no doubt desirable, for the Federal Government to send a representative from the Department of Justice to the various parts of the United States where investigation of violations of Federal law may be proper, and where prosecution for Federal offenses is the duty of the Department of Justice. Yet, Mr. President, a little while ago a representative of the Department of Justice, a Mr. Rogge, went from the Department of Justice in Washington down into a sovereign State of the American Union, an honorable State of the American Government, whose history and illustrious service to the country deserve that it have always the highest esteem from the citizenry of this great Nation of ours. Mr. Rogge went down to the State of Louisiana, ostensibly for the purpose of enforcing Federal law and investigating violations thereof. And did Mr. Rogge in his zeal confine himself to that activity? I have before me certain Louisiana newspapers, one of date December 24, 1939, the Sunday Item-Tribune, published in New Orleans, which carries at the top of the newspaper in headlines 2 inches high the words:

United States to probe election.

The United States Government is to probe an election of local officials in Louisiana. At this time in American history, at this period in world history, do we admit to the world that democracy in America has so broken down that sovereign States cannot conduct their own elections?

Mr. President, I proclaim it as the privilege of a State in a democratic Government even to have bad government, if its people want it to be bad, and it is none of the Federal Government's business what kind of local officials are elected in Louisiana, or in any other sovereign State. If Mr. Rogge is so disatisfied with the democratic experiment in Louisiana that he thinks that the paternalism of the Federal Government alone can make democracy in Louisiana work in local matters, I am sorry that he occupies the political position he does in the American Government.

Mr. President, in the issue of January 4, 1940, of the New Orleans States here is another big headline:

Warns vote thieves here.

Then a subheadline:

Vote thieves warned by Rogge on primary.

In a what? In a United States election? The election of a United States Senator was not involved in that election; nor was any Representative involved in that election. They were electing a Governor. That is what it was all about; and so the Department of Justice sends this gallant knight, Mr. Rogge, down there to propitiate the demands of the United States Government that democracy operate according to his idea in the sovereign State of Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am curious to know how it happened that the provisions of the original Hatch bill, which was passed last year, did not take care of Mr. Rogge's activities.

Mr. PEPPER. I will say to the able Senator from Colorado that I think he has made a very pertinent inquiry.

In another issue on January 13 of the Times-Picayune, published in New Orleans, I find the following headline:

"United States probe of ballot fraud to cover poll Tuesday," says Rogge.

Here is a subheadline:

"New" Federal inquisitorial body will resume quiz Monday.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator referred to the election in Louisiana. Of course, generally speaking, the Senator is right in referring to it as an election, but it was really more in the nature of an argument among the Democrats of Louisiana, was it not?

Mr. PEPPER. It was not even a national election. It was a party primary merely to name nominees, and was not, of course, a general election.

Mr. MILLER. It was a primary election in Louisiana.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I think the record should be kept clear on that point because it also emphasizes the point the Senator is making.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the able Senator from Arkansas for calling attention to the fact that it was a primary and not a general election.

Mr. President, in the issue of January 15 of the New Orleans States I find the following huge headline:

Rogge warns vote crooks United States to act.

United States to act on what? Vote frauds in a State primary. Vote frauds in a State primary denounced by a United States Department of Justice representative cracking the whip over local authorities and perhaps local wrongdoers, threatening them with Federal prosecution.

Mr. President, that is not all. Again in the February 20 issue of the New Orleans States I find the following headline:

United States warning reassures many.

Obviously, therefore, the participation of Mr. Rogge in the Louisiana primary, while it has struck fear into the hearts of many, has likewise reassured many, according to which side they were on in the local election.

In addition to that, in the February 7 issue of the New Orleans States appears another big headline 2 inches high:

United States pushes probes.

Further attesting the diligence of Mr. Rogge in the Louisiana election.

All the newspapers to which I refer were published in 1940, except the one first referred to, of date December 24, 1939. In the New Orleans States, published at New Orleans February 14, 1940, appeared the following huge headline:

Rogge back, pushes vote fraud probes. New jury to stay in; sift all election violations.

I may say that the second primary was to be February 20, 1940, and Senators can imagine the impression that must have been created in the local primary by having all these big headlines, and the gallant rush of this modern political knight, Mr. Rogge, back to New Orleans for the purpose of safeguarding his conception of proper democratic government.

Then in the issue of February 15 of the New Orleans Item is another headline:

United States indicts in primary.

Then again the New Orleans Times-Picayune of February 15 has substantially the same headline and statement.

In the February 22 issue of the New Orleans States appears the following headline:

Rogge pushes all probes.

Then in a subheadline:

Roggs to push probe of graft, election; on way back here.

Then in the issue of February 14 of the New Orleans Item appears this big headline:

Rogge turns on heat.

That refers to a Federal official at a time when a second primary to elect a Governor of Louisiana was 5 days away. At least the attitude of Mr. Rogge must have been such as to give some justification for these newspaper headlines that appear in these newspapers to which I referred:

Rogge turns on heat.

What kind of heat, Senators? To see to it that a particular person was elected Governor in Louisiana. Is the United States Government to tell the people of Louisiana who their Governor is to be and ought to be? Is the United States Government to turn out Longism? Is that a proper sphere and scope of Federal activity?

In the issue of the Times-Picayune of February 20, the headline is:

United States to enforce honesty at polls, Rogge warns on eve of election.

That was on the day of the election. The Times-Picayune is a morning newspaper. That was the headline the day the people of Louisiana were to vote and decide who their Governor was to be.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the newspaper to which the Senator has referred contain the exact statement made by Mr. Rogge?

Mr. PEPPER. The statement does not seem to be in quotation marks, but there is something that might be regarded as a direct statement from him. On the first page of the Times-Picayune of February 20 is the following:

Rogge expressed the opinion of the Department of Justice that the Federal Government has jurisdiction over any case in which mails are used to defraud a man of public office and of the emoluments and salary connected with it. The Government further believes, he said, that it has jurisdiction under the civil rights sections of the Federal Criminal Code "to punish any action by persons acting under color of official authority where that action involves infringement of rights secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States."

That is perhaps as direct a statement as any, Mr. President.

Mr. LUCAS. Those statements were made the day before the election?

Mr. PEPPER. This particular statement appeared in an early morning newspaper the day of the election.

I shall refer to only a few more newspapers. In the New Orleans States of February 22 is the headline:

Rogge will crack down.

In the New Orleans Times-Picayune of February 23 is this headline:

Rogge returns here to continue probe of State scandals. Prosecutor reveals plans for Nation-wide drive against "flow of graft" for public officials.

In other words, Mr. Rogge is going to clean up politics in the United States. The Federal Government is going to take over the apprehension and punishment of all those who upon any pretext may be drawn into the Federal net. Because they have offended against the Federal Government? No. Because, substantially, they have offended against the local law, and Mr. Rogge does not think they should have done it.

That is exactly what Hon. J. Edgar Hoover was doing down in my State. He said there was gambling and prostitution in Miami. I do not think any decent citizen approves of either gambling or prostitution in any city in America. I do not believe there is any Senator who would not lend any honorable effort toward the destruction, in a legitimate way, of those or any other law violations; but I do not believe there is a Senator who, in his zeal to police local law violations in any city in America, would turn the whole force of the United States Government into an agency for local police purposes.

If there are real Federal offenses, then Mr. Hoover and Mr. Rogge have proper jurisdiction. They have not only the right to act but the duty to act. But if they use some technical subterfuge as an excuse for entering into a local situation, they exceed their just authority.

For example, in my State, at a time when the sheriffs of several counties were preparing to run for election again in a primary in May, Mr. Hoover came out with a front-page story—to which, of course, newspapers gave the greatest circulation—about official corruption, without naming the ones who are officially corrupt but smearing every honest official in that section, without an indictment being returned against any of them, or a judicial inquiry to separate the sheep from the goats.

Of course, there are corrupt officials in my State. I presume there are corrupt officials in every State. But I deny any man's right to say that even an appreciable number of corrupt officials affords an excuse to smear all of them from the lofty eminence of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

I honor that great man from the State of Nebraska who sits in the Senate. Of course, I refer to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. He made inquiry of the Attorney General as to the details of what happened in Detroit when offenders were chained together like galley slaves in some ancient galley and brought into a court or into the presence of an official for fixing their bond. After all, Mr. President, we do not want to become so zealous even in trying to do good that we will smash every tradition which inheres in political sovereignty in America.

I mention these facts because I do not want to see distrust of departmental activities, and particularly the activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. I do not want anybody to be able to say with justice that the Federal Government is trying to influence an election in Louisiana, in Florida, or in any other State in America, because to do so would repudiate the fundamental concept of democracy of which we are the great beacon light for the nations of the world.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. On that point I wish to read to the Senator and to the Senate a brief excerpt from an opinion which was rendered by Mr. Justice Bradley in the case of ex parte Curtis, back in 1882, dealing with a legal question involving the taking of money from one employee of the Government by another. The Congress of the United States enacted a law making such conduct a penal offense. The case was tried and went to the Supreme Court. That law is the law today; but there is a dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Bradley upon the question which the Senator from Florida is now discussing, and I wish to read a short excerpt from it. Mr. Justice Bradley said, among other things:

> We are not unfrequently in danger of becoming purists, instead of wise reformers, in particular directions, and hastily pass inconsiderate laws which overreach the mark they are aimed at, or conflict with rights and privileges that a sober mind would regard as indisputable. It seems to me that the present law, taken in all its breadth, is one of this kind.

I submit to the Senate that the extension of the Hatch Act into the States is a similar type of law to that which this great jurist was discussing. I read further from the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley:

> It is urged that the law in question is intended, so far as it goes, to effect this very thing. Probably it is. But the end does not always sanctify the means. What I contend is, that in adopting this particular mode of restraining an acknowledged evil, Congress has overstepped its legitimate powers, and interfered with the substantial rights of the citizen. It is not lawful to do evil that good may come. There are plenty of ways in which wrong may be suppressed without resorting to wrongful measures to do it. No doubt it would often greatly tend to prevent the spread of a contagious and deadly epidemic, if those first taken should be immediately sacrificed to the public good. But such a mode of preventing the evil would hardly be regarded as legitimate in a Christian country.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the able Senator from Illinois for his contribution.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator from Illinois give the citation of the opinion from which he was reading?

Mr. LUCAS. It is the case of Ex parte Curtis (106 U. S. 371).

Mr. HATCH. I believe the Senator stated that he read from the dissenting opinion in that case?

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator also state that the majority opinion in that case has not yet been overruled?

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, I ask that the majority opinion be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I join in the request of the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. I also ask that the dissenting opinion be included.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the opinions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EX PARTE CURTIS

The sixth section of the act of Aug. 15, 1876, c. 287, prohibiting, under penalties therein mentioned, certain officers of the United States from requesting, giving to, or receiving from, any other officer money or property or other thing of value for political purposes, is not unconstitutional

PETITION for a writ of habeas corpus.

The sixth section of the act of Aug. 15, 1876, c. 287, entitled "An Act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the government," provides "that all executive officers or employés of the United States not appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, are prohibited from requesting, giving to, or receiving from, any other officer or employé of the government, any money or property or other thing of value for political purposes; and any such officer or employé who shall offend against the provisions of this section, shall be at once discharged from the service of the United States; and he shall also be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars."

Curtis, the petitioner, an employé of the United States, was indicted in the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, and convicted under this act for receiving money for political purposes from other employés of the government. Upon his conviction he was sentenced to pay a fine, and stand committed until payment was made. Under this sentence he was taken into custody by the marshal, and on his application a writ of habeas corpus was issued by one of the justices of this court in vacation, returnable here at the present term, to inquire into the validity of his detention. The important question presented on the return to the writ so issued is whether the act under which the conviction was had is constitutional.

The case was argued by Mr. Edwin B. Smith in favor of the petition, and by The Solicitor-General in opposition thereto.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WAITE, after stating the case, delivered the opinion of the court.

The act is not one to prohibit all contributions of money or property by the designated officers and employés of the United States for political purposes. Neither does it prohibit them altogether from receiving or soliciting money or property for such purposes. It simply forbids their receiving from or giving to each other. Beyond this no restrictions are placed on any of their political privileges.

That the government of the United States is one of delegated powers only, and that its authority is defined and limited by the Constitution, are no longer open questions; but express authority is given Congress by the Constitution to make all laws necessary and proper to carry into effect the powers that are delegated. Art. 1, sect. 8. Within the legitimate scope of this grant Congress is permitted to determine for itself what is necessary and what is proper.

The act now in question is one regulating in some particulars the conduct of certain officers and employés of the United States. It rests on the same principle as that originally passed in 1789 at the first session of the first Congress, which makes it unlawful for certain officers of the Treasury Department to engage in the business of trade or commerce, or to own a sea vessel, or to purchase public lands or other public property, or to be concerned in the purchase or disposal of the public securities of a State, or of the United States (Rev. Stat., sect. 243); and that passed in 1791, which makes it an offence for a clerk in the same department to carry on trade or business in the funds or debts of the States or of the United States, or in any kind of public property (id., sect. 244); and that passed in 1812, which makes it unlawful for a judge appointed under the authority of the United States to exercise the profession of counsel or attorney, or to be engaged in the practice of the law (id., sec. 713); and that passed in 1853 which prohibits every officer of the United States or person holding any place of trust or profit, or discharging any official function under or in connection with any executive department of the government of the United States, or under the Senate or House of Representatives, from acting as an agent or attorney for the prosecution of any claim against the United States (id., sect. 5498); and that passed in 1863, prohibiting members of Congress from practising in the Court of Claims (id., sect. 1058); and that passed in 1867, punishing, by dismissal from service, an officer or employé of the government who requires or requests any workingman in a navy-yard to contribute or pay any money for political purposes (id., sect. 1546); and that passed in 1868, prohibiting members of Congress from being interested in contracts with the United States (id., sect. 3739); and another, passed in 1870, which provides that no officer, clerk, or employé in the government of the United States shall solicit contributions from other officers, clerks, or employés for a gift to those in a superior official position, and that no officials or clerical superiors shall receive any gift or present as a contribution to them from persons in government employ getting a less salary than themselves, and that no officer or clerk shall make a donation as a gift or present to any official superior (id., sect. 1784). Many others of a kindred character might be referred to, but these are enough to show what has been the practice in the Legislative Department of the government from its organization, and, so far as we know, this is the first time the constitutionality of such legislation has ever been presented for judicial determination.

The evident purpose of Congress in all this class of enactments has been to promote efficiency and integrity in the discharge of official duties, and to maintain proper discipline in the public service. Clearly such a purpose is within the just scope of legislative power, and it is not easy to see why the act now under consideration does not come fairly within the legitimate means to such an end. It is true, as is claimed by the counsel for the petitioner, political assessments upon officeholders are not prohibited. The managers of political campaigns, not in the employ of the United States, are just as free now to call on those in office for money to be used for political purposes as ever they were, and those in office can contribute as liberally as they please, provided their payments are not made to any of the prohibited officers or employés. What we are now considering is not whether Congress has gone as far as it may, but whether that which has been done is within the constitutional limits upon its legislative discretion.

A feeling of independence under the law conduces to faithful public service, and nothing tends more to take away this feeling than a dread of dismissal. If contributions from those in public employment may be solicited by others in official authority, it is easy to see that what begins as a request may end as a demand, and that a failure to meet the demand may be treated by those having the power of removal as a breach of some supposed duty, growing out of the political relations of the parties. Contributions secured under such circumstances will quite as likely be made to avoid the consequences of the personal displeasure of a superior, as to promote the political views of the contributor,—to avoid a discharge from service, not to exercise a political privilege. The law contemplates no restrictions upon either giving or receiving, except so far as may be necessary to protect, in some degree, those in the public service against exactions through fear of personal loss. This purpose of the restriction, and the principle on which it rests, are most distinctly manifested in sect. 1546, supra, the reenactment in the Revised Statutes of sect. 3 of the act of June 30, 1868, c. 172, which subjected an officer or employé of the government to dismissal if he required or requested a workingman in a navy-yard to contribute or pay any money for political purposes, and prohibited the removal or discharge of a workingman for his political opinions; and in sect. 1784, the reenactment of the act of Feb. 1, 1870, c. 63, "to protect officials in public employ," by providing for the summary discharge of those who make or solicit contributions for presents to superior officers. No one can for a moment doubt that in both these statutes the object was to protect the classes of officials and employés provided for from being compelled to make contributions for such purposes through fear of dismissal if they refused. It is true that dismissal from service is the only penalty imposed, but this penalty is given for doing what is made a wrongful act. If it is constitutional to prohibit the act, the kind or degree of punishment to be inflicted for disregarding the prohibition is clearly within the discretion of Congress, provided it be not cruel or unusual.

If there were no other reasons for legislation of this character than such as relate to the protection of those in the public service against unjust exactions, its constitutionality would, in our opinion, be clear; but there are others, to our minds, equally good. If persons in public employ may be called on by those in authority to contribute from their personal income to the expenses of political campaigns, and a refusal may lead to putting good men out of the service, liberal payments may be made the ground for keeping poor ones in. So, too, if a part of the compensation received for public services must be contributed for political purposes, it is easy to see that an increase of compensation may be required to provide the means to make the contribution, and that in this way the government itself may be made to furnish indirectly the money to defray the expenses of keeping the political party in power that happens to have for the time being the control of the public patronage. Political parties must almost necessarily exist under a republican form of government; and when public employment depends to any considerable extent on party success, those in office will naturally be desirous of keeping the party to which they belong in power. The statute we are now considering does not interfere with this. The apparent end of Congress will be accomplished if it prevents those in power from requiring help for such purposes as a condition to continued employment.

We deem it unnecessary to pursue the subject further. In our opinion the statute under which the petitioner was convicted is constitutional. The other objections which have been urged to the detention cannot be considered in this form of proceeding. Our inquiries in this class of cases are limited to such objections as relate to the authority of the court to render the judgment by which the prisoner is held. We have no general power to review the judgments of the inferior courts of the United States in criminal cases, by the use of the writ of habeas corpus or otherwise. Our jurisdiction is limited to the single question of the power of the court to commit the prisoner for the act of which he has been convicted. (Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163; Ex parte Rowland, 104 U. S. 604.)

The commitment in this case was lawful, and the petitioner is, consequently,

Remanded to the custody of the marshal for the Southern District of New York.

MR. JUSTICE BRADLEY dissenting.

I cannot concur in the opinion of the court in this case. The law under which the petitioner is imprisoned makes it a penal offence for any executive officer or employé of the United States, not appointed by advice of the Senate [an unimportant distinction, so far as the power to make the law is concerned], to request, give to, or receive from any other officer or employé of the government any money, or property, or other thing of value, for political purposes; thus, in effect, making it a condition of accepting any employment under the government that a man shall not, even voluntarily and of his own free will, contribute in any way through or by the hands of any other employé of the government to the political cause which he desires to aid and promote. I do not believe that Congress has any right to impose such a condition upon any citizen of the United States. The offices of the government do not belong to the legislative department to dispose of on any conditions it may choose to impose. The legislature creates most of the offices, it is true, and provides compensation for the discharge of their duties: but that is its duty to do, in order to establish a complete organization of the functions of government. When established, the offices are, or ought to be, open to all. They belong to the United States, and not to Congress; and every citizen having the proper qualifications has the right to accept office, and to be a candidate therefor. This is a fundamental right of which the legislature cannot deprive the citizen, nor clog its exercise with conditions that are repugnant to his other fundamental rights. Such a condition I regard that imposed by the law in question to be. It prevents the citizen from cooperating with other citizens of his own choice in the promotion of his political views. To take an interest in public affairs, and to further and promote those principles which are believed to be vital or important to the general welfare, is every citizen's duty. It is a just complaint that so many good men abstain from taking such an interest. Amongst the necessary and proper means for promoting political views, or any other views, are association and contribution of money for that purpose, both to aid discussion and to disseminate information and sound doctrine. To deny to a man the privilege of associating and making joint contributions with such other citizens as he may choose, is an unjust restraint of his right to propagate and promote his views on public affairs. The freedom of speech and of the press, and that of assembling together to consult upon and discuss matters of public interest, and to join in petitioning for a redress of grievances, are expressly secured by the Constitution. The spirit of this clause covers and embraces the right of every citizen to engage in such discussions, and to promote the views of himself and his associates freely, without being trammelled by inconvenient restrictions. Such restrictions, in my judgment, are imposed by the law in question. Every person accepting any, the most insignificant, employment under the government must withdraw himself from all societies and associations having for object the promotion of political information or opinions. For if one officer may continue his connection, others may do the same, and thus it can hardly fail to happen that some of them will give and some receive funds mutually contributed for the purposes of the association. Congress might just as well, so far as the power is concerned, impose, as a condition of taking any employment under the government, entire silence on political subjects and a prohibition of all conversation thereon between government employés. Nay, it might as well prohibit the discussion of religious questions, or the mutual contributions of funds for missionary or other religious purposes. In former times, when the slavery question was agitated, this would have been a very convenient law to repress all discussion of the subject on either side of Mason and Dixon's line. At the present time any efficient connection with an association in favor of a prohibitory liquor law, or of a protective tariff, or of greenback currency, or even for the repression of political assessments, would render any government official obnoxious to the penalties of the law under consideration. For all these questions have become political in their character, and any contributions in aid of the cause would be contributions for political purposes. The whole thing seems to me absurd. Neither men's mouths nor their purses can be constitutionally tied up in that way. The truth is, that public opinion is oftentimes like a pendulum, swinging backward and forward to extreme lengths. We are not unfrequently in danger of becoming purists, instead of wise reformers, in particular directions; and hastily pass inconsiderate laws which overreach the mark they are aimed at, or conflict with rights and privileges that a sober mind would regard as indisputable. It seems to me that the present law, taken in all its breadth, is one of this kind.

The legislature may, undoubtedly, pass laws excluding from particular offices those who are engaged in pursuits incompatible with the faithful discharge of the duties of such offices. That is quite another thing.

The legislature may make laws ever so stringent to prevent the corrupt use of money in elections, or in political matters generally, or to prevent what are called political assessments on government employes, or any other exercise of undue influence over them by government officials or others. That would be all right. That would clearly be within the province of legislation.

It is urged that the law in question is intended, so far as it goes, to effect this very thing. Probably it is. But the end does not always sanctify the means. What I contend is, that in adopting this particular mode of restraining an acknowledged evil, Congress has overstepped its legitimate powers, and interfered with the substantial rights of the citizen. It is not lawful to do evil that good may come. There are plenty of ways in which wrong may be suppressed without resorting to wrongful measures to do it. No doubt it would often greatly tend to prevent the spread of a contagious and deadly epidemic, if those first taken should be immediately sacrificed to the public good. But such a mode of preventing the evil would hardly be regarded as legitimate in a Christian country.

I have no wish to discuss the subject at length, but simply to express the general grounds on which I think the legislation in question is ultra vires. Though as much opposed as any one to the evil sought to be remedied, I do not think the mode adopted is a legitimate or constitutional one, because it interferes too much with the freedom of the citizen in the pursuit of lawful and proper ends. If similar laws have been passed before, that does not make it right. The question is, whether the present law, with its sweeping provisions, is within the just powers of Congress. As I do not think it is, I dissent from the opinion of the majority of the court.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from New Mexico has seen fit to refer to the majority opinion, at this time I should like to read an excerpt from the majority opinion. The opinion was written by Mr. Chief Justice Waite. He said, among other things:

Political parties must almost necessarily exist under a republican form of government; and when public employment depends to any considerable extent on party success, those in office will naturally be desirous of keeping the party to which they belong in power.

That is what the Chief Justice, who wrote the majority opinion, had to say in connection with the question.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am very much indebted to the able Senator from Illinois.

In view of the headlines from which I have heretofore read about the activities of Mr. Rogge in Louisiana, it is, of course, no subject of surprise to us to pick up another Louisiana newspaper and find the following headline:

Local boom to put Rogge in Presidency is growing.

Nor is it any surprise that the issue from which I have just read was the Alexandria Daily Town Talk, published on Wednesday, February 28, 1940; and, of course, it is not at all surprising that we should read in the same newspaper, the Alexandria Daily Town Talk of February 21, the headline:

Rogge for President. It could happen here.

Then I find on February 27 the following headline which purports to quote Mr. Rogge, I will say to the Senator from Illinois, in the following language, which is on the front page of the newspaper:

"United States helped to give State back to people," Rogge.

Sam Jones and Uncle Sam won the election in Louisiana. That is a permissible inference that a fair-minded man might draw, and Mr. Rogge is proud of his achievement.

Mr. President, I live in a section which at one tragic period of our history was also the victim of excessive zeal on the part of the Federal Government. Soldiers stood at the ballot boxes and said who could vote and who could not vote. They thought they were doing a righteous thing; they thought the Federal power was properly being employed; they honestly thought it was in the public interest that they do it; yet all history has both condemned and deplored that tragic excess of zeal on the part of some men dominant in Federal policy and power. I hope, Mr. President, that we are not entering upon another tragic era when my Government and your Government shall lend itself to the breaking down of democratic government to which we subscribe in all its goodness and in all its badness with every fiber of our moral being.

It is only natural, of course, that Mr. Rogge should turn to another domain. I have here the Atlantic City Press of the issue of March 7, 1940, which says in the headline:

United States prober to renew work here.

Then in the article it is disclosed that—

Mr. Rogge is said to be reluctant to inject the Federal Government into State situations, except where local authorities are unable or are unwilling to act.

And he probably intimates that just before they have a city commissioners' election in Atlantic City he is going to clean up New Jersey also as a part of the crusade of the Federal Government to have the kind of government it thinks is good democratic government in America.

Mr. President, I opposed the Federal antilynching bill. I suppose it may be considered by some that I was motivated only by the fact that I happen to come from a Southern State and have a southern ancestry; but I should like my colleagues to believe that I think, at least, that I was motivated by a philosophic principle in that position, the same principle that moved the able and late lamented Senator from Idaho, the one and only William E. Borah. He was not from the South by residence and tradition, as I am, and great constitutional exponent as he was, great lover of democratic principles that he was, he opposed that proposed legislation not because he was in favor of lynching, for nobody would think that William E. Borah could look with other than contempt and disgust upon the sad spectacle, the horrible spectacle of a lynching, but he thought there was a governmental principle involved. He believed that even the saving of the lives of the three men who were lynched last year in the South, one of them a white man and one of them shot down, not lynched, by the irate brother of a child who was run down by an automobile and killed by a colored driver, and the other, under circumstances with which I am not familiar, would have been a very dear price to pay for breaking down dual sovereignty as a principle of American government.

Of course, everybody knows that the Federal Government, with unlimited money, with unlimited personnel, with unquestioned power, can do a better job of policing this country than can the local people, who have limited means and limited personnel; but does that mean that we are in favor, Senators, of having the Federal Government police every offense that is committed in America? My gracious, there is one murder committed every 40 minutes in this country, but are we in favor of murder because we do not make the Federal Government the prosecutor of everyone who commits a homicide in America? No. We think there is a principle involved, and, therefore, we say we do not condone murder; we think that in the just balance of State and Federal power it is better even to have murder prosecuted by the States, as it is, than to turn loose the Federal Government with unrestrained power even to prosecute that offense.

So, Mr. President, I said yesterday that I opposed the pending measure because it improperly transgresses upon the political liberty of men and women in America without justification. It tells the man who is employed by the State road department of my State, for example, "You cannot walk up to the courthouse in your own county and rise there and say, 'My friends and fellow citizens, I am going to make a speech for A. B., who is a candidate for Governor, and who, I believe, would make the best Governor the people of this State, in the exercise of their sovereign power, could elect.'" Why? Because the Federal Government makes a little contribution, or a sizable contribution, to the State highway department of my State.

I said that I opposed this amendment because everybody knows, I think, that I am a New Dealer; everybody knows, I think, that I have voted repeatedly for the extension of the Federal power, and that I have sought more opportunities than I have had to vote for further extension of the Federal power. Why? Because I know that there is a natural inequality in the distribution of children in America and the distribution of wealth in America. I know that the South, which I love, is spending a larger percentage of its income upon public education than are, for example, the other States of the country, and particularly the Northeast. Yet in spite of the fact that we spend a larger percentage of our per capita income in an effort to educate our children, in my State, in many cases, they do not have a 9-month school term in the public schools; they do not have the money to provide such a term. I have come to the Congress—I made it an issue in every campaign I have had—to try to obtain Federal aid to supply our deficiency, to equalize our inequality in ability to educate our children. Am I subject to accusation when I take that attitude that I am trying to make the Federal Government engulf every State authority there is? Can it justly be said that I am willing to turn over the regulation of the activity of every little school teacher in a rural district to the action of the Congress of the United States? Of course not.

In the Committee on Education and Labor, when we have been considering the Harrison-Fletcher-Thomas bill, we have been faced with the charge that we were about to turn the regulation of the school system of America over to the Federal Government. A few of us have been fighting against that accusation and have been saying, "No; we do not intend that; we are not going to tell the local authorities what to teach in the schools; we are not going to tell them whom to hire; we are not going to tell them how many hours the teachers shall work or what pay they shall receive or what they may do as citizens. All we are trying to do, our frightened fellow citizens, is to equalize the natural inequalities of the different States of the Nation to give their children a common standard of education." Yet, if the pending bill passes, if this precedent is buttressed, of course, they will be able to say to the proponents of that legislation, "You see; what did I tell you? If you ever start the program of having the Federal Government help the States educate their children, it will mean that we shall have done away with the privilege of local government in public education, and a minister of propaganda, no doubt, from the Department of the Interior or some other Federal agency will be telling the school teachers of America what they may teach; they will be telling the school boards whom they shall hire; and they will be telling the teacher what he can say in local affairs." It raises a very different question as to whether or not I favor that kind of a bill or whether the price might not be too high, and we would have to pay for it; but I said, because I was a New Dealer, whatever interest that might be to anybody, I felt called upon to make an explanation of why I oppose the pending measure and yet why I generally favor the extension of Federal power.

I have tried to make a line of demarcation. It is sometimes a shadowy line, no doubt, but to me it is a real line. That line of demarcation is, on the one hand, between the extension of the Federal power for the purpose of economic aid to the people of our country, supplying factors that local people may not supply, the harmonious adjustment of economic maladjustment and force in this country, and, on the other hand, the extension of the Federal power when it transgresses upon civic immunities and civic rights which the people in America inherently have from the divinity itself, as we say.

So, Mr. President, I favor a bill to regulate the production of cotton and the production of wheat and the production of rice and the production of tobacco and the like because only the Federal Government can properly and adequately legislate upon that subject. At a public meeting in my State, for example, a great group of tobacco growers appeared and told their Representatives and their two Senators that they wanted us to come to Washington and see to it that there was Federal legislation which would be effective to protect them in the production of their tobacco crop. They said, "If we reduce our acreage, Georgia or South Carolina or North Carolina or Virginia will merely increase theirs to the amount of our reduction, and no good will come of our sacrifice." Only the Federal Government, therefore, can properly act in such a case; but that is not the same as this situation. I could give many other illustrations; but when we get into the realm of transgressing upon the proper and just immunities of the civic rights, the sort of thing that is protected in the Bill of Rights, that is an entirely different situation.

I like to think that I am following the same line of demarcation that has been written into the jurisprudence of this country by such eminent jurists as Mr. Justice Holmes, Mr. Justice Brandeis, Mr. Justice Frankfurter, Mr. Justice Black, and other members of our Federal Supreme Court. Watch them. You will find Black, for example, voting for extension of the Federal power in the economic realm; but let a white law-enforcement officer even in a Southern State, whence he comes, question and go excessively against the proper civic immunities of the humblest black citizen, and you will find him a champion of the liberty of the oppressed one.

That is not a proper case, and it is not a proper case for the Federal power to take over the policing of crime that is of local significance in this country; and it is not a proper power for the Government of the United States to exercise to say what an employee of a State does in that State with respect to local political matters, just because the Federal Government may happen to contribute to the State agency which hires that individual.

Mr. President, I believe in the democratic sentiment of this country. I have faith in what Abraham Lincoln said—that the people, while not always the wisest, are in the long run the safest depository of power. I defend even the right of the people to make a mistake in the election of their Governors, just as Voltaire said that, while he disagreed with everything his opponent said, he would defend with his life his right to say it. I believe in the wisdom and the inevitable necessity of the preservation of the dual system of government in this country, the State system and the Federal system. By inclusion and exclusion, by experience, by trial and error, we shall from time to time redraw the line which properly circumscribes the activities of each; but, Mr. President, I hope we shall never destroy that line. I hope it shall never be obliterated, because if it is obliterated we shall have given to the nations which we beg to follow our example the most vivid illustration of the fact that we have found democratic government a failure here in our own country; and the tradition of liberty which our forefathers have handed down will have been destroyed by the agencies that they created to buttress that liberty, instead of to defile it from the citadel of the National Capital.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I shall take but a moment today. Some things the Senator from Florida has been saying prompt me to say just a word or two.

From his argument it would seem that the bill passed at the last session of Congress and the pending measure had something to do with policing the several States of the Union, and that if the pending bill becomes law the Federal officials may go into the States and, in some vague and mysterious manner, bring about another tragic era, as he said, and destroy the fundamental rights of citizens of those States.

Mr. President, instead of being susceptible of any such interpretation as that these measures are exactly the opposite. The tragic era to which the Senator referred was brought about by the encroachment upon several States and the citizens of those States of the excessive use of power by Federal officials, and the overrunning of elections and the controlling of elections in the States and the sovereign rights of the people of the States by carpetbaggers imported under the guise of Federal officials. This proposed law would tie the hands of Federal officials and Federal employees and all to whom we pay sums of money, to prevent them from going into the Senator's State or any other State and encroaching upon the liberties of the citizens of those States; and that is one of the purposes of the bill. It will protect the Senator and his citizens against undue and unlawful and corrupt influences of officers.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. No; I shall not yield just now, because the Senator has mentioned other men. He mentioned Abraham Lincoln; and when he says that all this talk about officeholders and so forth does not amount to anything, let us see what Abraham Lincoln said on that subject.

Shortly before his assassination, after the Civil War, Abraham Lincoln said, pointing to a group of job hunters outside the White House:

> We conquered the Rebellion, but that is a much greater danger.

The Senator wants to follow the philosophy of Justice Holmes. He believes in the philosophy and the liberalism of Justice Holmes. Yet he stands on the floor of the Senate and says that because a governmental agency throws some restrictions around its employees, it takes away from those employees an inherent and fundamental right. That was not the philosophy of Justice Holmes. We do not have to guess at what he said.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator, if I may, a rather long question. I think the Senator knows, because I have consistently supported his legislation, that I hope he is going to be able to answer the question to my satisfaction.

Mr. HATCH. I hope I can. I know the Senator has supported the legislation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am very much worried about this amendment to the other act, for this reason: The Senator has just referred to interference with the right of the individual in a State, placing a restriction upon the right of the individual, and has expressed the opinion that that was not a danger. What worries me about this amendment is that, as I see the amendment, it is a restriction upon the right of the State itself to govern itself.

I never was able to accept the opinion of the Supreme Court in the A. A. A. case, in which they talked about coercion, because it seemed to me that if that was coercion, then any business transaction in which an offer and acceptance were made would constitute coercion. However, in that instance the Federal Government was dealing with the individual farmers and was saying to them, "You may take this or leave it." Certainly the Federal Government has a right to say to individuals throughout the country, "If you want to have assistance, you may take it or leave it," and that is not coercion; but in this instance we say to a State, "You may take this assistance or leave it, but if you take it we not merely are going to lay down the rules under which you shall take it, but we are going to police the project after you take it." I can see a very definite distinction between policing the individual within a State and policing the State government itself.

Many years ago our Supreme Court said that we had not a right to tax the incomes of persons in the States or to tax the States themselves, because the power to tax is the power to destroy. I am not quite sure just what the present attitude of the Supreme Court is upon that subject. There has been a modification of that doctrine by Mr. Justice Frankfurter. But is not that an analogy? If the power to tax is the power to destroy, and through the years the Federal Government has never been permitted to tax the incomes of those employed by the States, is not the power to give or refrain from giving equally the power to destroy?

What is worrying me is that here is a provision which is directed, not against individuals within a State, but against the government of the State itself, the Federal Government going in and saying, "We have a right to lay down rules and regulations, and to police afterward the action of the State in the performance of the governmental functions by the State itself." As I have said, I hope the Senator will be able to answer me satisfactorily.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I do not want to beg the question, and I fully appreciate the sincerity of the Senator; but first I wish to call his attention to the fact that we have already done this very thing on a much more elaborate scale than is being proposed. For instance, we did it with respect to the amendment of the Social Security Act.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. So far as I am concerned that is not an answer.

Mr. HATCH. No, it is not, and I am not stating it as an answer. I am merely calling the attention of the Senator to the condition; and I still favor that amendment, and do not think the law is being abused in any way whatever. Action is also being taken in the various departments without any congressional authority. For instance, with reference to the A. A. A., the morning newspapers state that the Secretary of Agriculture has already put such rules into effect as to local committeemen, who were not regulated by the other act.

Mr. President, that still does not answer the question of the Senator. I am merely showing him that this is probably the mildest provision that has been proposed, and I have been somewhat amazed at some of the agitation and the fears expressed, when other things have been included in our laws without any comments about State rights. But I still am not answering the Senator, I know. I am merely explaining the general situation.

The Senator is familiar with the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] yesterday. The purpose of that amendment is to soften the provision, which we worked out in the committee, which, as it came from the committee, imposed really a very severe penalty against a State and all the people of a State itself, but under the amendment as the Senator offered it yesterday it centers on the individual who participates in political activity. The State may retain the individual in its employ if it desires. There is not a thing in the world to prevent a State keeping all the employees it desires to keep, and letting them engage in all the political activities they desire, if the State wants to do so. The only condition is that there shall be withheld double the amount of salary the individual would receive from funds the Government is contributing. It is a most mild and innocuous provision, and was intended to correct the very thing the Senator has mentioned. That was the purpose of the amendment, and it has been adopted.

Mr. President, I am very sorry the Senator from Florida had to leave the Chamber. I must say that he came to me and stated that he was compelled to leave in order to take a train. I wanted to read what Justice Holmes stated on this general subject as to the right of the government of a State or a municipality to lay down prohibitions against political activities of employees.

Many persons seem to think that when the Government, or a State or a municipality, prohibits political activity on the part of employees, it has in some manner deprived such an employee of a constitutional right. Mr. Justice Holmes spoke on that exact subject in a case arising when he was a member of the supreme judicial court of the State of Massachusetts. The question arose in the case of a policeman employed in a city who had engaged in political activity contrary to the rules of the city prohibiting political activity on the part of such an official. The policeman defended against his removal upon the ground that it deprived him of his constitutional right of free speech, and this is what Justice Holmes said on the subject:

> There is nothing in the Constitution or the statute to prevent the city from attaching obedience to this rule as a condition to the office of policeman and making it part of the good conduct required. The petitioner may have a constitutional right to talk politics, but he has no constitutional right to be a policeman.

In other words, Mr. Justice Holmes stated that if such an employee wanted to exercise all his rights, as other citizens did, he could do so, but he did not have a constitutional right to be a policeman and retain those rights. He continued:

> There are few employments for hire in which the servant does not agree to suspend his constitutional rights of free speech, as well as of idleness, by the implied terms of his contract. The servant cannot complain, as he takes the employment on the terms which are offered him.

That was the philosophy of Mr. Justice Holmes. I am very sorry the Senator from Florida had to leave. I wanted him to hear that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado obtained the floor.

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I desire to offer an amendment to section 3 of the bill which amends section 12 of the Hatch Act. I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not think it is necessary to call a quorum.

Mr. MINTON. I think Senators should be present if we are to consider any amendments or to take any action.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have no objection. This is a minor amendment, just a perfecting amendment.

Mr. MINTON. I may be in accord with what the Senator is proposing, but someone else may not be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Indiana to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Andrews	Ellender	Lucas	Shipstead
Ashurst	Frazier	McCarran	Smathers
Austin	Gerry	McKellar	Smith
Bailey	Gibson	McNary	Stewart

Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	White
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds
Davis	La Follette	Russell
Donahey	Lee	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I ask that my amendment, which is now at the desk, be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 5, line 2, after the word "municipality", it is proposed to strike out the semicolon and to insert "who are not classified under a State or municipal merit or civil-service system."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, as I stated a moment ago, I have taken up this amendment with the senior Senator from New Mexico, in charge of the bill, and he has no objection to it. The object and purpose of the amendment is not to exempt civil-service employees of a State or municipality who may also be heads of executive departments.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The purpose of the amendment is to make certain that the officers in question are not freed from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct. It removes the conflicts between the State law and the Federal law.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, in offering the amendment I did yesterday I seem to have created a little confusion. Therefore, I now ask unanimous consent——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Connecticut withhold his request for a moment? The Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] has offered an amendment which is merely a perfecting amendment. It may be desirable to dispose of that before the Senator from Connecticut makes his request.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] to the committee amendment, as amended.

The amendment to the committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, the amendment I offered yesterday, if adopted, would automatically reinstate the language stricken out by the committee, and I desire to avoid that situation. Therefore I should like to have unanimous consent, if I may, to modify my amendment so in its final form it will provide for striking out all the language beginning with line 15, page 4, down to and including line 9 on page 7. That does leave a bit of language in the committee amendment, unimportant by itself. However, I am compelled to do that in order to accomplish the purpose I desire.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment in the manner I have indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, by the Senator from Connecticut, to strike certain language from the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. MALONEY. I observe the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Hughes	Radcliffe
Andrews	Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Reed
Ashurst	Donahey	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds
Austin	Downey	La Follette	Russell

Connally	Holt	Overton	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. HATCH and other Senators demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I should like to make a few brief observations.

I wish to emphasize again, if further emphasis is necessary after the statements which have been made, just how serious a step we would take in the passage of the pending bill. It seems to me to be a burlesque on a noble institution. I want to be sure that there is no misunderstanding, and that Senators know, without a particle of doubt, that the defeat of my amendment and the passage of the Hatch bill means that hereafter in local elections no person in any municipality except the head of the Government and perhaps a few others may participate, and that hereafter in every community in the land persons who have had long experience in government and are closely associated with government must stand on the side lines as the selection of candidates is made.

It so happens that I live in a city which is governed by a Republican administration. It so happens that there is a Republican administration in my State. I am just as much concerned under such circumstances as I would be if conditions were reversed. I do not want to deny to those persons, especially informed of matters of government and knowing the people of their communities, the right to participate in the selection of candidates. I want Senators to know just how far-reaching is this step, and that in my opinion it is the most dictatorial proposal ever submitted to Congress. It not only denies to millions of our people the right to take part in the selection of candidates and actively to participate in election campaigns, but it opens the door, and is probably the entering wedge, to denying in the future similar rights to further millions of our people who enjoy some benefits under such acts as the social-security law.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Every Fourth of July we make flamboyant speeches about the right of free speech. Does the Hatch bill preserve the right of free speech to a man even though he holds a public office?

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, Fourth of July speeches must be changed if this bill is passed.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have always had the idea that liberty and free government meant something more than merely getting enough to eat and a place to sleep. I thought they meant the right to think, the right to express one's views, and, above all other things, the right to participate in this democratic system of ours. We all talk about our democratic processes. If nobody is to have any voice in the democratic processes except the fellows who are on the outside trying to get in, then we are denying to a large section of our people real liberty and freedom.

A horse gets enough to eat if he has a good owner, and he gets a good place to spend the night; but that is not freedom. That is not citizenship. That is not government. I am more concerned with the individuals who are affected than I am with the question whether or not they will form an opposition to me. If I were voting from political considerations, I should say, "Put State officers under the ban." State officers are the ones who threaten Senators. I think the Senator from Kentucky can bear witness to that. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not have the floor at the moment.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator can obtain additional evidence on that point from West Virginia.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall accept the statement of the Senator from West Virginia if he wishes to corroborate that testimony.

Mr. NEELY. I certainly do. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, cumulative evidence is not ordinarily admissible, but I think in this case it is entirely proper. It is confirmatory of the unchallenged statement of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY].

We have no machine in my State. Every fellow has his own if he can get one. So every officer has his own machine. If I were voting for my own perpetuation in office, I should say, "Shut out the State employees"; but they are citizens of my State, and they have a right to certain political privileges. So I am wondering what will be the result if the pending bill becomes law.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I do not know the Governor of Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not speaking of the Governor. He is a very fine gentleman and a friend of the Senator.

Mr. MALONEY. I was about to add that I assume that is the kind of man he is. However, I know that the Governor of my State is a Republican. I know that the mayor of my city is a Republican. I assume that the great majority of their associates are Republicans. I do not want to deny to them the freedom which they have always had, and to which they are entitled under the rights of American citizenship.

Mr. President, I assume that this matter is thoroughly understood; but I did wish, respectfully, to give one last word of admonition.

It is my understanding that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] to the committee amendment, as amended. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCNARY (when the name of Mr. NORRIS was called). The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea." I transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and permit my vote to stand. I am informed the Senator from Ohio, if present and voting, would vote "nay."

Mr. MCNARY (after having voted in the negative). I am advised that my pair, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], is necessarily absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are detained on important public business. I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from New Jersey, the Senator from Florida, and the Senator from Utah would vote "yea," and the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator from Georgia, and the Senator from New York would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], who is absent because of illness, is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]. So Mr. MALONEY's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, lines 2 to 6, inclusive, it is proposed to strike out all after the numeral "(3)", in line 2, down to and including the numeral "(4)", in line 6.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to strike out the third exception beginning in line 2 of page 5, as follows:

> Officers who are appointed by the Governor of any State by and with the advice and consent of the legislature or either house thereof, and who determine policies to be pursued by such State in the State-wide administration of State laws.

Mr. President, I offer this amendment because I do not believe there is any rhyme or reason in excepting such employees from the operation of the law simply because they happen to be appointed by the Governor and confirmed by the legislature. For example, take the case of a State highway commission in a State where the highway commission is appointed by the Governor and confirmed by the upper house of the legislature; that is to say, the State senate. They are involved in the expenditure of a vast sum of Federal money, and they are involved under such circumstances that they have a peculiar facility, if they choose to exercise it—and I use the State highway department merely as an example—for exerting political pressure. They not only have the employees of the State highway commission but they have the contractors doing business with the State highway commission, who are peculiarly subject to political pressure.

I happen to know of a case of the chairman of a State highway commission, appointed by the Governor and confirmed by the State senate, going about the State for the last 5 or 6 weeks on purely political business, interviewing employees of the State highway commission and contractors, as well, for purely political purposes. If the purpose of this measure be sound, I do not see any rhyme or reason whatever in making that exception. I therefore move to strike it out.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator see any reason why anybody should be excepted? Why should we except the Governor?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Governor has been elected by the people of the State, and I can see a reason for excepting him. I can also see a reason for the second exception, "elective heads of executive departments of any State or municipality." That is an entirely different thing from allowing a State machine to be built up by the persons included in exception (3), who are usually the main cogs in every State machine. To say that a man who is elected by the people of a State shall have a right to appeal to the people of the State whenever he sees fit is one thing. To say that other officials appointed by the Governor or members of the State machine shall be permitted improperly to use Federal funds for the purpose of perpetuating that machine is an entirely different thing.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I again yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Then, as I understand, it is the Senator's position that he wants to strike out this provision because these people are not elected by the people?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I say there is an essential difference between those who are elected by the people and those who are appointed.

Mr. MINTON. Then why does not the Senator move to strike out the second provision?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am going to offer an amendment to that section in just a moment. We can dispose of only one at a time. I intend to offer another amendment, to insert at the beginning of the second exception the words "duly elected."

Mr. MINTON. In my State the State highway commissioners are not elected. They are appointed. They are not confirmed by the senate. They do not have to be confirmed in my State. Do they have to be confirmed in the State of Missouri?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It so happens that they do have to be confirmed in my State; but it seems to me to make no difference whether they have to be confirmed or not, because, in my opinion, that is no basis for a distinction.

Mr. HATCH and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield first to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I merely want to state publicly to the Senator from Missouri—who has supported this legislation in its entirety, not only during this session but during the other—that I am in hearty accord with what the Senator is saying and what he seeks to do; and it will please me greatly if the amendment he now offers and the one he is going to offer are adopted.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that I supported the original bill at the last session of Congress and I am supporting this one as heartily as I can, and I shall support it whether my amendment is agreed to or not.

I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, let us assume that a State highway department receives Federal funds under the Hayden-Cartwright Act. Would not that automatically put the officials of that department under this bill?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In my opinion, it would. The Senator means if they received Federal funds?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They are excluded from political activity under the terms of this bill, or would be except for the exemption which is in the bill as at present drawn, and which I am trying to strike out. It now exempts the members of highway commissions in States in which the law provides that they shall be appointed by the Governor and confirmed by either branch of the legislature. That is what I am trying to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I offer a further amendment. In line 1 of page 5, after the numeral "(2)", I move to insert the words "duly elected." That is the amendment which I explained just a moment ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEELY obtained the floor.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me?

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I ask that an amendment which I intend to present as soon as the Senator from West Virginia concludes his remarks be read from the desk, if the Senator will permit that to be done, so that the Senate may understand its purport.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 21, after the word "employee", it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the sentence, and to substitute therefor the following:

> (2) and no person who is a stockholder or officer of a corporation benefiting in any manner whatsoever (a) by any tariff, excise tax, or quota limiting imports into the United States, imposed by the United States; (b) by a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any other governmental agency; (c) by a contract with the United States, or any of its agencies or with any State, municipality, or other governmental subdivision which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency; (3) and no person who is a stockholder or officer of a corporation which has pending an application for refund of Federal income taxes, or a claim against the United States before either the Court of Claims or the Congress; and (4) no person who is employed as a lobbyist or legislative representative or whose principal business is that of appearing before the executive or legislative departments of the United States, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. No such person shall solicit or receive or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask for a roll call on that amendment.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, a vote on that amendment would not be in order at this time.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The Chair understands that the Senator from Michigan is not presenting the amendment at this time.

Mr. BROWN. I simply stated that I wanted the amendment read for the benefit of the Senate, so that it could consider it. I may point out that it would take care of Mr. Weir, who, I understand, is to be the principal collector for the Republican Party in the coming election and it would take care of a number of other gentlemen of that type.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. As I understood the amendment which the Senator from Michigan has had read, it is an attempt by the Federal Government to control the expenditure of the money.

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the history of civilization is a never-ending record of man's ceaseless battle against the inhumanity, the greed, and the crime of his fellow men. With some degree of finality we win wars against floods and famines and pests and disease. But war against crime goes on forever. Unfortunately for the bill and the substitute before the Senate, the most difficult of all offenses to eradicate are those that are spawned by corrupt politics. The most dangerous, defiant, and irrepressible of all crime artificers and tort feasors are those who are clothed with the mantle of political influence or the armor of official power.

From motives which all senatorial supporters of the bill thoroughly understand, a few Governors and a number of their appointees have for a long time carried on a vigorous campaign against the reform which the pending substitute is designed to accomplish.

It is my hope that our voices and our votes will, in this parliamentary contest, be utilized in behalf of all the people and not for the perpetuation of the tyranny and extortion of statehouse machines which are infamously compelling defenseless employees to contribute millions of dollars every year for the nomination and election of partisan or factional candidates by means that are notoriously corrupt. As a result of practices which now prevail in a number of the States, those in the employment of the State government are practically disfranchised. By threats of the loss of their jobs they are compelled to vote for the nomination and election of candidates whom they desire to oppose and are forced to contribute to slush funds with which to assure the success of the candidates who are on the statehouse slates.

The net result of all this is that the State employee who is subject to this disgraceful compulsion is at once robbed of his liberty, his money, his vote, and his self-respect. But is there available competent and conclusive evidence that these offenses have been committed?

If you will generously lend me your eyes and your ears for a little while, I shall not only prove but demonstrate to you by unimpeachable evidence that the crimes indicated are not only committed but that they are as common as daylight and dark in at least one State in the Union, and that there is a present imperative necessity for comprehensive, drastic legislation by the Congress on the subject under consideration.

Let me now lay an infinitesimal part of the evidence before you. If all available proof similar to that which will be submitted were to be inserted in the RECORD, it would cost the Government thousands of dollars to print it. Therefore, in view of the high degree of intelligence of the jury which Senators compose, evidence that is simply cumulative will be rigidly excluded. Your attention is respectfully invited, first, to a letter from Mr. I. Raymond Murphy, of 2001 University Avenue, Morgantown, W. Va. He is an honorable, intelligent young man of excellent reputation who is now a student in the law school of the West Virginia University.

His letter is as follows:

DEAR SENATOR NEELY: I note in this morning's paper that Senator LUCAS, of Illinois, demanded proof that State political organizations were collecting 2 percent or more of State employees' salaries for campaign purposes. I am therefore submitting some proof for you to display to the Senator:

1. My appointment to the State employment service, December 13, 1937.

Mr. BARKLEY. In what department was the correspondent employed?

Mr. NEELY. In the employment department.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the unemployment insurance branch of the service the Federal Government contributes 100 percent, not only of the unemployment insurance but of the expenses of the administration.

Mr. NEELY. The agency by which Mr. Murphy was employed was and is supported by the Federal Government.

He says:

Four of the receipts I obtained from my immediate superior, Stuart S. Whiting, manager of the Grafton office. I paid 1½ percent until November 1, 1938, and obtained receipts for each payment. Then the district supervisor, Fred Knapp, notified us orally that the amount had been hiked to 2 percent, and we were required to pay the additional one-half percent on the entire year's salary, plus 2 percent, for November and December 1938, in advance, in order to have it for use in the November election.

3. January 1, 1939, I notified my superior that I did not intend to continue the payments. In the latter part of that month I received notice that I was to be transferred to the Welch office at the same salary, which would have meant a cut of about $60 a month to me because of the increased expense. I refused the transfer and asked Mr. McKenna about my standing on the State merit list. (I am No. 15 of the State manager's list as the result of the competitive examination held to obtain a list in 1937.)

His letter enclosed explains his attitude. Whiting is No. 42 or No. 43 on that list, but he was retained. He continued his payments.

On May 23, 1939, I was released without other notice.

4. All members of the State employment service were required to join the Jeffersonian Club, a statehouse inspired and dominated organization, headed by Isaiah Smith, now director of the budget. I have my receipt for that also.

5. I have the minutes of a meeting held in the Grafton office, prior to the August primary, 1938, in which Art Reynolds, chief deputy of the department of unemployment compensation, told us all that as members of the State organization we should go out and work for the nomination of candidates approved by the Charleston crowd. He named them in all the counties in the vicinity of Grafton. * * * I have the names of all those employees present at that meeting, as well as the exact words of Reynolds in addressing us. Needless to say, I refused those instructions, and thereby "put myself on a spot."

* * * Those payments were obligatory; unless they were made without objection the individual found himself on the outside looking in.

You may use the enclosed material in any way you deem fit.

(Signed) I. RAYMOND MURPHY.

The exhibits with Mr. Murphy's letter are as follows:

GRAFTON, W. VA., March 7, 1938.

Received of I. Raymond Murphy $2.02, by check, for February contribution to benefit fund.

STUART S. WHITING,

STUART S. WHITING,
Senior Interviewer.

A check dated July 8, 1938, for $2.02, drawn on the First National Bank of Philippi, W. Va., signed by I. R. Murphy, in payment of his contribution to the benefit fund. The check is endorsed on the back by this senior interviewer, Mr. Whiting.

A similar check, dated the 6th day of September 1938, for $2.02, similarly payable and similarly endorsed.

Mr. Murphy's payments of money thus attested were the result of extortion. Those higher up who were responsible for this "macing" ought to be in jail.

I indulge in no criticism of Mr. Whiting. He simply obeyed the orders of his superiors who would have discharged him instantly if he had failed to execute their orders.

Attention is invited to a letter which was sent to me by a public official whose name I withhold for his protection. Any Senator, may in confidence, inspect this communication. It is dated February 18, 1940, and says:

DEAR SENATOR NEELY: I am enclosing checks of Angela M. Fallon, who was employed for some time in the Williamson reemployment office, an agency financially supported by the Federal Government, which represent 2 percent of her salary, collected for the State organization. C. S. Brown was office manager in Williamson at the time.

The exhibits with this letter are as follows:

A check dated July 1, 1938, for $5.55, signed "Angela M. Fallon," payable to C. S. Brown, a State official, whose endorsement appears on the back of the instrument.

A check dated July 30, 1938, for $5.55, payable to the same person and signed by the same woman, Angela M. Fallen, endorsed on the back by Mr. Brown.

A check dated August 31, 1938, for $5.55, similarly signed, payable to the same official, and duly endorsed by him.

A check dated September 15, 1938, for $9.01, payable to the same State official or employee, C. S. Brown, signed by the same Angela M. Fallen, and endorsed on the back by Mr. Brown.

The last exhibit of this series is a check dated October 31, 1938, payable to the order of C. S. Brown, for $10.20. It is signed by Angela M. Fallon, and endorsed by Mr. Brown.

Every one of these checks represents an involuntary contribution by a State employee to a political slush fund.

My next evidence is from Tucker County, W. Va. It consists of the following affidavit and exhibits:

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
County of Tucker, to wit:

I, Walter Fallen, do solemnly swear that I was requested to contribute 2 percent of my salary as an employee of the State from January until the general election. I was employed as prison guard at the prison labor operations in Pendleton County at road camp No. 69 and 70.

It was understood that this payment was mandatory in order to hold a job. Checks were supposed to go to E. Dice Harper, and one of my checks bears his signature. This check was made payable to E. Dice Harper and was endorsed by W. W. Harper, agent. E. Dice Harper's signature also appears above the name of W. W. Harper, agent.

To my personal knowledge, all the guards of the State paid into this fund, with the possible exception of one man, who I understand has been released or fired.

Further, I personally saw truck drivers and foremen, carpenters, and other classifications of State employees, make such payments. I saw a member of the State road office at Harman come around and make these collections every month since about the 1st of January. It is my understanding that this practice is to be continued after the election.

(Signed) WALTER FALLEN.

Taken, sworn to, and subscribed before me this 29th day of November 1938.

ALAN G. BOLTON, Notary Public.

The exhibits with this affidavit are two checks payable to E. Dice Harper, an officer or employee of the State road commission, for $2 each. One is dated July 7, 1938, the other September 5, 1938. Both are signed by Mr. Fallen, and appear to have been duly endorsed and utilized.

My next affidavit is from Barbour County, W. Va., and is in the following language:

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA:
Barbour County, to wit:

This day personally appeared before me, W. L. Morrison, of Union District, Barbour County, W. Va., who, being by me first duly sworn, deposes and says:

My name is W. L. Morrison, and I live near Peel Tree, Barbour County, W. Va. I am a lifelong resident and native of Barbour County and a Democrat. In August 1933 I was appointed county road supervisor of Barbour County by Ernest L. Bailey, then State Road Commissioner of West Virginia under Gov. H. G. Kump. I occupied that position until 1937. As such supervisor I was responsible for the maintenance of all the roads in Barbour County, subject to the orders of the district engineer at Weston, W. Va. My crew of workers consisted chiefly of truck drivers, machine operators, and laborers, in addition to two foremen and some office help.

In the late fall of 1935 I was informed by my superiors in the Weston office that I was to collect of each employee a regular contribution out of his pay on each pay day, to be turned over to the State campaign fund. All of the supervisory officials were so notified, and they passed the word along to the men under them. Thereafter we all paid our regular amounts of 2 percent each month of our wages to the district office at Weston. I was very careful to see that all amounts collected were carefully itemized and checked so the correct amount was delivered each month.

It was commonly understood by all of us that the money was to be used for campaign purposes, and more particularly to nominate the slate of candidates in the primary favored and specifically endorsed by the State administration. Prior to the primary we received instructions concerning the State-wide candidates, as well as local candidates, for the house of delegates and State senate, and those instructions were passed on to the men out in the county. There is no question but that we paid the money into the State campaign fund to be used as the State administration wanted to use it.

And further this deponent sayeth not.

W. L. MORRISON.

Taken, acknowledged, and sworn to before me this the 28th day of January 1940.

PAUL S. MARTIN, Notary Public.

My commission expires December 23, 1946.

The attention of the Senate is invited to a statement which was made by Mr. J. Thomas Lane, district manager of the West Virginia State Employment Service. To the best of my knowledge and belief his veracity is undoubted and his reputation is without a stain.

STATEMENT BY J. THOMAS LANE

FEBRUARY 20, 1940.

I was appointed to the position of district manager of the West Virginia State Employment Service—an agency that is supported by Federal funds—Clarksburg district, in November 1937, on the basis of a merit examination, in accordance with the standards prescribed by the United States Employment Service. Because of the provision with reference to tenure of office contained in these standards I assumed that the position to which I was appointed was nonpolitical.

In the early part of February 1938 Mr. C. P. McKenna, chief of the West Virginia State Employment Service, in a conference held in Charleston, advised that there was being set up a benefit fund which had for its purpose the elimination of requesting contributions from time to time from the members of various office staffs. There was to be an organization set up on a district basis, with duly elected officers to be chosen from the employees—which officers would have control of the money contributed to the fund. It was mentioned that such a fund would be used to take care of any personal needs that might arise from time to time in the various offices of the district.

Upon my return to Clarksburg, I contacted the branch offices under my supervision, namely, the offices at Weston, Grafton, and Elkins, and explained the fund and its operation, and with this purpose outlined, it was agreed that all members of the staff would make contributions.

When I returned to Clarksburg, after contacting the branch offices, I received a letter, dated February 14, 1938, which is self-explanatory, which changed the purpose of the fund as well as the method in which the money was to be handled, and to which changes I objected.

On Mr. McKenna's visit to Clarksburg early in March 1938, we discussed the matter further, at which time I advised him that I was not willing to enter into such a plan whereby the money would be contributed to the central office and the expenditure of such funds governed by the head of the department.

At a later date I received a letter from Mr. McKenna asking me to state my objections in writing in order that he could defend my wishes, in that the Director had gone on record as to how the money would be handled and the purpose for which it would be spent. This letter was not answered by me, and several days later I received another letter with reference to the same subject. All these letters are in the hands of Senator NEELY. Upon receipt of this letter, and in view of the fact that I was instructed officially in that the correspondence was on official stationery and signed by Mr. McKenna as Chief of the Employment Service, and said letters sent to me under the franking privilege, I advised Mr. McKenna that there was no desire on my part, or that of my staff, to be in violation of the instructions of the Director.

In October of 1938 we were advised by the field representative of the West Virginia State Employment Service that the schedule set out in Mr. McKenna's original letter with reference to percentage of salary to be paid into this fund had been changed to a straight 2 percent; this change to be retroactive to January 1, 1938, and asked that we also pay in advance for November and December of 1938.

I personally received the contributions and forwarded them to Mr. McKenna by check. These checks are in the hands of Senator NEELY. There was in addition to these checks, $114.10 delivered in cash to the field supervisor.

It is evident, from the letters received as well as conversation of a later date with Mr. McKenna, that the purpose of the fund was political, and certainly in no way for the benefit of those persons who were making contributions. I definitely refused to pay into the fund after June 1938, and at a later date I advised a representative from the central office that I would not handle any money which was for this purpose.

I have no desire to be employed in an organization, purportedly on the basis of merit, and be subjected to a macing procedure which has for its purpose the perpetuation in office of a certain faction of a major political party. I do not believe that the Social Security Board or the Bureau of Employment Security will tolerate such actions on the part of State officials who are in charge of the administration of certain phases of the act in State government; and this statement is made in order that a representative of the people can bring the facts before the proper authority.

The exhibits with this statement are:

A check dated May 12, 1938, made by the Thomas Lane Co., with the notation "Charge J. T. Lane," payable to C. P. McKenna, who at that time was chief of the West Virginia State Employment Service, 805 People's Bank Building, Charleston, W. Va. The check calls for $46.30 and is endorsed by Mr. McKenna, the chief of this service.

A check dated June 13, 1938, for $43.53, similarly payable, and similarly endorsed on the back.

A check dated July 19, 1938, for $43.54, similarly payable and endorsed.

A check dated August 26, 1938, for $45.93, similarly signed and similarly endorsed.

A check dated February 25, 1939, payable to cash, for $140.80, signed by Mr. Lane and endorsed by Mr. McKenna, the chief of this service.

The Senate will be shocked to learn that Mr. McKenna unlawfully carried on his correspondence concerning this extortion in frankable envelops. Each of his violations of the franking privilege is punishable by a fine of $300.

The first of these letters is dated February 23, 1938. The franked envelope in which it was mailed bears the Charleston post-office stamp, dated February 24, 1938. At the head of the letter these words appear:

Affiliated with United States Employment Service.

It says:

FEBRUARY 23, 1938.

Mr. J. THOMAS LANE,
District Manager, West Virginia State Employment Service,
Clarksburg Trust Building, Clarksburg, W. Va.

DEAR MR. LANE: After a conference with each district manager and the supervisory staff of the administrative office, it is unanimously agreed that there shall be created within our organization a "benefit fund," composed of voluntary contributions for the many and varied needs of the permanent personnel.

Mr. President, the word "voluntary," as used in this letter, manifestly means voluntary in the sense in which an unarmed man in a dark alley, surrounded by gangsters with loaded pistols pointed at his head, responds to the ultimatum, "Your money or your life."

Mr. McKenna continues:

The primary purpose, of course, is to eliminate the necessity of solicitations from time to time, two of which are anticipated during the present calendar year.

For what? First, for use in the primary against liberal Democratic candidates; and second, against the candidates of the historic opposition to the Democratic Party in November.

There will be many secondary needs for such a fund; and it is agreed that a committee of five be named to prepare and submit bylaws to govern; that at the next State-wide meeting of district managers an election of officers and directors be conducted for the coming year. Persons elected shall name the purposes for and govern all expenditures.

It is further agreed that it should start at once pending a permanent organization and that the following rates of contribution, based on salary, should prevail:

	Percent
Under $1,000 per annum	0
$1,000 to $1,499 per annum	1
$1,500 to $2,999	1½
$3,000 and up per annum	2

It is my suggestion that you discuss this fully with your branch managers, who may in turn fully inform their staffs (individually) and you will, of course, want to individually inform each of your staff. It should not be necessary, but I elect to caution you that the real purpose behind this move should be most thoroughly imparted to each participant and they should volunteer their contribution based on the above scale.

For your convenience in handling, I request that only one remittance be made from a district; this will necessitate your branch or branches remitting to you, and you will prepare a transmittal, showing the amount from each member of your staff, in order that proper credit may be given to each person.

As previously advised, in order that we may be prepared for this year——

What year? The campaign year of 1938, of course—this fund should start with February salary. I hope you will give this your attention prior to March 1, and let me have your check, payable to me as acting treasurer, when you have received the contribution from the permanent appointees in your district. I do not think it wise to approach temporary appointees on this matter.

An identical letter is being mailed to each district manager.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) C. P. MCKENNA, Chief.

Let me interrupt the flow of Mr. McKenna's interesting correspondence long enough to observe that the system of exempting those temporarily employed has long since been abandoned. Last Saturday in my home in Fairmont, in the presence of the United States marshal for the northern district of West Virginia, a prominent public official informed me that some time ago a man by the name of Frank White, of Preston County, worked extra for the State road commission long enough to earn $3.50. As a condition precedent to the delivery of this compensation to the employee, he was required to contribute 2 percent of his earnings—7 cents—to the State political slush fund. The poor man had but 2 cents to his name, and consequently borrowed 5 cents from a friend in order to pay the ransom necessary to obtain his check.

We now proceed with Mr. McKenna's letter:

MARCH 14, 1938.

[Personal and confidential.]
Mr. J. THOMAS LANE,
District Manager, West Virginia State Employment Service,
Clarksburg Trust Building, Clarksburg, W. Va.

DEAR MR. LANE: In a conference with Mr. Stump—

Mr. Stump is the head of the service in West Virginia—your desire to solicit monthly contributions from the employees in your district on a district basis was made known to him.

I did not enumerate the objectionable features as you mentioned on making the contribution on a state-wide basis for fear of possibly misquoting you.

For your information, Mr. Stump has gone on record that each department in the State will only make one contribution for all employees in the department and that such contribution will be made by the department head (which in our case is Mr. Stump) to the State chairman or State treasurer, and it is his desire that all employees in his department follow through on this idea.

Personally, I have no choice in the matter, but if you insist that your district would prefer to solicit and hold your contributions on a district basis, I will be glad to have you state your reasons therefor, in order that I may be in position to defend your wishes.

Very truly yours,

C. P. MCKENNA, Chief.

That letter was mailed in Charleston, W. Va., on the 14th day of March 1938 in a franked envelope.

The next exhibit is as follows:

MARCH 23, 1938.

[Personal and confidential.]
Mr. J. THOMAS LANE,
District Manager, West Virginia State Employment Service,
Clarksburg Trust Building, Clarksburg, W. Va.

DEAR MR. LANE: You have not favored me with a reply to my confidential letter of March 14, and, inasmuch as this matter is up again for discussion, and in order that I may make known your wishes, it is very necessary that you advise me whether or not you insist that a district basis is more suitable to the personnel in your district or whether or not you can concur in the State-wide plan.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) C. P. MCKENNA, Chief.

This letter was mailed in Charleston, W. Va., on the 23d day of March 1938 in a franked envelope.

The last letter, and the one which practically admits a violation of the law, is as follows:

FEBRUARY 18, 1940.

Mr. J. THOMAS LANE,
427 Duff Avenue, Clarksburg, W. Va.

DEAR MR. LANE: Mr. Knapp reports to me that you were permitted to remove from the files some letters from this office addressed to you as manager, but marked "personal" and/or "confidential."

The report further states that you were under the impression that being so marked such letters rightfully belonged to you. These letters were marked "personal," and some "confidential," for the reason that they were directed to your personal and confidential attention; however, they were mailed to you under the franking privilege as official business pertaining to the Clarksburg office of the West Virginia State Employment Service.

Giving consideration to the above reasons, I trust you will find it convenient to return these letters to Mr. Knapp.

Very truly yours,

C. P. MCKENNA, Chief.

Those letters will not be returned. They will be delivered to Hon. L. R. Via, United States district attorney for the southern district of West Virginia, a most eminent lawyer and patriotic public official, to the end that the violations of the law relative to franking nonofficial mail may be given proper consideration.

Mr. President, I next present a part of a letter from Mr. D. B. Cain, of Parkersburg, W. Va., to me, which is dated January 20, 1940. It says:

I note with extreme interest in the Parkersburg News this morning quite a lengthy article in regards to your new bill governing such practices as are now being practiced in West Virginia as regards to extortion of money from State employees under the threat of losing their jobs. I am personally a victim of this vile practice, and as a result of same have been unemployed since the month of August 1938.

I am enclosing herewith two checks which will substantiate the fact.

Dice Harper, working out of Charleston, covered the entire State with all expenses paid, calling special meetings of employees during working hours, warning them just what the result would be upon failure to contribute to their vile and corrupt methods.

We have the extreme displeasure of being forcefully invited to some of these meetings, and were told that our district was far in the arrears as compared to the rest of the State, and could either come across or else, as our good Governor had so kindly favored us few with employment, and we owed it to him to contribute, and if we did not respect this extreme favor done us we possibly would find ourselves among the unemployed again.

Note this statement:

In my case and many others he proved himself a great forecaster of the future.

* * * * * * *

My father is unable to walk, and his credit, as well as mine, is ruined. We have nearly lost everything we owned several times, and only sale of some property will save us yet.

* * * * * * *

You are at liberty to use this letter in any way you see fit, as it contains nothing but absolute facts.

Wish you success with your aforesaid bill, not that it will do me any good, but possibly help some other poor, knocked-about, downtrodden man or woman. I remain,

Very truly yours,

D. B. CAIN,
1709 Oak Street.

The exhibits accompanying this letter are, first, a check, dated September 18, 1936, payable to W. H. Schimmall, a State employee, for $10, signed by D. B. Cain, and properly endorsed by Mr. Schimmall for deposit.

The second is a check dated September 25, 1936, to Mr. Schimmall, signed by Mr. Cain, calling for $7.50, and properly endorsed.

Mr. President, in order that there may be no doubt in the mind of any Senator that the existence of a wilderness of evidence such as I have submitted is a matter of common knowledge in West Virginia, I now read an article by Mr. Calvert L. Estill, an able West Virginia newspaper correspondent. It appeared in a number of papers in the State on or about the 19th day of January 1940.

[From the Wheeling (W. Va.) Intelligencer]

PLENTY OF PROOF OF ELECTION CORRUPTION FOR NEELY IN WEST VIRGINIA—EVIDENCE OF EXTORTION OF STATE PAY ROLLERS READY FOR SENATE

(By Calvert L. Estill, Staff Correspondent)

CHARLESTON, January 19.—If all that Senator NEELY needs to secure enactment by Congress of his "little Hatch bill" is evidence of corruption in State political machines and proof of the shameless blackjacking of employees on the public pay roll, the bill should be considered as good as passed.

Evidence of extortion of State pay rollers in West Virginia, at least, is plentiful, complete, and compelling. It exists in the form of affidavits, of photographic copies of letters from higher-ups to subordinates, ordering them to lay and collect the levies; of canceled checks; of photographic copies of letters from subordinates to their bosses transmitting the monthly "take"; and of the same kind of copies of post-office money-order receipts.

The proof already gathered here ought to be sufficient to convince even Senator SCOTT W. LUCAS, Democrat, of Illinois, who locked horns with Mr. NEELY in the Senate January 16 on the same measure. Senator LUCAS admitted that "I believe a lot of things occur in this country, but believing something and proving it are two different things."

While there is already in existence a considerable body of documentary evidence proving the operation of a Two Percent Club in this State, it would be possible to supplement that evidence with plenty more if the proper Federal authorities could be stirred out of their apathy and persuaded to do a little spade work.

TAPPING FEDERAL FUNDS

The most notorious—and complete—case here at the present time concerns the blackjacking operations of the employment service, a stepchild of the unemployment compensation department, whose chief was brazen enough to send letters to all branch-office managers, on official stationery, over his official signature, directing those managers to collect 2 percent of the salary of each permanent employee every month.

This case is complete with documents to prove every phase of the charges of extortion. But there is a great deal of additional evidence, furnished from every section of the State, to show that the blackjacking is general in the State departments. There are affidavits from road workers testifying that they had been compelled to fork over or else. And these affidavits are substantiated by canceled checks.

PRESENTED TO LEGISLATURE

Charges of the blackjacking of public pay rollers were made in the closing days of the 1939 session of the legislature, officially in the hall of the senate. These charges were supported by affidavits, canceled checks, and other information. They were smothered in committee. The statehouse-controlled legislature refused even to look at the incontrovertible evidence.

A bit of investigation by Federal agents will bring to light receipts given workers by conscienceless collectors so imbued with their sense of power that they did not hesitate to commit to writing the fact that they were the extortioners for the infamous 2-percent blackjack clubs. They figured they were beyond the law—for there is a law against such things right now on the State's statute books.

There are employees at the statehouse, for whom the taxpayers are shelling out salaries, whose duties, according to reliable report, consist simply of collecting the political assessments each month; of keeping the ledger on payments; and of seeing that those who don't pay don't stay on the pay roll.

All this evidence is on tap for the conviction of Senator LUCAS and any other doubters. The surprising thing is that Senator NEELY has not presented the evidence before.

Many of his friends have wondered how long he would be content for the statehouse forces to continue building up their huge slush fund to use against him and his friends in the coming primary election. The danger was seen and brought to public attention by the C. I. O. convention in Huntington last fall, which formally urged the proper Federal authorities to make an investigation, and put a stop to the blackjacking practice.

Extortion does not stop at the statehouse pay rolls; it extends into the counties. Reports are common here that employees in the service of Kanawha County have been forced—rather recently—to give up a whole month's salary at one time to satisfy the greed of the machine.

Most of them are resigned to the payment of tribute; they don't like it, but since that is the condition of their staying on the pay roll, they come across like good little soldiers. Now and then one rebels—and another economic execution takes place.

An affidavit from an employee of the State road commission, which gets huge slices of Federal funds, testifies that in 1938 he had to contribute 2 percent of his monthly salary to the slush fund from January until the general election in November.

"It was understood that this payment was mandatory in order to hold a job," he says under oath. "To my personal knowledge all the guards of the State—at prison-labor operations on the roads—paid into this fund, with the possible exception of one man, who I understand has been released, or fired.

"I personally saw truck drivers and foremen, carpenters, and other classifications of State employees make such payments. I saw a member of the State road office at Harmon (Randolph County) come around and make these collections every month since about the 1st of January."

Senator LUCAS demanded that Senator NEELY "show me some facts about these State machines, and I do not care whether they are in his State, whether they are in New York, in Illinois, or in any other State." And he wants the charges of extortion "proven by competent evidence before a committee." And "until those charges are proven," he said, "I cannot support the Senator's bill."

That indicates that proof of NEELY's charges will bring support to his bill. What is the Senator waiting for?

Mr. President, it would serve no good purpose to encumber the RECORD with the great mass of additional evidence in my possession. But if any Senator now doubts that notorious extortion of contributions from State employees in West Virginia for political purposes is the order of the day, and desires additional proof of the fact he can see more than a bushel of affidavits and exhibits similar to those now before the Senate by paying a visit to my office for that purpose.

Mr. President, I shall not offend by speaking of other States in detail. But since the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] and I debated the subject matter of the bill and the substitute in the Senate in January many letters have been received from the Senator's State which charge, in effect, that "macing" conditions in Illinois are similar to those in West Virginia. Letters sent to me from several other States contain bitter complaints against extortion by political machines.

May we not assume that, upon the evidence now before us that all Senators who supported the Hatch bill for the protection of the public and the Federal employees will favor similar protection for those who are employed jointly by the Governments of the Nation and the State? Therefore, let us inquire whether the bill or the substitute, if enacted, will be more likely to produce the desired result.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have listened with unusual interest to every word the Senator has said, with the exception of a moment ago when I was called to the cloakroom. The information the Senator has provided has certainly been to my mind appalling. I had not the slightest idea that any official would have the effrontery or the gall, literally, to demand of one of his constituents that he contribute in the wise the Senator has so ably described.

I understood from what he said a moment ago that the Senator has provided for our consideration a substitute for the Hatch bill. I do not know what that substitute is; but I wish to say to the Senator if there is anything in the substitute that will cover effectively anything that the Hatch law does not cover, I am for it, for I am entirely in sympathy with everything the able Senator from the great State of West Virginia has said, and I am particularly interested that the Senator himself has said it, because it has been my observation, during the years I have had the honor of serving in this body, that at all times when the interests of the great mass of the people have been involved the Senator from West Virginia has taken the floor in behalf of the citizens of the country.

I have been greatly inspired this afternoon by the Senator's remarks, because he has impressed me with one fact particularly, and that is that insofar as the millions residing in his State are concerned he is desirous of their being permitted to give expression to their respective opinions without being driven to opinions with which they are not entirely in accord.

May I ask the Senator whether his substitute would really make the bill stronger?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, first let me sincerely thank the able Senator from North Carolina for his generous remarks, and say of him, as Homer said of Ulysses:

> Frequent and soft as falls the wintry snow,
> Thus from his lips the copious periods flow.

During the next 10 minutes the Senator will, in my opinion, become satisfied that my proposed substitute will, if enacted, accomplish all that he desires.

Let us briefly compare the bill with the substitute which I have proposed.

With the greatest respect for the distinguished, patriotic senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], who has been a John the Baptist in the matter of purifying the national political slough of despond, I am impelled to observe that his bill in its present form has no incisors, no cuspids, no bicuspids, and no molars. More plainly and less euphemistically speaking, it has no teeth. But it does propose a step in the right direction, and if nothing more effective becomes available, I shall enthusiastically support it.

For example, the bill provides no merit system for the selection of employees. Under it, politics—naked and unblushing—will largely if not exclusively determine one's chances to obtain a place on a State pay roll.

For further example, attention is invited to the fact that the bill does not even attempt to restrain the extortion of money from employees for political purposes. And this is one of the most brazen and disgraceful political crimes of the age.

My proposed substitute, which is before you, is armed for both offensive and defensive purposes like an antediluvian saber-toothed tiger. If a legislative instrumentality of this sort were never needed, it is needed now to restrain the voracious political cannibals who, in several of the States, are without mercy or remorse devouring their helpless victims—the State employees—every day in the year.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. NEELY. I do.

Mr. HATCH. Let me say that with much of what the Senator says about the lack of teeth in the present measure, I agree; but I desire to explain that the reason is not only because of some lack of constitutional power, perhaps, in the Federal Congress, but also because there are practical considerations in regard to obtaining the passage of legislation.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I fully appreciate that fact, and the great work that the able Senator from New Mexico has done. But I conceive it to be my duty to provide the Congress an opportunity to emancipate all the political slaves in the country by means of the substitute which I have proposed.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia further yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. NEELY. I do.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has been here practically all this week during the progress of the debate.

He has observed some of the bitterness of the debate and some of the opposition which has developed against this, as I agree, more or less simple measure. What does he think a measure like this would evoke in the way of opposition?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I have noted it, and I have with great admiration also noted the Senator's praiseworthy patience, in most trying circumstances, which I have not been quite able to emulate. He has rendered and is rendering service of incalculable value. The Senator is practicing what the Apostle Paul preached concerning expediency, and I am not. And let me add that St. Paul's very best disciple in the United States Senate is the eminent Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. [Laughter.]

Let us now consider the substitute. Its own simple language is its best advocate. It is as follows:

> That after 60 days from the enactment of this act no officer or employee of the United States shall pay to any State or any agency or political subdivision of such State any moneys appropriated by the Congress for payment or allocation to the States or agencies or political subdivisions thereof, nor shall any such officer or employee order or approve the allocation or delivery to any State or agency or political subdivision of such State of any thing of value otherwise authorized to be delivered or allocated to States or agencies or political subdivisions thereof, unless such State has in operation a State civil-service plan currently approved by the United States Civil Service Commission (hereinafter referred to as "the Commission").

What must that plan provide in order to make the State eligible to obtain Federal funds?

> A State civil-service plan must—
> (1) provide that any person (other than an officer elected by direct vote of the people) employed in a civil capacity, any part of whose compensation is paid from any such moneys or from any fund into which any such moneys are placed, or who is employed in connection with the expenditure or distribution of any such moneys, or whose duties are in connection with the use or distribution of any such thing of value, shall be selected solely upon the basis of merit after an open, competitive, fair, and practical examination.

Second. The plan must provide—

> That no such person—

paid with Federal funds—

> shall be promoted to a more remunerative position unless he has performed the duties of the position from which he is promoted with a sufficient degree of efficiency to warrant his promotion.
> (3) Provide that no such person shall be under any obligation to contribute to any fund for political purposes or to render any political service.

Is there anyone in the Senate who will dare rise and contend that that section should not be written into the law?

Fourth. The plan shall—

> Prohibit any such person from making any contribution to any political fund and from taking any active part in any political management or in any political campaign.
> (5) Provide that no such person shall be denied the right to vote as he pleases and privately to express his opinions on all political subjects;
> (6) Provide that no such person shall be retained in such employment if such person, or any other person who is the husband, wife, father, mother, brother, sister, child, father-in-law, mother-in-law, brother-in-law, or sister-in-law of any such person, is an officer or member of any National, State, county, district, city, or other political committee or any other organization performing substantially the same functions as any such committee;

(7) Provide that any officer or employee of the State or any of its agencies or political subdivisions who attempts or is a party to any attempt to coerce the political action of any such person, to collect or exact a contribution to a fund for political purposes from any such person, or to remove any such person from his position or demote or degrade him because of his failure to render any political service or make any such contribution, shall, upon conviction thereof by a court of competent jurisdiction, be removed from his office or employment and be subject to imprisonment;

(8) Provide for such methods of administration as are found by the Commission to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan;

(9) Provide that the agency administering such plan shall make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Commission may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Commission may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

(10) Provide for the establishment by the agency administering such plan, but only after open, competitive, fair, and practical examinations, of registers of persons eligible to fill vacancies in the various classes of positions required by this act to be filled in accordance with such plan, and provide that the officer or employee filling any such vacancy shall make his selection from among the three available persons on the register who rank highest in order of merit.

That provision is identical with the requirements of existing civil-service law.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. Under the provision of the civil-service law as it is at present, with reference to selection of postmasters, the three highest on the list are certified to the Department and after the appointment is made, objection is filed against one of the three who happens to be a Republican. That is going on at this time, right here in our midst.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, that will not go on under the proposed substitute if it becomes a law.

The State plan must also—provide that the agency administering such plan shall be a commission and that the members of such commission shall not all be affiliated with the same political party.

(b) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prohibit any such plan from providing that in the appointment of any such person a preferential allowance may be granted to him on account of his having served in the Army or Navy of the United States.

(c) The Commission shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a).

(d) In the case of any plan which has been approved by the Commission, if the Commission, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering such plan, finds that the plan has been so changed or is so administered that there is a failure to comply with any provision required by subsection (a) to be included in such plan, the Commission shall withdraw its approval of such plan and shall notify the Governor of such State that its approval of such plan has been withdrawn. Such plan shall not be again approved until the Commission finds that there is no longer any such failure to comply.

(e) The Commission shall cause notice to be printed in the Federal Register of any action taken by it under the provisions of subsections (c) and (d) of this section.

SEC. 3. (a) The application of the provisions of the first section of this act with respect to any State may be suspended until July 1, 1941—

Mr. President, that provision was inserted for the purpose of saving certain States the expense of convening their legislatures in extraordinary session in order to qualify for funds under this proposed law.

SEC. 3. (a) The application of the provisions of the first section of this act with respect to any State may be suspended until July 1, 1941, by order of the United States Civil Service Commission if such Commission is satisfied, on the basis of evidence submitted to it by or on behalf of such State, (1) that action by the legislature of such State is necessary for the establishment of a civil-service plan which conforms with the provisions of section 2 (a), and (2) that conditions in such State are such that there is in fact substantially actual compliance with the requirements which are specified in section 2 (a) to be contained in a civil-service plan.

Mr. President, yesterday one of the most distinguished statesmen in this body, who is greatly admired and respected, said to me:

This matter should be dealt with by the States, and the State legislatures alone should enact laws to redress wrongs such as we have discussed this afternoon.

His recommendation meant, in other words, that West Virginia, for instance, should, by State legislation, prohibit within its boundaries the political cannibalism which this measure is designed to outlaw.

Mr. President, it would have been just as appropriate for my friend to have suggested to Prometheus to break his chains and rescue himself from the vulture that was devouring his liver. In present circumstances, an attempt to pass a law through the Legislature of West Virginia to prevent the "macing" of employees for political purposes would be the height of futility and the limit of nonsense.

Mr. President, with the evidence which has been submitted concerning the practices in West Virginia in mind, the Senate is requested to consider the following letter from the present distinguished Governor of the State:

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Charleston, April 11, 1939.

Hon. M. M. NEELY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR NEELY: There has just been presented to me a copy of S. 282, relating to civil service in all State departments through which Federal funds are expended.

I am quite interested in selective civil service myself, and I have had some study made of the possibilities of introducing such a program in our State government, but was unable to have the study completed in time for consideration by the recent session of the legislature, and will likely request that this study be continued by the interim committee during the current recess of the legislature.

On the other hand, I note that this bill, which was introduced by you on January 4, would by its terms make its provisions applicable commencing July 1, 1939.

We have in the reemployment services and in certain phases of the department of public assistance a character of selective service which has proven quite satisfactory and which has met with the approval of the cooperating Federal agencies. If, however, the selective service or civil service proposed by your bill, S. 282, should be required by July 1, 1939, as a condition of continued cooperation with the Federal Government, it is quite clear that we would be confronted by an extraordinary session of the legislature, which I do not believe should be necessary at this time, or by the discontinuance of Federal funds for State and Federal cooperation.

While I approve the principle of selective service and merit advancement, I believe that, with respect to the State government, it should be a State program.

Before you press this bill too far, I would like to urge that you consider the responsibility which you would take in causing to be passed an act of this character, which would cut off the State which you have been elected to represent, from participation in any Federal funds or force an extraordinary session of the legislature of the State, without assurance as to the outcome of the session, if it should be called.

I take the liberty of writing you, thinking that perhaps you have not thoroughly considered the implications of this bill or the situation in which you might find yourself if you should sponsor to passage a bill that would force an extraordinary session of the legislature in the State which you represent or, in the alternative, deny your constituents participation in Federal funds, for the provision of which the citizens of West Virginia contribute in the payment of taxes.

With best wishes and hoping to see you before long, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

HOMER A. HOLT.

P. S.—I enclose herewith copy of a letter that I am writing the Governor of each of the States.

H. A. H.

With this letter, Governor Holt sent me the following copy of a communication which speaks for itself:

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Charleston, April 11, 1939.

Hon. JAMES H. PRICE,
Governor of Virginia, Richmond, Va.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR PRICE: My attention has just been called to a bill pending before the National Congress designated S. 282 and entitled "A bill to provide that State employees employed in connection with programs carried on with the assistance of the Federal Government be selected in accordance with a nonpolitical civil-service plan," and requiring a State civil-service plan currently approved by the United States Civil Service Commission.

It is noted particularly that the effective date of this bill is July 1, 1939.

It is obvious that if this bill were passed, it would plunge the legislatures of many States into extraordinary sessions.

Though I am appreciative of some of the merits of civil service, if such plans are to be had for State administration, I believe they should be State plans, and I do not believe in the unnecessary supervision of State activities by Federal agencies, such as this bill would provide.

I thought that I should bring this matter to your attention in order that you might communicate with your Congressmen and Senators.

No doubt you will observe that this bill has been introduced by Senator NEELY, of West Virginia. I have written Senator NEELY about the bill. I do not know what motive prompted him to introduce it, but I have suggested to him that he consider the implications of a bill which would force the legislature of the State which he represents into an extraordinary session or place upon him the responsibility of denying his constituents participation in benefits of many Federal expenditures.

Since in his several personal political campaigns Senator NEELY has had no difficulty in receiving the support of his party members who are identified with the State administration in West Virginia, I rather assume that he must have introduced this bill on behalf of one of his colleagues in the United States Senate rather than in his own interest.

Yours sincerely,

H. A. H., Governor.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I am quite sure that the distinguished Senator may have answered the questions I wish to propound to him, but I should like to ask him one or two questions to clarify if I may, some ideas about the bill. Under the amendment which the Senator is proposing in the nature of a substitute the allocation of funds to State agencies or to States is predicated first upon the State adopting a civil-service law satisfactory to the United States Civil Service Commission.

Mr. NEELY. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER. Then, second, the States would have until July 1, 1941, to adopt the civil-service plan.

Mr. NEELY. That is true. And as I have previously stated, I shall gladly accept an amendment further to extend the time, because I have just been informed, for example, that the Legislature of Kentucky will not meet until 1942. It will be unnecessary for any State of the Union to convene its legislature in extraordinary session to meet the requirements of this measure.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, on page 3, in subdivision 7, the Senator undertakes to set out a method of enforcement of the State civil-service plan, with particular reference to collections of assessments that might be made against State employees. Aside from that feature of the bill, aside from other activities that might be engaged in by a State civil-service employee, is there any other provision for enforcing the State plan of civil service other than that which is set out in subdivision on page 3?

Mr. NEELY. The plan submitted for the approval of the Commission must contain provisions for the punishment of offenders by removal from employment and imprisonment.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator from Arkansas is merely seeking to be helpful in an effort to clarify this proposition that the State plans would necessarily have to be flexible enough to meet changing conditions, the flexibility being determined by conditions as and when they happen, largely under the supervision of the United States Civil Service Commission. Is that correct?

Mr. NEELY. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In listening to the reading of the letter written by the Governor of West Virginia, I rather inferred that he was suggesting that some chief executives of States might refuse to accept money proffered to them by the Federal Government.

Mr. NEELY. That is, refuse to accept it upon the conditions specified in the pending substitute for the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is the very point I wanted to make. In other words, if I have made the proper assumption, he and those who maintain a similar attitude would much prefer to forego contributions made by the Federal Government in the interest of their States and the people of those States, rather than give up the opportunity to whip them into line.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the able Senator from North Carolina has stated a conclusion concerning which I shall make no comment.

Letters which I have received from various State officials have convinced me that their authors would rather refuse Federal aid with which to build roads, construct schoolhouses, bridges, athletic fields, playgrounds, and swimming pools, clothe the naked, and feed the hungry, than to accept such aid upon the condition that State political machines should abandon their racketeering at the expense of State employees.

I have listened with great interest to the eloquent arguments which have been made to the effect that the proposed legislation, if passed, would invade the rights of the States. That argument roared over this country in the fifties louder than the cannon roared in the sixties which mowed down countless ranks of the Blue and the Gray.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I did not have the privilege—and it is a privilege—to listen to the Senator's entire argument, because I was busy on other official business. However, I wonder whether the Senator in his main argument referred to the provisions of the Employment Service Act of 1933, and also the Social Security Act, amendments to which I had the honor of sponsoring last year. In those acts there is a provision that funds may be extended to the States only upon condition that the States set up a merit standard for the employees who are to be paid from any of the funds provided by the Federal Government. The standards are about like those proposed in the substitute which the Senator offers. As I recall, both those acts were passed by a practically unanimous vote. I think the States have welcomed such aid.

Nobody then suggested that we were in any way invading States' rights. On the contrary, such legislation was welcomed by the States as a great aid to the welfare of their people.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I had not called attention to the examples mentioned by the able Senator from New York. I thank him for the valuable contribution he has made to the debate. He is entirely correct in his implication that my substitute proposes simply an extension of the principle embodied in both pieces of legislation to which he has referred.

Mr. President, we heard the argument against the invasion of the rights of the States when we considered the pure-food law, the kidnaping law, the narcotic law, and innumerable other laws.

A great man once said that hell is paved with good intentions. The legislative highway which leads to this Capitol has been crowded by those who have perpetually cried out against Federal reforms on the ground that they would invade States' rights.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I did not know that the States had any rights left. I thought the Federal Government, by appropriation, had bought all the States' rights.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I think the purchase would be complete if the pending bill were passed.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, what we are really trying to do is to prevent purchase—purchase of office—and every other species of political rascality regardless of what the distinguished Senator from Indiana says. No one, regardless of his motives, can oppose this legislation, without, in effect, taking his stand in favor of the continued macing of State employees.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I think I shall vote for the Senator's substitute.

Mr. NEELY. I thank the Senator from Indiana more than I can tell him. I now know why Shakespeare, in referring to man, said:

> In action how like an angel! In apprehension how like a god!

Mr. MINTON. The Senator has referred to slush funds. He would eliminate what he terms "slush fund" contributions by political employees to a political campaign fund either voluntarily or under coercion. The Senator seeks to do away with that activity. I ask the Senator in all fairness if he does not think we ought to give some consideration to the "boodle bag" which Ernest Weir is carrying around with him and the slush fund which he expects to obtain in that manner. Has the Senator in mind anything looking to the corruption, which reeks and smells to high heaven, from the "boodle bag" of the opposition party, which has commissioned Mr. Weir to go around and collect a slush fund for the opposition in the election to come?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President,

> Heaven is not reached at a single bound;
> But we build the ladder by which we rise
> From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
> And we mount to its summit round by round.

I am taking a hurdle at a time and am now endeavoring to reach the first round in the ladder that leads to political purity.

Mr. MINTON. Has not the Senator in contemplation the round about which I am talking, the big slush fund, the "boodle bag" of the "get-the-money boys"? The Senator will remember the campaign slogan which the Republicans had in 1920—"Get the money, boys." They are out now to "get-the-money boys"; and they have one of the "big boodle boys" from Pennsylvania. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] knows him. I imagine he is about to rise and admit it.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I shall yield in a moment to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, in this debate, I do not intend to be ground between the upper Democratic and the lower Republican millstones, or vice versa. I want votes for my substitute from both sides of the aisle. Let me inform my Democratic friend from Indiana that the Republican Party in my State helped to destroy itself, temporarily, by practicing some of the infamies I have condemned today. I desire to clean the Democratic house in West Virginia, if possible, before my party suffers the same disaster which stripped the opposition of power 8 years ago. For the present I shall leave to the Republicans the task of sinking or saving themselves.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. I am sure the Senator will resent the "boodle bags" coming in from the millionaires who subscribed to the Democratic Party.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would give us the names of those individuals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I unqualifiedly condemn the use of money by anybody at any time, or in any place, for corrupt political purposes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. I join with the Senator.

Mr. NEELY. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for his joinder, and I hope we shall all be together when my substitute comes to a final vote, and that we shall all support it to the tune of Onward, Christian Soldiers, Marching as to War.

Extorting money from employees for corrupt political purposes is one of the most indefensible outrages of modern times. Personally I would rather be a ghoul and prowl through graveyards at midnight, when all the evil planets were in conjunction and the moon was in total eclipse, and rob the dead of their jewels and their gems than to attempt to elect myself to office with money filched from poverty-stricken people who are barely existing on the border line of starvation.

Mr. President——

> Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
> In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side;
> Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,
> Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right,
> And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light.
> Then it is the brave man chooses, while the coward stands aside,
> Doubting in his abject spirit, till his Lord is crucified,
> And the multitude make virtue of the faith they had denied.

We waged a war in the last century to emancipate the slaves of another race. I call on you to help emancipate in the twentieth century the political slaves of your own race. There are hundreds of thousands of them in the various States of the Union who are praying that we will throw out the life line to them. They have been robbed of their political liberty, their money, their votes, and their self-respect. Let us by the adoption of the proposed substitute set these slaves free and make their tormentors amenable to law, and thus earn the everlasting gratitude of generations yet unborn.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. In reading the proposed substitute of the Senator, I find there is a prohibition against the payment to any State agency of Federal money unless the State has adopted a State civil-service plan. My inquiry is, Suppose there is in the State a civil-service plan applicable to a certain State agency, for instance, applicable to the State highway department, and there is no civil-service plan applied to some other agency; as I read the Senator's amendment, no money could be paid over to the State from the Federal Treasury unless every agency of the State was under civil service, even though not receiving Federal money.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if the Senator has correctly construed the language of the proposal—and I have great respect for his ability as a lawyer and legislator—I shall gladly concur in an amendment to clarify the substitute to whatever extent may be necessary to make the withholding of funds apply only to that department of the State government which has failed to conform to the required civil-service plan.

Mr. ADAMS. I suggest that it might read something like this:

> Unless such State has in operation a State civil-service plan currently approved by the United States Civil Service Commission applicable to the agency or department to which the money is to be paid.

Mr. NEELY. I shall not object.

Mr. ADAMS. Then, I will offer that amendment at once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. The question before the Senate is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	La Follette	Russell
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Austin	Frazier	Lucas	Shipstead
Bailey	Gerry	McCarran	Smith
Bankhead	Gibson	McKellar	Stewart
Barbour	Gillette	McNary	Taft
Barkley	Green	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Bilbo	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Hale	Minton	Tobey
Byrd	Harrison	Murray	Townsend
Byrnes	Hatch	Neely	Truman
Capper	Hayden	Nye	Tydings
Chandler	Herring	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Chavez	Hill	Overton	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Holman	Pepper	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Holt	Pittman	Walsh
Connally	Hughes	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	White
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I desire to speak on the amendment. When this amendment was read by the clerk, many Senators asked me if I intended seriously to press it. I certainly do intend to press it seriously, because I think it goes to a much more vital subject of political corruption, political manipulation, and political influence in the Government of the United States than does the original Hatch Act or the amendment the Senator from New Mexico now proposes. What he is hitting at are the $2 contributors; I am hitting at the $300,000 contributors to campaign funds.

Before I go into that subject I wish first to explain just what the amendment proposes to do. It proposes to amend line 21, on page 4, and following matter of the pending Hatch amendment and, in substance, provides that no person who is a stockholder or an officer of a corporation benefiting in any manner whatsoever by any tariff, excise tax, or quota limiting imports into the United States; no stockholder of a corporation which secures a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or any other governmental agency; no stockholder of a corporation which has a contract with the United States or any of its agencies, and—following the idea of the Hatch amendment—no stockholder of a corporation which has a contract with a State, municipality, or other governmental subdivision which is financed in whole or in part by a loan or a grant made by the United States or by any Federal agency—that is the exact language of the Hatch bill—and no person who is a stockholder or officer of a corporation which has pending before the Government of the United States an application for a tax refund or a claim before the Claims Committee of the Senate or the House or before the Court of Claims, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

All that provision relates to stockholders and officers—not employees, as someone suggested to me, but stockholders and officers—of corporations which are in effect receiving benefits from the Treasury of the United States.

Then I include another class of individuals—persons who are employed as lobbyists or legislative representatives, or whose principal business is that of appearing before executive or legislative departments of the Government. That is the entire classification. I might include many others. Some further consideration by the committee might suggest to them some other persons who are interested in the Treasury of the United States, and in withdrawing funds therefrom.

All of those persons are prohibited, just as the Hatch Act prohibits Government employees, from taking any active part in political management or in political campaigns. The prohibition is absolutely complete.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BROWN. Let me finish summarizing the amendment. But, furthermore, because of the facts I am going to bring out later in my argument, I think we ought to attach to this measure the same prohibition against political contributions that is contained in the present Hatch Act—the prohibition against political collections and contributions from Government employees.

No such person—that is, none of the stockholders of these various corporations which have some beneficial connection with the Government of the United States—shall solicit or receive, or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatsoever.

I now yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question for information. He has followed this bill more closely than I have been able to do.

Under the law, the members of the National Guard of the various States are paid when they have camps, and are paid so much a week for drills. The Federal Government furnishes part of that money, probably a large part of it.

Mr. BROWN. It also supplies the equipment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Under the proposed legislation which is now pending, would not every National Guard member and every officer of the National Guard be prohibited from any political activity?

Mr. BROWN. After a careful reading of the present amendment I am inclined to think that such National Guard men, or members of State militia, whose pay is in part provided by the Government of the United States, are included within the prohibitions of the Hatch bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what I mean. Under the bill as it is now pending, would they not be prohibited from any political activity?

Mr. BROWN. I fear they would.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BROWN. I do.

Mr. HATCH. What part of the bill does the Senator refer to when he speaks about the provisions of the present Hatch bill relating to contributions?

Mr. BROWN. That is in the Hatch Act; the present law.

Mr. HATCH. To what persons does it relate?

Mr. BROWN. It relates to W. P. A. workers, W. P. A. supervisors, and various other employees of that kind.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. I do not yield right now. Let me say to the Senator that I think that provision in the original Hatch Act was totally unnecessary, because we have had on the statute books since 1876, I believe, a statute fully covering that subject.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, now will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan further yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Does the section to which the Senator refers apply only to those paid out of relief funds?

Mr. BROWN. I think it does; but I ask the Senator, who is an expert on the subject, if there is not a general statute, enacted in 1876, which was the subject of the Supreme Court decision to which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] referred earlier in the day, which prohibits any solicitation of funds by a Senator, a Representative, or any other Government official from any other Government official or employee.

Mr. HATCH. There is a general provision as to solicitation; but the difference is this: The pending bill was drawn with the law in mind to which the Senator refers. That law referred only to Government employees soliciting other Government employees.

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. And, as I pointed out on the floor of the Senate when the present law was under discussion, the solicitation of W. P. A. workers did not come from Federal employees. It came from persons on the outside who were not covered by the act.

Mr. BROWN. After the two votes in which I agreed with the Senator from New Mexico in refusing to join a majority of my Democratic colleagues to repeal section 9 of the Hatch Act, I am sure the Senator does not for a moment think I am now in favor of repealing that section. I am not. I have twice voted that way, both on the Miller amendment and on the Adams amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. Just let me finish my statement. I am in agreement with the proposition that there should be no coercion of persons upon relief. What I am now aiming at is an entirely different evil, but connected with the same subject matter. When the Senator is doing such a splendid job and has made such a thorough investigation of the law and the constitutional provisions relating to this matter of campaign contributions and political influence of persons who deal with the Government, who obtain benefits from the Government, whether by way of tariff concessions, by way of tax refunds, or any of the other things I have mentioned, the Senator ought to cover those evils just as he covers the $2 contributor who is on the Government pay roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I did not mean to imply anything contrary to what the Senator from Michigan has stated.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator admits what I have stated?

Mr. HATCH. Certainly I do; and I want to clear up the statement that there was no necessity of passing that provision of the other law.

On the question to which the Senator has just referred when he said I should give some attention to these other things, I want him to know that those things have not by any means escaped my attention. They have not escaped the attention of other Members of the Senate. They have not escaped the attention of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. At this moment there is pending before that committee a bill drawn by the Senator who sits next to the Senator from Michigan, the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], in which in a separate measure he strikes at the very thing to which the Senator is referring. There is on my desk also a bill which strikes at the same thing.

I make that statement merely to let the Senator know that we are considering those things.

Mr. BROWN. I am very much pleased to hear it; and I shall be delighted if the Senator will agree to a recommittal of his bill or a delay of his bill until we can bring in the bill of the Senator from Rhode Island—which I think is part of the same subject matter—and legislate in regard to the whole problem of campaign contributions from those who seek favors at the hands of the Government of the United States, those who are paid in any manner whatever out of the Treasury of the United States, or those who benefit by the tariff laws of the United States, who, in my judgment, have been the worst offenders in the matter of making great campaign contributions and engaging in politics.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. In reply to what the Senator says, manifestly I cannot agree to his proposal. It is well known that this particular measure has been considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It was announced at the last session of the Congress that this identical measure would be introduced, and no person has appeared before the committee and made a single suggestion along the lines the Senator suggests today. I cannot agree to any such proposal as that.

Mr. BROWN. Let me say to the Senator that the Hatch amendments may be enacted. So far the Senator has been very successful. If the measure does pass, it will be because 23 Republicans in a solid phalanx stand by his bill. I am not so sanguine that 23 Republicans will stand in a solid phalanx back of the bill about which the Senator tells me—the bill the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] has introduced—covering the matter of campaign contributions from the beneficiaries of the Treasury by way of tariff grants, tax refunds, and the other items I have detailed.

I would much prefer if we would put both propositions in one bill, because they cover the same subject. I want to see a bill passed containing the essentials of my amendment, but I am afraid it will not pass if we have to depend on the 23 Republicans on the other side to vote for that kind of a bill.

Several Senators rose.

Mr. BROWN. Before I yield I wish to say something further. Why do I make the statement about not being able to pass the bill? For the very good reasons I am about to outline. If my amendment were agreed to, John D. Rockefeller could not contribute $150,000 to the Republican national campaign fund in 1940, as he did in 1936.

Several parties by the name of Pew in the State of Pennsylvania could not contribute $310,000 to the Republican national campaign fund in 1940, as they did in 1936, because the Sun Oil Co., which is largely controlled by the Pew family is a beneficiary of an excise tax which has been levied by the United States upon oil.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. Under my amendment the Pew stockholders in Sun Oil could not make the contribution because they would be prohibited, just as the $2 contributor in the highway department of the State of Michigan will be prohibited, by the existing law. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GUFFEY. Has the Senator an itemized statement of the contribution of $310,000 by the Pew family?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; I have.

Mr. GUFFEY. Will the Senator put it in the RECORD?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield to me while he is looking for the data?

Mr. BROWN. No; I want to hear what the Senator from New Mexico has to say. I do not want to be required to answer a question when I do not hear it. I now have the information as to the Pew family:

Arthur E. Pew, of Bryn Mawr, Pa., contributed $15,775 to the Republican campaign fund in 1936.

Ethel Pew, of Bryn Mawr, Pa., contributed $81,625.

J. Howard Pew, of Ardmore, Pa., contributed $100,138.32.

J. N. Pew, of Ardmore, Pa., was a little more generous. He contributed $100,313.51.

Walter C. Pew, of Cynwyd, Pa., contributed $15,125.

The total was a sum slightly in excess of $310,000, and it all came from the Pew family, the members of which are large stockholders in the Sun Oil Co., which is the beneficiary of the tariff laws and the excise laws of the United States.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I desire to answer a question the Senator from Michigan propounded about the highway employee, and to inform him that there is nothing in the existing law which prevents a contribution by that highway employee in Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I disagree with the Senator. Would it or would it not be participation in politics for a highway employee of the State of Michigan, who would be subject to the provisions of the bill, to make a contribution for political purposes?

Mr. HATCH. It is not.

Mr. BROWN. I disagree.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to tell the Senator why it is not.

Mr. BROWN. What greater political activity could there be?

Mr. HATCH. May I explain to the Senator why I make that statement?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly; I should be glad to be informed about it.

Mr. HATCH. This is a rule of the Civil Service Commission——

Mr. BROWN. I do not care about any rules of the Civil Service Commission. I am responsible for my part in the enactment of the statute. But the Senator may proceed.

Mr. HATCH. Under the identical rules of the Civil Service Commission for more than 50 years it has been announced and held that civil-service employees could make voluntary contributions. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator certainly has a different idea from mine. The Senator from Texas was discussing this subject in the cloakroom a while ago. I, as he, received several voluntary contributions from postmasters when I was a Member of the House of Representatives. I took every check and every dollar and sent it back.

Mr. HATCH. That is covered by another statute.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is specifically prohibited.

Mr. BROWN. I am not referring only to the Hatch law; I am discussing contributions made by the Pew family and contributions which could be made by Government employees.

Mr. HATCH. That still does not apply to the employee in Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I certainly disagree with the Senator's construction of his own statute when he says that a political contribution made for the purpose of promoting the interests of a political party is not participation in politics.

Mr. HATCH. That has been the ruling in this country for exactly 50 years, and has not been departed from, the language being exactly like the language in the measure before us.

Mr. BROWN. Let me put the question in a slightly different way, if the Senator insists. Is it any worse for the postmaster in Clovis, N. Mex., to make a $2 contribution to the Democratic fund than it is for the Pew family to make a $310,000 contribution to the Republican national campaign fund?

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to say to the Senator that he cannot say anything too much in condemnation of political contributions, like what he is saying now, to which I will not agree.

Mr. BROWN. Then the Senator would better agree to my amendment so that we can get it enacted into law, with the help of Senators on the other side.

Mr. HATCH. I can give the Senator greater evidence than he has as to political contributions——

Mr. BROWN. I am not nearly through with that subject. I merely yielded to an interruption.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. The colloquy between the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from New Mexico brings to light once more section 15 of the bill, which I attempted to argue in my feeble way on Tuesday of this week, with respect to the delegation of power which the legislative branch of the Government is now asked to give to the executive branch of the Government under the proposed legislation.

Under the bill, as laid down at the present time, notwithstanding what may be the rules of the Civil Service Commission at this particular moment, the Civil Service Commission is designated to define what is and what is not political activity throughout every State in the United States of America, where the class of individuals affected is designated under this particular measure. That is the very thing which I think ought to be corrected. It seems to me that it is one of the real evils of this piece of proposed legislation.

In other words, under this bill we would delegate full power and authority to the Civil Service Commission here in Washington, D. C., without laying down any rules, any standards, or any safeguards, to say what is political activity and what is not political campaign, and what is political management, and how you can interfere and how you cannot interfere in the election of a public official in my State. That is one of the main reasons why I have sought continually, in discussing this matter with Members of the Senate, to have the bill sent back to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for the purpose of having that committee lay down safeguards to protect the sacred and fundamental rights of every American citizen who believes in political liberty, as I do.

I wish to say to the Senate that I feel deeply about this matter. If it were not for the type and form of government under which I live at the present time, I could not occupy a seat in the United States Senate as I do, because of my early surroundings and the hardships I had to endure. Had I been living under some government in existence at the present time, had I been under some dictatorship or military despot, of which the world is full at this very moment, I perhaps would be reading at night with the curtains closed. Perhaps I would be out on some highway, or in some concentration camp, or in some other place that is unknown to the American citizen.

I say that this particular measure strikes at the very foundation and life of that political liberty. If we are to permit the Civil Service Commission, or any other bureaucratic board here in Washington, D. C., to define the political activities of every individual in the United States who is affected by the bill, I say that we are going a long way, we are striking at the very root, at the very heart of democratic government in this country; and I cannot imagine the Senate doing it. I do not believe yet that the Senate will do it. I believe that the Senate will yet find some way to lay down proper safeguards, to tell the Civil Service Commission what they should do in connection with defining political liberty instead of leaving it to this board.

Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me further, we are presumed to be the best political experts in the world. All our lives we have been schooled in politics. Here we are, trained in the science and art of government, Senators of the United States, who are presumed to know something about political management and political campaigns, the one thing in which we are experts, if we are expert in anything. True it is that we delegate power, under proper safeguards, to different bureaus here which have certain peculiar technical knowledge, and we ask them to make definitions, but we are asked to "pass the buck" under the pending bill. We have not the courage to send it back to the committee to study this thing from the angle to which I have been referring. We are asked to leave it to the Civil Service Commission to say just what is political liberty and what is not political liberty in this country.

Mr. President, to me it is a serious situation. Our liberty is a sacred thing, and this measure flies right in the face of the liberty that has been ours for 150 years.

Ours is a great country, and I was about to say that every move, at least a great many moves we have made since I have been a Member of this body, have been always toward more and more concentration of Government here in Washington, D. C. The Senator from Connecticut stated yesterday that he is not so disturbed because of what the people may be thinking about the Hatch Act, as the Senator who now occupies the chair [Mr. CHANDLER in the chair] says he is. The people are thinking about that act and many other things, but the Senator from Connecticut placed his finger on the real key to the situation; that is, the continued centralization of power in Washingon, D. C., gradually sweeping away the rights of the people in my State, and in every other State of the Union.

That is the serious thing, and I undertake to say that under this bill the Civil Service Commission would have the complete power and authority, as the Senator from Michigan has suggested, if a political worker—the $2 man, who seems to be the fellow we want to hit all the time—makes a contribution, to include such a contribution in its definition of what is political activity.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Illinois, and if I have done nothing else this afternoon than to provoke that splendid speech, I feel I have performed a real service for the Senate.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BROWN. I shall take a moment before I yield to the Senator from Indiana, and then I will yield to him.

Mr. President, I wish to say that, so far as the State of Michigan is concerned, the responsibility for writing a statute which clearly defines what "political activity" is, rests upon me and my colleagues in the Congress. It rests upon the Congress of the United States, and it should not be delegated to a civil service commission, which can change its rules from day to day without any let or say on the part of the Congress of the United States. Section 15 is an unlawful delegation of authority. And why is it delegated? It is delegated because the Senator from New Mexico and the other members of this committee have found the task of defining the term "political activity" to be too great for them, and they want to pass it on to the Civil Service Commission. It may be that they think they cannot pass this measure if they clearly define what political activity is.

Let me give the Senate a practical example. Suppose that legislative employees were under the prohibition of this act just as the executive employees are. Let us take the example of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who is now present in the Chamber. He is actively and openly a candidate for President of the United States. Someone said the other night that he went down to the railroad station and said, "I want a ticket," and the ticket agent said, "Where to?" He said, "Oh, anywhere. I have got business all over." [Laughter.]

If the Senator's clerk is engaged at the present time, long before a political convention is held, in making dates for the Senator, in answering queries as to when the Senator can go to Delaware, Ohio, or Detroit, Mich., or Augusta, Maine, in order to make a political speech in behalf of his candidacy for the Presidency of the United States, or, to speak more properly, in the interest of his nomination for the Presidency of the United States on the Republican ticket, is the Senator's clerk engaged in political activity or is he not?

If we apply that to the candidate of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] on my left, who is an officer in the executive department, and if his clerk is making dates for the appearance of Governor McNutt in various parts of the country, is that clerk engaged in political activity? When does political activity start?

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] referred to the fact that Mr. Rogge, the Assistant Attorney General, who has been in Louisiana and has been prominently mentioned by the newspapers of Louisiana since his success there in defeating, apparently, the then existing Democratic organization, is giving out statements probably laudatory of himself, and his associates are doing the same thing, and it is said by them that he should be the next nominee of the Democratic Party for the Presidency of the United States. In furthering that idea, is he, under the terms of this bill, engaged in a political activity in his own behalf?

I fully agree with the Senator from Illinois. There is no definition in this measure of what constitutes political activity, and there should be such a definition before the bill leaves the Halls of the Congress of the United States, because we are responsible for legislation and the Civil Service Commission is not.

I am unwilling to delegate that responsibility to them, and that is just what we do in this bill.

I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to get away from this Pew family contribution.

Mr. BROWN. I still have it before me.

Mr. MINTON. We have had entirely too much attention paid to $2 men this afternoon. All during the debate we have been talking about the $2 man and the "two bit" man. I want to talk about the $300,000 family. First, I want to ask the Senator from what document he was reading the figures about the Pew family?

Mr. BROWN. I got them from the investigation of campaign expenditures in 1936, report of the special committee, which, as I recall, was headed by the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] was chairman in 1938.

Mr. BROWN. I find the committee was composed of the then Senator Lonergan, of Connecticut; Senator Minton, of Indiana; Senator Schwellenbach, of Washington; Senator Austin, of Vermont; and Senator Frazier, of North Dakota.

Mr. MINTON. What I want to direct the Senator's attention to is the present well-known activity of the Pew family in Pennsylvania, and their large contribution in the last campaign to the Republican campaign fund. At that time, in 1938, the Democrats were in power in Pennsylvania, and were in power in the Nation, and all those condemned by the Hatch Act—the pernicious politicians; the pernicious people who are politically active and who hold political jobs—were all under the influence of this Democratic machine in the State and in the Nation. Notwithstanding that fact, the Pew machine beat them. I wish to ask the Senator from Michigan if he does not think they did it with money?

Mr. BROWN. They certainly did. They had plenty of it and they seemed to be very generous with it.

Mr. MINTON. Should we not give some consideration on the floor of the Senate to the real corruption in this country, represented by "boodle boys," such as Mr. Pew and Ernest Weir, and men of that kind, instead of talking about the "two bit" fellows and $2 men?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, is it the Senator's theory that the Republicans on the other side of the Chamber believe that if they can get the $300,000 contributors they will not need the $2 contributors?

Mr. BROWN. I think so.

Mr. MINTON. Oh, yes; with such contributions they would have the Democrats out, and they would be in power in November.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. GUFFEY. Does that report contain the contributions made by the royal family of Delaware, the Du Ponts?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. GUFFEY. Their contributions are in much larger amount, and I should like to have them read into the RECORD.

Mr. HATCH. A little more than $600,000.

Mr. GUFFEY. Yes; more than $600,000.

Mr. BROWN. I will read them in a little more detail.

Mr. GUFFEY. I should like to have the Senator read those contributions.

Mr. BROWN. I am informed by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] that the total contributions were $600,000. Felix A. Du Pont, Wilmington, $134,500.

Mr. HATCH. It has been some months since I checked the names of those in the Du Pont family who contributed—I do not know who they are—but I took the name "Du Pont," and found that the total sum contributed by them was a little over $600,000, as I recall.

Mr. BROWN. I will read it in detail.

Felix A. Du Pont, Wilmington, $134,500.
A. M. L. Du Pont, of Wilmington, Del., $3,000.
Mrs. C. DuPont, of Wilmington, Del., $5,250.
Archibald Du Pont, of Wilmington, Del., $1,000.
Eugene Du Pont, $3,000.
Henry B. Du Pont, $25,000.
Irénée Du Pont, $121,230.
Mrs. I. Du Pont, $5,000.
Lammot Du Pont, $183,500.
Pierre S. Du Pont, $111,980.
S. Hallack Du Pont, $5,500.
William Du Pont, Jr., $21,000.

Their contributions, of course, were made to the Republican Party.

Mr. GUFFEY. Has the Senator any record of a contribution from Governor Buck, of Delaware? He married a Du Pont. We might as well get that connection, so as to see what the whole family contributed.

Mr. BROWN. I do not find Governor Buck's name in the list.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I have roughly calculated the small change put into the Republican campaign fund by the Du Ponts, and counting merely the larger figures I find that the Senator from New Mexico is quite right. The amount was $617,000,000, without counting the small change. [Laughter.] Mr. President, I mean $617,000.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, without giving any more figures, and merely selecting names at random from the more prominent of what may be called the "60 Families," which I think was the title of a book that has been the subject of discussion here, we find J. P. Morgan contributed $55,000, with several contributions from other members of the family. The Armours, of Chicago, contributed. And I notice a very distinguished citizen of the city of Washington—at least his business is here in the city of Washington—Mr. Auchincloss, $24,000.

Jules S. Bache, $7,800.

Now I come to a name with which we are all familiar, which has a particular reference to this controversy, because everyone knows that the two big banks of the city of New York are intimately connected with the Cuban sugar industry; that they are the beneficiaries of the quota law and the import restrictions that are placed upon the importation of sugar from the East Indies, from the Virgin Islands, from Peru, from Brazil, and are even responsible for the limitations that are placed upon our own production in Louisiana, in Florida, in Colorado, in Michigan, in Ohio, and throughout the country.

Mr. George F. Baker, president of the First National Bank of the City of New York, contributed $61,000 to the Republican national campaign fund.

Are we to prevent the little fellow in the Department of Agriculture, who perhaps owes his job to the fact that he wants to give his services to the Government of the United States, from enjoying a similar privilege? The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], I think because of intense application to this problem, seems to assume that every man who is connected with the Government of the United States is so connected because of political patronage because he could not get a job anywhere else.

There are thousands of employees in the Government service who are giving their services to the Government of the United States because they would rather give them to the United States than to a private corporation at a sacrifice.

The Senator knows that many men came down from the city of New York who had jobs or who were partners in legal firms in which they were obtaining incomes far above any income that could be paid by the United States, and gave their services to the Government of the United States at what to them is a paltry sum of money.

The Senator seems to think that because a man takes a Government job there is something about it that should prevent him, no matter how honest his connection with the Government may be, no matter how earnest he may be in his desire to help the political party in whose principles he believes, from contributing a cent; but that the heads of great banks in the city of New York, who are largely interested, through their stockholders, in the sugar industry in the island of Cuba, should be permitted as individuals to make tremendous contributions to the Republican or Democratic campaign funds.

Mr. President, I cannot see the justice in the situation when we put one alongside the other, and I see no sense whatever in dividing the question. We should legislate upon the whole problem of political activity at one time.

Why do I say that? I am now talking particularly to the lawyers in the Senate. The reason why the Senator from New Mexico prohibits contributions on the part of employees of the Federal Government, or on the part of employees of the State governments whose salaries are in some manner contributed to by Federal funds, is because they receive a benefit from the Government of the United States, because they receive their pay from the United States, because they gain financially by reason of their connection with the United States, or—and there is one other possible basis—because their desire to hold their jobs will cause them to work for the party which has put them in office, and because they are subject to undue influence or coercion on the part of their superiors.

Let us apply the same test to the National City Bank or the First National Bank, or their large stockholders. Why do they make contributions to the Republican national campaign fund? It is because they, like the $2 clerk, receive a benefit by reason of certain excise taxes or import quotas, established by what? By the laws of the United States. Are they interested in such matters? Have we ever had a hearing on tariffs before the Finance Committee of the Senate in which we have not had representatives of big business protesting against a cut in the tariffs, or demanding an increase in the rates? I have never seen a hearing of the Finance Committee at which some gentlemen representing big business were not present. We have heard from dozens of them in the past 2 weeks on the question which will be before the Senate next week—the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

Fundamentally, the $2 clerk is interested in keeping the political party in power because it has given him a job. Fundamentally, J. P. Morgan, George F. Baker, and the Pew family are interested either in keeping a favorable political party in power or in ejecting from power a political party which is unfavorable to their tariff and tax policies.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator concede that the bill establishes a new principle so far as Government employees are concerned?

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I have consistently supported the original Hatch Act. Twice, against importunities from many of my colleagues, I have supported the present law by voting against the Miller amendment and by voting against the Adams amendment. It may have gone a little too far, but I believe that since we passed that law, it ought not to be repealed. I think that to do so would be a bad thing politically. Its enactment was a step in the right direction.

Mr. WALSH. I am in accord with that view.

Mr. BROWN. However, in the new bill we are doing an entirely different thing. We are attempting to extend the Federal power to officers and employees who are primarily State employees.

I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I am not a new 1932 Democrat. I have been a Democrat ever since I was able to think. I was first elected to office on the Democratic ticket in 1914, when I was 25 years old. I believe that we ought to preserve States' rights, and I am fundamentally opposed to an extension of the Hatch Act which would infringe on States' rights. In my judgment, although I do not believe it is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States so far as its language is concerned, it is certainly contrary to the spirit of the Constitution. My objection, therefore, is to the new Hatch bill and not to the old Hatch Act.

Mr. WALSH. I am pleased to have the Senator's distinction, because I thought he was critical of the whole fundamental policy.

Mr. BROWN. No.

Mr. WALSH. I invite attention to the fact that for years the principle of the bill has been applicable to postal employees. By regulations of the Post Office Department, postal employees are forbidden to participate in political campaigns.

Mr. BROWN. Let me say to the Senator in that connection that all such employees are entitled to the benefits of the civil-service rules. They are entitled to a reasonable permanency of employment. On the other hand, the Government of the United States can give no permanency of employment to those whom we now seek to reach, because they are hired by State officers and not by Federal officers, and we cannot legislate to make the State employ a certain individual.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator makes a distinction which is a proper one and which should be given very careful consideration.

I wish also to call attention to the fact that I remember very distinctly that when the Democrats came into power in 1932 a number of men seeking post offices under the Democratic administration in my State—and very properly—made complaints that certain postmasters had shown pernicious political activity, and asked that their 4-year term of office be canceled. My State was honeycombed from one end to the other by Democrats seeking post offices; but because of the administration of the Post Office regulations, and not because there was any virtue in the individuals, I think in only two instances was the slightest evidence available that Republican postmasters had been guilty of participation in politics. I think in only two instances was a successful case made.

So I think the Senator and I are in agreement that insofar as Federal officials are concerned, especially civil-service officials, they have the right to tenure of office and to retirement benefits, and that so far as we can protect them against political pressure to contribute to political campaign funds or to render political services we ought to do so.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

I agree with what the Senator from Massachusetts says in that respect. In that connection let me say I favor the general purpose and policy of the Hatch law, and I am also in agreement with section 2 of the pending bill, which prevents the use of official authority to interfere with an election. I have no objection to—in fact, I am in favor of—section 2 as designated in the pending bill.

I now yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] a moment ago, the Senator from Michigan indicated that he saw in this bill nothing which he thought was unconstitutional.

Mr. BROWN. I may say I was not referring to section 15.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that section is clearly unconstitutional.

Mr. BROWN. As I said earlier in my argument, I believe section 15 is an unwarranted and unconstitutional delegation of legislative authority. Absolutely no standards are set up, no limitations are fixed, in section 15. I believe in any event it should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. President, I was just making the point that the basis—the legal basis and the moral basis, if I may call it such—of the prohibitions proposed in this bill is that these employees are in some manner beneficiaries of the Federal Government. Therefore I think it is perfectly logical to attempt to cover all of the other persons who are in the same class—beneficiaries of the Federal Government. Why?

Let us assume that somebody in the Department of the Interior is desirous of transferring the Bureau of Forestry to that Department and taking it away from the Department of Agriculture; and suppose that some employee of one of those departments comes up here and urges upon a subcommittee or a committee of the Senate that particular action. Of course, he is engaged in political activity of a certain kind. He is interested in keeping his job in the Department of Agriculture or in the Department of the Interior, as the case may be.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to supplement a question I asked the Senator. The same rule about the National Guard would apply to the Reserve officers, would it not?

Mr. BROWN. I presume so.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that under this bill no member of the National Guard or officer of the Reserve Corps could run for a county office without getting out of the National Guard or Reserve Corps?

Mr. BROWN. I am sure the Senator could answer that question better than could I, because I have not a clear knowledge of just how the Reserve officers are paid.

Mr. CONNALLY. They are paid partially by the Federal Government and partially by the State.

Mr. BROWN. By whom are they appointed—the State officials?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; by the Federal Government.

Mr. BROWN. Are they State officers or Federal officers?

Mr. CONNALLY. I suppose they are Federal Government officers, for they belong to the Army of the United States.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think the present Hatch bill would affect that situation. They may be subject to the original law. I do not know.

Mr. HATCH. The Army Regulations cover that matter.

Mr. BROWN. I was giving the illustration of a departmental $2-a-month man—speaking of the contribution from his salary—coming up here and lobbying in the interest of keeping his job. That is his interest. That is one of the reasons why the Senator from New Mexico prohibits him from political activity. Likewise, we have the representative of a large corporation—let us take the United States Steel Corporation, for example—coming before the Bureau of Internal Revenue and asking that Bureau for a tax refund. The applicant may be entitled to it; he usually is; but so is the man down in the Department entitled to his job. The Department of Agriculture man will cling to the party that favors his view, and the man who applies for a tax refund will tend to favor the party that favors him when he comes before the Commission for a tax refund.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right on that point?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LUCAS. With respect to the Agricultural Department, one of the slogans of the farmers in my section of the United States is, "A tariff for all or a tariff for none." It seems to me the Senator from Michigan is striking at a vital point. In other words, if we protect those who obtain benefits from the tariff, we ought to be able to protect the man who is getting a sort of a tariff from parity payments, we will say; and if we do not protect one, we should not protect the other.

Mr. BROWN. Absolutely; and, to bring the matter right down to fundamentals, the Government clerk, if he is not under civil service, is interested in keeping in power the party that is in power and that gave him a job, and the Sun Oil Co. is interested in kicking out of power the political party that will not give it the high-excise taxes it wants to prevent the importation of foregin oil and to raise the price of domestic oil. I can apply the same principle to the tariff. I can apply it to quotas. I can apply it to R. F. C. loans. I can apply it to contractors who are doing business with the Government of the United States. I can apply it to all persons who are applying to the United States for the consideration of their claims against it.

Mr. President, I desire now to go to a more fundamental question.

As I indicated to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], I have twice voted with the author of the original Hatch Act in the matter of the two amendments which were submitted here earlier in the week. I am opposed to section 12, as proposed to be amended by the present bill, because it is an interference with the right of the State of Michigan to control its own elections, and is, therefore, an unwarranted intrusion into the rights of my own State.

Mr. President, we have pretty good election laws in the State of Michigan. I am going briefly to mention a few of their provisions.

Our statute—I am referring to section 3286 of the Compiled Laws of the State of Michigan, down to section 3320, the corrupt-practices statute—prohibits promises, offers, agreements, all forms of inducements to voters. It punishes the man who promises and the man who accepts the promise. It prohibits the solicitation of money for campaign purposes by any other than regularly constituted party officials. It prohibits threats and intimidations by persons in the position of employers, with the right to hire and fire. I think every form of political inducement, threat, and intimidation is covered by the sections mentioned and subsequent sections of the chapter.

I am of the opinion that elections in Michigan should be handled under Michigan law; and I think my State has fully covered by law every form of political wrongdoing that is set forth in the Hatch bill, with the single exception of the prohibition against all political activity. So far our State has not seen fit to deny its employees the right to speak their political convictions. I applaud that view. My State, and it alone, will determine that question.

Mr. President, I realize that in the short time I had to prepare this amendment I could not prepare an amendment that was sufficiently inclusive to cover all of the persons and the parties and the corporations which should be prohibited from political activity. Perhaps I have gone too far. But I plead now for consideration, not of one-half of the question but of the whole question involving influence in elections.

Mr. President, I say again, as I stated a while ago, that if the desire is to cover the whole situation, and to get the votes of the solid phalanx of 23 on the other side, which seems to be necessary in order to pass the bill, the Senator would better include within the covers of the bill all features of this evil that he is trying to reach.

He says to the Senate that his committee, or members of his committee, have this matter under consideration now. There will not be an election of importance, except a few primaries—and, of course, they may be of importance to certain Senators, I realize—there will be no Nation-wide election until November of 1940, which is some seven months off. The Senate is going to be in session for 2 or 3 months longer. Let us recommit the bill to the Senator's own committee; let us have the benefit of his knowledge of the law, of his searching investigation into the constitutional questions involved, of his searching into facts surrounding political corruption which he asserts has existed and which probably has existed in connection with Government employees; and let him put his fine mind, along with that of the Senator from Rhode Island, and others, to this other problem which I have mentioned today—the matter of political contributions from the "big shots" of the country—the Rockefellers, the Pews, the Morgans, the Armours, the Bakers.

Let him apply his mind to that problem and bring in a bill covering the entire situation, and I assure him that if it does not unduly interfere with States' rights, if it does not unduly restrict the political liberty of our citizens, he will find me standing just where I was yesterday—with him in his fight to wipe out political corruption. But, much as I desire to go along with him, I cannot go further in the present hour until he covers the entire field of political corruption by the bill which he proposes as an amendment to the Hatch law.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I shall take only a moment. There is one special thing which I wish to mention in reply to what has been said on the floor of the Senate in the last few minutes. I refer to the criticism which has been heaped on the members of the minority party, who sit on the other side of the Chamber.

It has been repeatedly stated that the Hatch law could not have been passed if it had not been for the solid support of the Republican Members of the Senate. From a consideration of the votes which were cast, that is quite correct; but I want Senators on the other side of the Chamber to know that there is at least one Democrat on this side of the Chamber who respects a vote cast for what the Senator voting believes is for good government in this country, whether the vote comes from a Republican or from a Democrat. I am one of those who believe that when a man enters the Senate of the United States, takes his seat as a Senator in this body, and votes, he votes not as a Democrat or as a Republican, but as a Senator of the United States.

In this connection I wish to say that I have never gone to a single Member of this body about this bill. The Senator from Michigan stated he had been importuned to vote for the Miller amendment; and I am quite sure he is correct. Other Senators have been importuned to vote for amendments which are inimical to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield at that point, I say frankly that I was importuned, but I do not think there is anything about that which the Senator should condemn. I have frequently importuned Senators to vote one way or the other, and, as the Senator knows, it is commonly done on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. It is commonly done, and I am not condemning it; I am stating the fact. I am stating my attitude on this bill, and it has simply been that I have wanted individual Senators to vote, whether they be Democratic or Republican, just the way they believe to be best for the Nation. That is all I ask of any Senator.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I am sure the Senator from New Mexico does not feel, for a moment, that anyone has been coercing votes on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. Do not pursue that too far, Senator.

Mr. MINTON. I wish, frankly, to inquire of the Senator as to whether he thinks that has been done.

Mr. HATCH. I heard the speech of the majority floor leader in this body yesterday, as the Senator did, and I resented what was said or the implication. I do not want to go over that.

Mr. MINTON. I am asking the Senator about coercion. He can say whatever he desires to say. I am asking him who on the floor of the Senate has been coerced.

Mr. HATCH. There has been plenty of talk and plenty of conversation.

Mr. MINTON. I am asking the Senator in all good faith who here has been oppressed in his vote, or who here has been coerced, who has been threatened, and by whom.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I shall continue my remarks as I originally planned, saying that I only want Senators to vote just as they please; and whether they be Republicans or whether they be Democrats, I am glad to have their votes when they vote the way I do; but if they see a matter the other way, I consider it their duty to vote that way, and there has never been one word of criticism from me against any Senator, no matter how he has voted.

I take it as unkind, Mr. President, for a Senator to rise on the floor of the Senate and condemn the entire Republican minority because they voted for the bill.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator yield there, if he will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to have the Senator point out where, in my remarks, I condemned the entire Republican minority. I voted against the same amendments they did. In this situation the Republicans have voted as one man, with one or two exceptions, and I think those exceptions have now been eliminated——

Mr. HATCH. I hope so.

Mr. BROWN. As a solid phalanx of 22 or 23; I do not know how many there are over there. [Laughter.] The only statement I made was that they did vote as a solid unit upon this proposition, and the Senator from New Mexico is far too experienced in politics not to know that there has been some discussion among the Republicans on the other side which has resulted in a unanimity of front upon this proposition. That kind of a situation, as the Senator knows, has not existed on the Democratic side.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I quite agree that there has been no discussion which has presented unanimous action from this side of the Chamber. I do not agree that there has been no discussion on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. BROWN. I did not say that.

Mr. HATCH. I think plenty of efforts have been made to have a unanimous front on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. BROWN. Does not the Senator commend that? Is there anything wrong about Senators trying to get together?

Mr. HATCH. Oh, no; but I say the Senator was condemning those on the other side of the Chamber——

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. I am not yielding now. I am saying that what is wrong on the Republican side is wrong on the Democratic side.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Republicans have a perfect right——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield further to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Republicans have a perfect right to get together, to marshal their forces, and get all 23 of them on the same side. I do not condemn them for it. I think they have done a better job than we have in the matter.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator condemns the bill because among other things it is an invasion of State rights, and is an invasion of the rights of individuals. Yet the Senator from Michigan offers as an amendment—and I am sure he offers it in good faith, and wants it to become the law of the land, or he would not have offered it as an amendment and sought to have it enacted into law—this provision:

> And no person who is a stockholder or officer of a corporation benefited in any manner shall take any part in political activities or in political campaigns.

The Senator would go down into the most remote place in Michigan, South Carolina, or New Mexico and would deny the little country school teacher—and there has been reference to school teachers here today, and they have been paraded around—who, out of the savings of years, perhaps has amassed a hundred dollars' worth of stock in some corporation, the right to engage in political activity.

Yet, Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan, is against the invasion of State rights.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator need not worry about the teachers. He has already denied them their political right. Let me suggest that his bill and my amendment would get the poor teachers from both angles.

Mr. HATCH. I am arguing the question of good faith, Mr. President.

Mr. BROWN. I want to say to the Senator from New Mexico that I do not think I can draw, in the space of time——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wish to withdraw those words "good faith." I do not challenge anyone's good faith.

Mr. BROWN. Very well.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, some Senators would gladly support this bill if it were a comprehensive, sweeping measure that covered every sin known to man. Yes; then it would be a great bill. And it would have a wonderful chance for passage, would it not?

Senators have complained because I have not given attention to the subject of campaign contributions. For a week this bill has been debated on the floor of the Senate. It was introduced in the early part of January this year. It was considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Any Senator could have come before the committee and presented any idea or suggestion he had. The news of the contents and purposes of the bill was carried in the newspapers of the city of Washington. Not only this year, but last summer, when the original law was passed, I openly declared that a bill such as the one now pending would be introduced, and the President of the United States—your President, if you please—in his message approved that other bill, but pointed out this very thing, and said, in substance, that it has not been quite fair to tie the hands of Federal officials, and recommended that officials who were paid from Federal funds be included.

Everyone knew that the measure was coming up. We worked on it in the committee and gave it such attention as we could. We reported the best bill of which we were capable, without the help of any of today's critics, who have condemned the measure and found fault with it and offered amendments right and left, some for the purpose of destroying it. No suggestion was ever made that in framing the bill we should consider the question of large campaign contributions. Along that line we had only the efforts of the Senator from Rhode Island. The very committee report from which Senators have read here today, at this late hour, when we have debated this measure for a week without the subject of contributions having been brought up—the very report from which the Senator reads has been 4 years in the Senate of the United States, and not one hand that I know of has been raised to write into law any provision correcting that evil. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] was a member of the committee that submitted that report and made recommendations in it.

But some of us were not always asleep with respect to this subject of campaign contributions. Some of us were thinking about that years ago. Some of us were thinking about it before the last campaign.

Mr. MINTON. What did you do?

Mr. HATCH. I will show the Senator in just a moment what we did. Even before the election of 1936, when relief funds were being paid out in huge sums to contractors and persons who might control elections were receiving benefits, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and myself introduced a bill in the Senate of the United States covering this very subject.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to say to the Senator that he was not very successful in his efforts to prevent Joe Pew and his family from contributing $315,000 in the subsequent campaign.

Mr. HATCH. No; we were not even able to get that bill out of the committee to which it was referred. It was introduced by us on the 15th day of April, 1935, and provided that—

> No person, firm, or corporation entering into any contract with the United States, or any department or agency thereof, or performing any work or services for the United States or any department or agency thereof, or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency—
> And so forth, prohibiting many things—
> shall during the period of negotiation for, or performance or furnishing of, such contract, work, services, material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly, make any contribution of money or any other thing of value, or promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office, or to any person for any political purpose, or use. * * *

Mr. BROWN. I am glad to have the Senator bring up that proposition, and I call attention to what I said in the main body of my speech, that the Senator has a peculiar knowledge of these matters; he is an authority on the question; and when he is proposing legislation on the subject of political corruption in connection with campaign contributions and political activity, since he had all this knowledge at the time he first introduced the measure, I do not see why he did not take that same general idea and include it within the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that in my opening remarks in the debate on the pending bill I said I did not think the Congress of the United States had anywhere near exercised the power that vests in it to prevent corruption; that I was working on a bill which would go further than the pending bill goes; and I hoped to have it passed.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I will yield in a moment. But the hope of something in the future shall not restrain or keep me from doing what I can today, be it big or little.

Mr. BROWN. My plea to the Senator is, Let us do the whole job at one time, and put the issue of the little fellow and the big fellow before the Senate in the same bill.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator had stood on the floor of the Senate as I have done, begging Senators to vote for even a simple amendment to keep relief out of politics, and had seen it voted down; if he had stood here, as I have stood, and pleaded with the Senate of the United States to enact legislation that would keep employees from going as delegates to conventions, and had seen that voted down; then when there was finally passed the legislation which was enacted at the last session, if he had remembered the fight that was made on it in the House of Representatives and the difficulty encountered on the floor of the Senate, and if he had gone through what we have gone through this week with this bill, the Senator would not, I think, take the position he has taken here.

Mr. BROWN. I entirely disagree with the Senator. I think he has concentrated so much on the fly specks in this situation that he has forgotten all about the great big violators. I realize the Senator has worked hard. I realize that he may be impatient because this bill has run a longer course in the Senate than he thought it would. But I am just as sincere in my desire to protect the rights of the legislature of my State, of the people of my State, to make and enforce their own laws respecting their own elections, as is the Senator in his endeavor to bring about what I consider to be an unfair and unjust imposition of the Federal power upon the States. I am just as anxious to purify the election laws as is the Senator from New Mexico; but I say to the Senator, if the small contributions which Government employees have made amount to something, that the contributions that I have read to the Senator this afternoon and the practice which has existed for over 50 years in this country of obtaining contributions from wealthy men to support the party which has ever represented the views of wealthy men, constitute a problem so much greater than that to which the Senator is devoting himself, that I see no comparison between them.

I ask only that he bring in both questions at the same time, so that the entire picture may be before the American people, and we shall not legislate only against the $2 man and leave out the half-million-dollar man who is a seeker of Government favor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have long since learned to do what I can when I can. I wish to say to the Senator from Michigan that everything he has said about large contributions and corruption is absolutely true. It is just as rotten, wrong, and contemptible as it can be to use funds to control elections. I will join the Senator from Michigan or any other Senator and help to sponsor and work for adequate legislation to strike at that evil; but I will not give up the progress we have made thus far and go back and start out on an altogether different road.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator again, as I have said before, that he will not get 23 votes in a solid phalanx from the Republican side on any bill such as I have outlined.

Mr. HATCH. I may not receive 23 votes, but I am counting on votes from the Republican side as well as from the Democratic side. I am sure we shall have votes from both sides.

Mr. BROWN. There is no doubt about the Senator getting votes from the Democratic side.

Mr. REYNOLDS and Mr. CLARK of Missouri addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. HATCH. I yield first to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I wish to make an observation, with the permission of the author of the bill. The Senator from Michigan seems to object because the bill does not cover enough. Perhaps it does not, but why not take what we can now and obtain a little more later?

Mr. BROWN. Because we shall not obtain anything more if we do not do so now.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I do not see why. Later we may have more Republicans in the Senate than we now have. [Laughter.] Therefore it follows from the argument of the Senator that if the Republicans vote for the bill in the next term his proposal will receive more Republican votes.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the Senator entirely misses my point. I say that the Republicans will not vote in a solid phalanx for a bill which will deny Mr. Pew, Mr. Morgan, and Mr. Rockefeller the opportunity to make large contributions to the Republican national campaign fund.

Mr. REYNOLDS. If it would deny Mr. Pew the opportunity to make a $300,000 contribution, it would deny Mr. John L. Lewis the opportunity to make a $500,000 contribution. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I promised to yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Michigan said we would be certain of getting votes on this side for the bill which he suggests, which would bar Mr. Pew. If some of the recalcitrants who have been obstructing the bill should vote for the bill which he suggests, we should not need votes on the Republican side.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to answer the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HATCH. No; the Senator from Wyoming is asking for recognition.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is anxious to try to facilitate debate among Senators. Senators know the rules. They should address the Chair.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I merely wish to make an observation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Wyoming permit the Chair to say a word? The Chair wishes to facilitate the debate. The only purpose of having a Presiding Officer is to try to keep the debate in order. If Senators will address the Chair, he will try to recognize them as soon as he can. With so many Senators talking at the same time, the Chair does not know just how to preside over that sort of meeting.

Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from New Mexico yields to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I appreciate the efforts of the Chair to save time. I merely wish to make one observation about the $500,000 said to have been contributed by Mr. Lewis. It did not come from Mr. Lewis. It came from $2 contributions from laboring men all over the United States, who contributed for that purpose.

Mr. MINTON. And it was paid back.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to make an inquiry of the majority leader.

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Colorado for the purpose of making an inquiry of the majority leader.

Mr. ADAMS. Some of us have made engagements in the belief that the session would terminate at the regular time. The time is running on, and I was about to inquire what the program is. It seems to me there is no reason why we should continue in session longer this evening.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was waiting to see whether or not we could obtain a vote on this particular amendment at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I shall shortly conclude my remarks.

Mr. BARKLEY. If we cannot obtain a vote at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico, my purpose is to move a recess until tomorrow.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to make one further statement, Mr. President, and then I shall conclude my remarks.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not seeking to limit the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. I am not through, but I shall conclude for the present.

It was said that I have lost my patience. I have not lost my patience at any time during this debate. I am not now out of patience with any individual. The only thing I desire is to have a vote on the bill and on the various amendments—a frank, open, and honest vote—as quickly as we can obtain one, giving every Senator the right to vote as he pleases. I think the pending amendment should be defeated. I am sure it would kill the entire bill if it were adopted.

I should like to have a vote on that amendment this evening—now, if possible—and I hope the Senate will agree to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I wish to keep the record straight in one respect. The Senator from North Carolina referred to the $500,000 contribution of John L. Lewis. The Senator knows, if he will recall, that that was a loan of $500,000, which has been repaid in full or in part.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BROWN and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Donahey	La Follette	Reed
Austin	Ellender	Lee	Reynolds
Bankhead	Gerry	Lodge	Schwartz
Barbour	Gibson	Lucas	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Green	McCarran	Shipstead
Brown	Guffey	McKellar	Smith
Byrd	Gurney	McNary	Stewart
Byrnes	Hale	Mead	Taft
Capper	Harrison	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Chandler	Hatch	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Chavez	Hayden	Murray	Tydings
Clark, Idaho	Herring	Neely	Vandenberg
Clark, Mo.	Hill	Nye	Van Nuys
Connally	Holman	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Danaher	Holt	Pittman	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present.

The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] to the amendment reported by the committee. On that amendment the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, how many Senators were shown to be present?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is obvious that there are many absent Senators. I think we might suspend at this point, and let the amendment go over until tomorrow.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Kentucky why we cannot adjourn until Monday. Very few Senators will be here tomorrow. There always are very few present on Saturday.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I understand that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. BROWN. I think we ought to have a vote tonight.

Mr. BARKLEY. The yeas and nays may be ordered, but, of course, that does not obligate the Senate to vote immediately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Senator from Kentucky now is proposing that the matter go over until tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it is due to the absent Senators that the amendment go over until tomorrow. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as a substitute for that motion, I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee as a substitute for the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. McNARY. The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay."
